Junior Class Announces Slate For Annual May Festivities

by Bob Dowling

The Junior Class, rapidly completing plans for the climactic event of their college career, has announced the following dates and events as part of the official May 4 to 9 Junior Week program.

The week, beginning with Mother's Day, will formally open on Monday, May 4, with a special Mass to be held for students and their mothers in the chapel at 11:30 a.m. Following this, a 12:30 luncheon featuring selected entertainment and the Diaper Dan contest will be held in the Field House. Students and their mothers will then be free for the remainder of the afternoon until the day is closed with Benediction.

An added feature of the Mother's Day program, held for the mothers who arrive on Sunday, will be a special performance of the annual Turf and Tinsel show, which will be held in Vasey Hall on Sunday night. Tickets for the Mother's Day activities will be $9, with a $5 charge for an extra person.

Events will slow to a more normal pace with activities being limited to Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. Tuesday evening Juniors, along with the remainder of the student body will have the opportunity to attend the Sean O'Faolian Lecture.

The class smoker will be held in Dougherty Hall on Wednesday. It will feature a talk by a well-known athletic personality and films of one of the basketball team's tournament games and of the NFL championship game.

The major highlight of the week will begin with Friday night's Junior Concert, scheduled to start at 7:30 p.m. in the Field House. The show, which has been designed to appeal to a broad range of musical tastes, will feature three of the more popular groups on the current entertainment scene. The Phoenix Singers, one of the fastest rising of the new "popular folk" groups, will be contrasted with the smooth voice and artistry of Carolyn Hester, a girl whose voice has become a small sensation in the Philadelphia area. Rounding out the show will be the well established Four Freshmen.

The week will be completed with Saturday night's Junior Dinner Dance, to be held in the Sheraton Hotel in Philadelphia. The evening will include a cocktail hour beginning at 6:30 p.m., dinner at 7:30 and dancing from 9:30 to 1:30. Music will be provided by the Buddy Williams Orchestra.

Positive Nature Of Over Population Explored In Depth By Rev. McCormack

by Tom Krause

The Rev. Arthur McCormack, noted demographer and author, spoke to a fair-sized Vasey Hall audience on March 19 treating of the problem of overpopulation and how far birth control can go in solving it. Father McCormack, of the Mill Hill Missionary Fathers, is the author of World Poverty and the Christian.

"The central problem of our age," said Father, "is world poverty, complicated ,though not caused by, the problem of population pressures, of such a magnitude that they do justify the rather scary word, population explosion."

Father's main thesis seemed to be that the positive side of the situation should be stressed. The resources and technology of the space age should be utilized to overcome world poverty, instead of concentrating on a radical birth program.

But Father felt that extreme optimism or pessimism is not warranted when one "sits down like a child before the facts." By the year 2000 A.D., the world population will have grown to a figure of six and one-half billion, compared to two and one-half billion in 1950.

The real problem is that 75 per cent of the people in the world will live in "poor" countries in 1980. What is needed is "demographic and economic investment" by the wealthier countries. An expanding population is good when there is an excess of land and burgeoning industrialization; however, Father foresees danger if such a situation is allowed to run rampant.

Causes of Poverty

Father McCormack posted these four causes of world poverty: backward agriculture; low economic productivity; religious and social taboos; and outmoded, feudal social structures, such as those now existent in some Latin American countries.

The English priest alluded to a survey of British economists which proved conclusively that world hunger and poverty can be obliterated with the proper resources.

Father McCormack presented the audience with his foreboding prophecy: "If the next decade is disappointing in its expectations, it is difficult to exaggerate the danger and possible catastrophies which might arise."

In discussing the Vatican Council's effect on the overpopulation problem, he expressed hope that the ecumenical movement would result in an all-out war on poverty. We, as Christians, should have a moral feeling about our starving brothers who live in abject poverty.

Proceeding to delineate the Church's position on this problem, Father noticed a lack of understanding about the reality of economics. He said, "The Church needs to marry the moral indignation of Christians to the realities of economics."

Birth Control

Concerning birth control as an answer to the population problem, he firmly believes that we should get away from the idea that large families, as such, are a suitable way of preserving life. We should stress the education and rearing of children rather than the procreation.

In other words, the practice of birth control should be deemphasized in deference to a positive program of wiping out poverty and hunger. Apropos of the recent birth control pills, Father reported that as long as the pill does not produce the effect of direct sterilization and there is a good reason for using it, the Church recognizes the legitimacy of the pill.

WHO SAID Foreign Study is for Language Majors Only.

Of course, it's for them, too.

But it's also for undergrads in history, political science, international relations, economics, psychology, philosophy and some other fields.

We know. Over half the students in our university centers in Europe aren't language majors. They're pursuing studies in their own fields, and giving them a fresh, European dimension—without interrupting their college careers.

Foreign study may suit you, too. (It isn't for everyone.) This is the time of life when the experience of Europe can mean most. It will mean most if you use it to deepen and extend your formal studies.

You might look into it—and learn about our programs, including a new one opening next fall at the University of Madrid.

Our centers don't offer mere "civilization" courses. They aren't cozy little "ghettos" for Americans. Institute programs immerse you in a great European university as deeply as your abilities allow. (We supplement and guide your studies, as necessary, to make sure they satisfy U. S. requirements.)

FREIBURG • Regular university courses at the University of Freiburg. In the Black Forest; taught in German, with tutorials. For B-average juniors with intermediate German. Das Deutsche Jahr: $2,380.* Das Deutsche Semester: $1,605.*

Can you avoid living in "Jamsville"?

It won't be easy. By 1980 most Americans will live in 40 large metropolitan areas—each with more than a million population. To keep your community from becoming a "Jamsville" will take people with ideas – ideas that can help cities move more traffic swiftly, safely and economically.

Some of the ideas come from the men and women of General Electric who, in effect, form a "Progress Corps."

In major cities, they're helping to develop balanced transportation built around rapid rail-transit systems . . . and they're providing advanced equipment to power and control the trains. They're also developing a TV monitoring system that enables a single engineer to control miles of auto traffic . . . a jet engine that speeds commuters in a hydrofoil ship over the waves . . . and another jet engine to lift travelers over traffic via turbocopter at 150 mph.

Traffic is only one of many problems General Electric people are working on. Their numerous projects, in this country and around the world, demand a variety of talents: engineering, finance, marketing, law, physics and many others.

If you'd like to join the "Progress Corps" after graduation, talk to your placement director. He can help qualified young people begin their careers at General Electric.

NROTC Drill Team Competes For National Team Trophy

On April 10, in the National Armory in Washington, D. C., the National Drill Team Championships will be decided.

Marching in competition which begins at 8 a.m. Friday morning will be 54 of the nation's top drill units representing the Army, Air Force, Navy, and Sponser Corps ROTC Units from colleges and universities across the nation.

Representing Villanova University will be the precision first team of Whiskey Company under the leadership of Midshipman Lieutenant John J. Nelson.

Newcomer Duke

Though always placing high in the standings, the NROTC Drill Unit has always enjoyed the distinction of being the only Navy team represented. However, this year Duke University joins the ranks. It is a certainty that there will be an unofficial contest between these two units.

In preparation for this competition, the members of Whiskey Company can be found any morning between 7 a.m. and 8 a.m. on Mendal Field. Here the drill team routine is brought to perfection under the watchful eyes of Major Richard L. Anderton, USMC, and Sargeant Migliacci, USMC, the team moderators.

Guidon Routine

This year's drill routine will feature, it is hoped, a complementary guidon routine which is being practiced by the Drill Team Executive Officer Frank M. Dirren and the Battalion Commander James K. Croney.

The weekend in Washington will be culminated by the famed and pagent-filled Cherry Blossom Parade on Saturday morning. This parade will feature bands, floats and marching units from every state in the Union.

Sullivan Lecture

from Central Germany to China. Included in this Empire are over ninety communist parties (legal and illegal), seventy-three of which are in non-communist nations.

Same Objectives

These conspiratorial combat parties all have the same objectives. They are to propagandize and to confuse, weaken, and divide noncommunist opposition; to infiltrate positions of power and influence; to use these positions to subvert and destroy free noncommunist social institutions; and to seize total state power by any means effective to be followed by the establishment of the dictatorship of the Communist Party in the name of the proletariat.

The parties are supported by communist front organizations in almost every nation. These are diverse in scope and in their immediate goals. They are local, regional, national, and international in structure.

The Communist Party in the United States is an integral branch of this Communist Empire. Its only purpose is to "serve the Empire in every way possible."

Loyalty

It owes its loyalty and resources only to the Empire and not to the United States. "This arm of international communism functioning within our nation is openly committed to the abolition of our free and pluralistic democratic social order."

Sullivan continued and declared that the FBI considers this "mortal struggle between monolithic communism and pluralistic democracy as primarily a matter of truth as opposed to error.

In view of this, it is obvious that our schools, colleges, and universities must come to occupy an increasingly vital role in this ideological conflict now around us. It is this role which can be the decisive one.

He continued saying that we must take a positive approach to this problem. It may be the time has arrived in the United States for a "strong, irresistable upsurge of original thinking and intellectual pioneering."

It is this positive approach to overcoming communism which must gain ascendancy in our Nation.

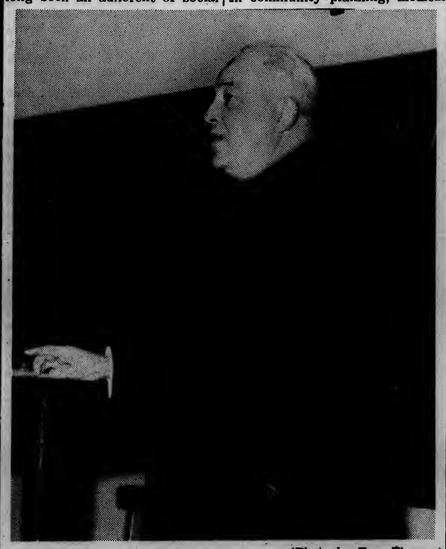
'Opportunities In Social Service' Is Topic Of Sociology Club Address

Monsignor Thomas J. Rilley spoke to the Villanova Sociology Club at their meeting Thursday April 2 on "Career Opportunities in Social Service."

Monsignor Rilley is the Supervisor of the Catholic Charities of Philadelphia. He gave a brief summary of the Church's role in social work and then went on to list the opportunities and problems faced in social service.



He said that the Church has long been an adherent of social aid to the poor and sick, and with the expanded programs of local, state, and federal governments the Church has felt a greater need for Catholic action.

He said that with the advent of Pres. Johnson's War on Poverty, a new image has been created concerning the importance of social work in our modern day society.

Social service has the greatest need and number of openings in community planning, medical social work, psychiatric case work, and family counseling services. Community planning's need is primarily for people affected by community plans to adjust to their new environments.

Also urgently being saught in this area, are people to help individuals in prisons, and houses of correction, and those on parole to reorient themselves in society.

Those entering medical social work, would be concerned with enjoining those needing care, to use their savings, before resorting to public welfare aid. Individuals, seeking psychiatric case work would be helping those capable of being helped, not those completely incapacitated. The family counseling service employs a new method of working with the whole family!

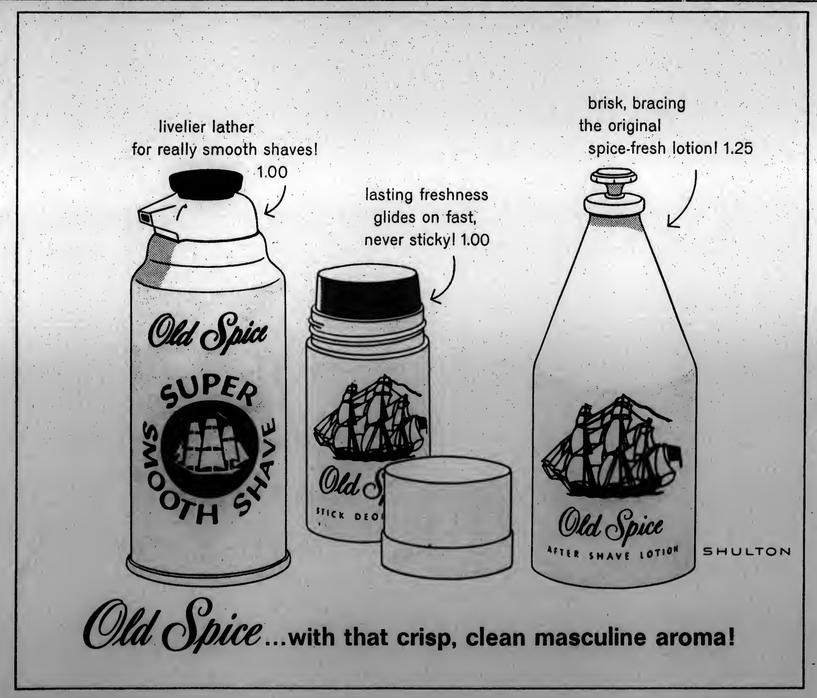
Grad Theatre Department Receives Shubert Fellowship

Villanova University has been selected as one of thirteen universities in the country to receive a newly established Sam Shubert Foundation Fellowship for playwrighting, Richard Duprey, Chairman of Villanova's Graduate Theatre Department, announced.

Notification of Villanova's selection was made by Lawerence Shubert Lawerence Jr., Chief Executive of the Sam S. Shubert Foundation in New York. Lawerence is also head of the theatrical organization which owns 17 Broadway playhouses.

Others

Fellowships up to $3,000 will go to the thirteen institutions for the academic year beginning in the Fall (September 1964). Others to receive grants were Yale, Carnegie Tech, Northwestern, Michigan, Minnesota, Iowa, Catholic University, North Carolina, Pittsburgh, Washington, Illinois and the University of California.



Mr. Shubert said that the "sole interest of the foundation is to help young people in the early difficulty days of what we earnestly hope will be their profession."

Sam Shubert Fellowship

The foundation will have no choice in the selection of the fellowship. Each institution will make its own. Duprey said Villanova hopes to make its selection soon and applications will be accepted immediately. Villanova has two requirements: the person must be accepted to do graduate work in theatre at Villanova, and the candidate must have done suitable written work, although it does not necessarily have to be plays.

During his internship the student will write one play which will be produced in the Playbox. Villanova has been using a new script policy in the Theatre Department by producing plays written by amateur playwrights.

The Playbox, a small experimental theater which seats 64 people was designed by Duprey and has been called an "innovation in college theatre."

Bill Wright Of WIBG To Give WWVU Lecture

Bill Wright, popular air personality at Philadelphia's WIBG will speak on Tuesday evening, April 14, at 7 p.m. at the studios of WWVU.

His topic will be "Sales and Career in Radio." Wright was formerly National Sales Director for the Storer Broadcasting Company.

WWVU Plans Large Coverage Of Upcoming Class Elections

WWVU radio has announced preliminary plans for extensive coverage of this year's class elections.

The radio station is currently meeting with Student Council Elections Committee Chairmen Rich Connors and Frank McBrearty in an effort to finalize plans for bringing Villanovans the fastest election coverage possible.

In making the announcement, Bill McCloskey, WWVU campus news director, asked all activities to report the results of their elections to the radio station — extension 260 — immediately for air use.

WWVU radio has also announced plans to broadcast the important portions of all Student Council meetings.

The decision was brought on by the favorable comment, especially from the administration, following the broadcast of the Student Council Day Congress meeting.

McCloskey commented that only the important motions will be covered by live broadcast, but a complete summary of the proceedings will follow each meeting. Pete Mangan, WWVU Student Council representative, interprets the meeting for listeners. McCloskey moderates the broadcast.

Lit. Society Elections Slated For Tomorrow

Elections of the three Literary Society officers for 1964-65 will be held during the activities period in 207 Vasey. The Student Council representative, announced President Frank Quattrone, will be selected by the incumbent officers after the election.

While the ballots are being counted, Matt Roche will moderate a discussion on John Steinbeck's The Grapes of Wrath. Following his talk, he will open the floor to questions.

Winner of the Literary Society award for the best work published in the Fall (1963) edition of the Lynx will be announced at this meeting.

Fall Semester Features New Major In Geography

The university has announced that a major in Geography will be made available to undergraduate students beginning with the fall semester.

The Geography Department has been in existence here since the post-war years. Its chairman is Cyrus J. Sharer Ph.D.

Dr. Sharer has announced that the Physical Geography course will be replaced as a prerequisite for undergraduates in the Social Sciences division of Liberal Arts. Students will now be required to take a world regional course entitled "Introduction to Geography." The Physical Geography course will be offered on an elective basis.

Dr. Sharer is currently the only member of the department. But he has kiddingly said that his staff will be "increased one hundred per-cent" next year. Joining him in the fall will be Mr. William Herron, who now teaches Economic Geography in the Commerce and Finance school.

A course in Urban Geography is scheduled to be offered in the fall in conjunction with the Master's program for Civil Engineers. The course will concern itself with transportation, growth, and development in large cities.

Several undergraduate courses in addition to those required are on the planning sheet for 1964-65. One of them will be in Cartography, emphasizing map reading and interpretation.

SPORTS ROUNDUP

The gunners, a team comprised of Juniors, have won the Intramural Basketball Championship. They defeated the Rejects, a Freshmen team, by the score of 59-49.

The winners were captained by Bob Delfoe and the losers by Steve Carney.

With the change of weather, the Intramural Department begins its Spring Program. This includes softball, track, tennis, golf, horse shoes, and volley ball. Special events include: Senior Red Cross Life Saving, a Water Safety Instructors Course, and Junior-Senior Athletic Day.

Senior Red Cross Life Saving is being given daily at the pool this week. An Instructors Course will be given following the Senior Course.

Six softball leagues began operation on March 24. There are 55 teams entered and the games will be played on Austin, Mendel, and Sullivan Fields.

Volley ball leagues begin April 6 on the Sullivan and Annex courts.

The Villanova Hockey Team ended a short season with a 1-6 record. The season was cut short because of a lack of funds and team interest. However, there is a bright outlook for next year with the return of Bob Birmingham, Brian O'Shea, Captain John Clement, Dean Godwin, Dick Thackery and Mike Lescalso. The only member of the team that will be lost via graduation is Frank Driscoll.

Next year's schedule is bright because of returning lettermen and hopes of raising funds and obtaining a coach. The team plans for a twelve-game slate next season and they also plan to enter the Inter-collegiate Hockey League.

Villanova's bowling team clinched first place for the second half of the season in the Eastern Intercollegiate Bowling League with wins of 3-0 and 1-2 over PMC and La Salle respectively.

Denny Henderson led the 'Cats with games of 176, 220, and 200 for a 596 series. Freshman Bruce Thomas had the high game for the Wildcats with a 227.

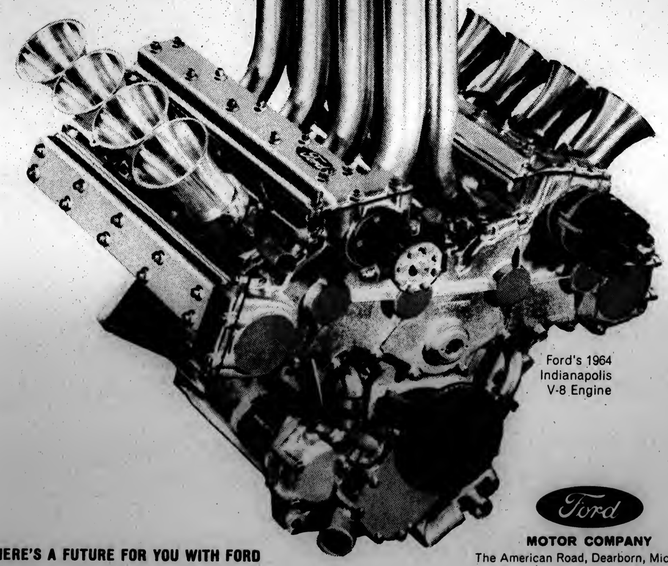
St. Joseph's, first half winners and Villanova will have a roll off to decide the champion of the league. The date has yet to be determined.

Jones, Winterbottom Honored At Dinner; Corace Given Tribute

Last Wednesday night was awards night for Villanova's basketball team. As could be expected, Wally Jones was named as the team's most valuable player while Warren Winterbottom, the squad's only other senior, received the Chuck Drizen award.

And to show that the hatchet was really buried, the 200 or so Villanova diners in attendance paid tribute to LaSalle's Frank Corace.

The setting for the awards was the 14th annual basketball banquet footed by the Villanova Club of South Jersey at Kenny's Surburan House, Cherry Hill.



Corace was given the Michael Saxe Memorial award as the Big Five's most outstanding player.

To top the evening festivities, Kraft announced that Jim Washington and George Leftwich had been elected co-captains.

Exciting things are happening everywhere at Ford Motor Company!

After Ford's spectacular debut in last year's Indianapolis 500-mile race, many people wondered what we would come up with next. Well it's here! Ford Motor Company engineers have developed a brand-new V-8 especially for this year's competition at Indy. Although it's the same size as the 1963 version, this racing engine is a much "livelier" performer because of four overhead gear-driven camshafts and other refinements. Overall results of these revolutionary changes: an increase of at least 44 horses, delivering 420 hp or more at 8,000 rpm.

Ford engineers met many challenges in developing this engine. But this is just typical of the challenges being accepted every day by our employes . . . that's what makes Ford Motor Company such an exciting place to work. And not only in engineering. Exciting opportunities exist in manufacturing, finance, sales, marketing, industrial relations, purchasing, traffic, product planning, styling and research. All types of career opportunities for all types of graduates. If you're looking for an interesting career—look to Ford Motor Company. A growing company in a growing industry.

Alex Bell's Gridders Begin Twenty Day Spring Practice

by Jim Proud

On Wednesday the first of April the Villanova football team opened its spring practice session.

Coach Bell had a large turnout of over 60 students for the first day. During the 20 days of practice Coach Bell will be able to, because of this large turnout, choose perhaps the best team Villanova has seen in recent years.

Co-Captains

Leading the practices are the co-captains, Al Atkinson and Jack McDonnell.

Atkinson, an all-East tackle last season, along with Chappy Moore, Mike Strofolino and John McDonnell will be called on by Coach Bell to fill the positions in the line.

In the backfield returning lettermen Dave Connell, Dick Sernyak and Mike Manager will supply the strong offensive punch to the team.

At the opposite end from McDonnell will probably be John Kelleher, the pass catching star of last season.

Backing Connell at quarterback will be another junior, Don Koshlap, who also played last season while Bill Sherlock was resting his injured leg.

Coach Bell, although not planning a complete platoon system is going to switch a few players on offense and defense.

The two positions which will be platooned however, are end and quarterback.

The end on offense will be Kelleher but he will be replaced on defense. "Kelleher has an old knee injury and we wouldn't want to take a chance of his banging it up on defense," said Coach Bell as to why the big end won't be playing defense.

Connell starting on offense at quarterback will be replaced by a defensive back when the 'Cats lose the ball.

In view of the returning power from last season's squad and new talent from the freshman class Coach Bell expects a very successful season.

Coach Bell will be relying on a combined passing and running attack. With capable running backs, Sernyak and Manger, Bell can successfully offset the opposing defense enough to allow Connell passing freedom.

To catch Connell's passes will be Kelleher and McDonnell at ends and possible the speedy halfback Joe Santamauro will fill in as a safety valve or will run the halfback pass patterns.

Rugby Squad Trounced 24-0 As Army Coasts Over 'Cats

The Villanova Rugby team traveled to West Point last Saturday where they were defeated by the Black Knights by the score of 24-0 in a very hard and clean game.

In just three years the West Point rugby team has grown from a small group to the point where there are sixty players out for the team, and they practice for two hours five days out of the week.

The approach is very "Army" and the result is an extremely well-disciplined team which is very solid in the fundamentals of the game of rugby. They must also be considered one of the most physically fit teams Villanova has met in some time.

On a bright spring day the game was almost totally gloomy for the Wildcats, with their scenic view of the Hudson River from mid-field constantly obscured by the black jerseys of the West Pointers on their way to the end-zone.

Villanova was down 13-0 at the half, and although they played much better in the second half, and came close to scoring on many occasions, they were forced to walk off with a shutout.

The "B" team game was practically the same story, with the boys being shut out by a more physically fit, and a better disciplined West Point team.

Objective Approach Used By Writer In Viewing Olympics Omitting Jones

by Rusty Miller

This is a biased, unobjective report.

When the starting line-up for the championship game was announced last Saturday night, many people in the crowd objected to the fact that none of the starters were named Jones—and not all of these conscientious objectors were from Villanova. However, with the insertion of Larry Brown for the Stars, Jones came in since he was the only one able to contain Brown.

Wally played well but showed only a couple of dazzling moves—he had been told to handle the ball less. He was also hampered by foul trouble early in the second half, as was almost everyone on the Red team.

The games were roughly contested with more than the usual amount of body contact under the boards and quite a few flying elbows—some of the players were obviously used to a tougher brand of ball.

There were several factors to be considered by any self-appointed prophets attempting to pick the Olympic team—or, more important locally, the backcourt representatives.

The first consideration — how many men would chosen for the guard's posts? Most probably, only four.

Second — who was doing the choosing? A 20-man selection committee composed of 8 NCAA representatives, 8 AAU representatives, and 4 armed forces representatives. Needless to say the AAU and armed forces members would be determined to see that they adequately represented on th Olympic team.

Third point — what was the competition like? Fortunately or unfortunately, it was rough, very rough. Everyone conceeded Walt Hazzard the first berth. His sidekick Gail Goodrich played well, showing his scoring talents and ability to click with Hazzard. Bill Bradley confirmed suspicions that he could play any position, even guard, and play it well. Bill Bradley was also conceeded a berth—would it be at guard? Jeff Mullins easily adjusted to his change of position and played well in every game. Next on the list of candidates was a fellow named Larry Brown who had been named MVP in the National AAU Basketball Tournament this year. He was a good, experienced guard fast and a good driver. He also had going for him the fact that he was the standout on the winning team. Not to stop there, Manny Newsome of Western Michigan, Dick Davies of the Goodyear Wingfoots, and Howie Komives of Bowling Green also turned in fine performances.

It's all up to the Monday morning quarterbacks now. Should Wally Jones have made it???

Wildcats Finish Eighth In NCAA Five Swimmers Named All-American

by Steve Freind

Bolstered by a brilliant performance in the 400 yd. freestyle relay Villanova's star-studded swimming team garnered eighth place in the 41st Annual NCAA Swiming Championships at Yale on March 28. Southern California edged favored Indiana for team laurels with host Yale notching third.

400 Freestyle Relay

The relay team of Dick McDonough, Rick Girdler, Jack Geoghegan and Ray Donnelly splashed to a new Villanova mark in the event with a 3:10.4 clocking that pushed Yale's heralded quartet to a record shattering time of 3:09. Considered the finest relay in the nation, the Eli received their closest call of the year as McDonough's blazing anchor leg of 46.4 almost dethroned them. For their performance, all four members of the 'Cats relay were named All-Americans.

The 100 yd. freestyle provided the Mermen with their only other point as Goeghegan finished fifth, capturing another All-American title in the process. Donnelly joined Geoghegan in the 50 yd. freestyle and both splashed to All-American status in that event. Although they failed to qualify for the finals, the times in the trial heats were so close that All-American recognition was awarded to several non-finalists. The 'Cats failed to add four more to the list as the 400 yd. medley relay of Bill Livingood, Ken Herr, McDonough and Donnelly failed to reach the finals.

McDonough

McDonough, still weak from a sickness that hampered him throughout the entire season, was unable to defend his title in the 200 yd. butterfly and failed to qualify in the 100 yd. butterfly. His clockings of 1:59.9 and 52.7, respectively, in the ECAC Championships at Dartmouth on March 12, however, will probably award him All-American status in both events.

Assistant Coach Jack Lumsden was optimistic about McDonough's chances to make the Olympics. "Dick is much more effective in the 50 meter Olympic pools. He is finally recovering from that season-long virus and I think he stands an excellent chance."

Co-holder of the American record in the 100 meter freestyle with Yale's Steve Clark, McDonough has also toured Japan and performed in the Pan American Games in Brazil. In late August he will travel to New York with several of his teammates to participate in the Olympic try-outs held at the World's Fair.

Georgetown Edges Stickmen 10-9; Bill White Tallies Four

by Tom Bruderle

Despite some last minute near heroics, Villanova's Lacrosse team went down to its third straight defeat of the young campaign last Saturday against Georgetown by the score of 10-9.

The 'Cats were down 6-9 going into the last quarter and rallied to within one goal at 10-9 thanks to Bill White's fourth goal of the afternoon. Tight Offensive and defensive pressure was kept on the visitors for the last four minutes of the game but the Wildcats were unable to get the equalizer.

Nip and Tuck

The game was nip and tuck throughout with the score tied at five-all at the halfway mark. In this early going, White tallied three goals while Herb Fixler and "Spook" Hilgarten got one each.

Villanovan Mike Sweeney's goal to the contrary, Georgetown moved to a commanding 9-6 lead in the third quarter. The fourth quarter was highlighted by scores by Hilgarten and Tom Spain followed by White's which set up the last minute excitement.

White and Georgetown's Bob O'Neil led all scorers with four goals each.

In earlier contests this season the Stickmen suffered a 13-4 pounding at the hands of a good Ohio State team. White chipped in with three goals while Jim Bonaiuto had one.

The season's opener was a 17-2 defeat at the hands of C. W. Post as White and Hilgarten scored one each.

Schedule

This Saturday the squad travels to New York City for a contest with the New York Maritime College. The following Saturday finds the team in Lexington, Virginia to do battle with Washington and Lee. The next home game is on May 2 versus Dickinson College.

Freindly Foolishness

He Deals In Flesh

by Steve Freind

When it comes to living in a violent world, even Sam Huff must yield to Joe Kuharich. Follow the trail of howling critics and burning effigies Kuharich cannot be far ahead. The Eagles' new coach seems to thrive on an existence that would drive less hardy souls to retirement, voluntary or otherwise.

Following an undistinguished reign with the Washington Redskins, Kuharich was summoned by Notre Dame to revive the Irish grid dynasty which had crumbled under the boy wonder of South Bend, Terry Brennan.

When "Gentle Joe" failed to crack. 500 in four seasons, it became apparent that he did not fit into the Rockne-Leahy tradition of pigskin excellence. Victory-starved Irish fans expressed their disenchantment somewhat crassly, burning more gasoline than the Buddhist monks of Viet Nam. Joe took the hint and headed for a more healthful climate.

When no one expressed a burning desire for Kuharich's services, NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle placed the wayward coach in charge of the league's referees. This task is similar to negotiating a cease fire in Cyprus — without the reassuring accompaniment of 8000 troops.

On the Move

Last month, Kuharich was once again on the move. Jerry Wolman, the youthful millionaire who purchased the Eagles in December, named Joe to replace hapless Nick Skorich as coach of the Birds.

At last, Joe Kuharich was at peace. With no college mobs or irate alumni to harass him, Wolman's gift to Philadelphia could look forward to a long tenure of tranquility.

True, Kuharich did have a few minor problems to contend with. First, there were 60,000 title hungry fans, still glorying in the championship year of 1960, who had violently screamed for Skorich's, uh, scalp.

Then there was the offensive line, strangely reminiscent of a sieve, which had forced the Birds' three quarterbacks to raise their insurance premiums. And, of course, the Eagles' morale was simply great.

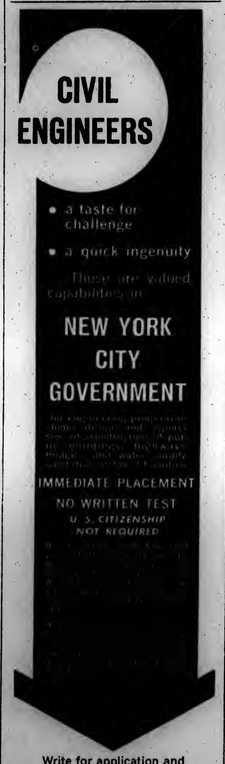
In summer camp, quarterbacks Sonny Jurgensen and King Hill made the greatest get away since Willie Sutton, netting $50,000 in the process. Team spirit progressed rapidly, with John Melekas and Ben Scotti providing the grand finale. The affectionate pair engaged in an impromptu hotel lobby fistic display, and Skorich began to pack his luggage.

Ace Receiver

Thus the stage was set for Kuharich's grand entrance upon the Philadelphia scene. Quickly. Joe made his presence felt as ace receiver Tommy McDonald was traded to Dallas for two obscure linemen and an aging placekicker.

Fans waiting for an encore soon got their wish as Sonny Jurgensen went to Washington for another quarterback, Norm Snead, who received more boos in the Capital than Bobby Baker.

With the loss of Jurgensen and McDonald, the Eagles are without their only drawing card and ABC is without a television program. The only other Bird able to create excitement is Tim Brown, but it is somewhat difficult for a 200 pound back to shine without the "luxury" of blocking. With the Eagles' defense, though, Timmy should see a lot of action returning kickoffs.



The departure of McDonald is particularly hard to swallow. The sight of number 25 bouncing off the ground, darting through a host of tacklers or leaping to make a circus catch has become as much a part of the Philadelphia scene as Billy Penn's statue. (Besides, Penn could never go to his left.)

It will take Eagle fans years to forget McDonald's magical moves and crowd pleasing antics, particularly during the glory days of 1960.

Much has been said about Jurgensen's attitude and off-the-field conduct. Few will dispute, however, that Sonny possesses the strongest arm in the league. Many say that the Duke redhead is injury prone, but with the Eagle's line, even Sonny Liston would take flight. (With or without a .45)

Kuharich believes the trades will cease team dissension and start the Eagles on the comeback trail. He better be right, though, for Philadelphia deeply resents the loss of their idols.

If McDonald and Jurgensen return to Franklin Field to haunt the Birds, Joe may have to move again. Birmingham does not have a corner on lynch-mobs.

Andy Razzore Participates In Bowling Championship

Andrew Razzore, a native of Elmont, New York and a senior Accounting major at Villanova was one of 55 finalists in the twelfth annual A.C.U. National Intercollegiate Bowling Championships in Oakland, California, held last Saturday and Sunday.

Razzore, who is 21, has a season bowling average of 180. His highest game in league competition was 269, and his three-game series high was 660.

The tournament is conducted annually by the Association of College Unions in cooperation with the American Bowling Congress and American Machine & Foundry Company.

Campus and regional competitions, rolled at accredited schools, lead to the national championships, now in their twelfth year. Thirteen thousand students, representing 175 schools, bowled in the 1964 preliminary events, before the 55 finalists from 11 regions were chosen.

Awards were made for team, double, singles and all-events winners, the latter receiving the annual Morehead Patterson Award, an impressive bronze sculpture that resides annually at the college of the all-events winner.

A replica of the award, named after the late chairman of the Board of American Machine & Foundry Company, is given to the all-events winner for permanent possession.

'Cats On The Diamond

by Jerry Bruderle

Villanova's baseball team opened its season on March 28 against Maine after two weeks of practice under Coach Art Mahan. The team has been working out almost every day through a good bit of cold and rain, since March 15. Mr. Mahan has hopes of improving on last year's 13-9 record and possibly receiving a bid to the N.C.A.A. tournament in early June. Villanova has gone to the tournament seven of the last ten years but failed to make it last season.

Seven returning lettermen mark a strong squad which also includes four sophomores. Second-baseman Art Mahan, Jr., third-sacker Bob Hall, outfielder Mike Zaia, catcher Andy Camello, and pitchers Billy Smith, Vic Majewski, and Tony Cudelno are the returning lettermen and they will form the nucleus of the team. Also available are outfielders Jack Emery, Tim Marziaz and Joe Fanik. Fanik can also double as a catcher and is a heavy hitter. Eddie Sofield should see a lot of action on the mound.

Sophomores will be in leftfield and center, and in the infield at short and first base. Tom Edwards and Paul Puchalik man the outfield posts and both should help defensively. Shortstop Dion Vonderlieth and first-baseman Bill Bergold are expected to come through strong. Vonderlieth is big and quick. He played freshman basketball last year and hits well. Lefty Bergold has a big job in replacing graduated star Richie Richman at first base. He has been working on his fielding and should hit all right.

Richman was one of three graduated stars who will be missed from last year. After a fine season with the Wildcats, Richie signed with the Phillies and played at Bakersfield, Cal. His big bat broke up many a game for Villanova in the past three years. Third-baseman Dan Lynch was signed by the Yankees after graduation, and his hustle will be missed in the infield. Pitcher Wayne Walz is another veteran Coach Mahan will miss. He pulled the 'Cats through a few tight situations last season.

With a slick-fielding Mahan and Vonderlieth around second, and Bergold and Hall on the corners, the inner defense should tighten and come through with the clutch double play more than last year. The outfield, with the two Sophomores, Edwards and Puchalik, and Zaia, should also be top flight defensively. Catcher Andy Camello is a hustler and a fine receiver whose hitting should improve over last year. The hitting for the team could be improved if George Pond and Nick Marinaro return after being injured.

With four Sophomores expecting to start, the heavy schedule of home games will help, especially early in the season. Thirteen of the 21 games are at home, including the first six.

Most of the schools in the East appear on the upgrade as far as baseball is concerned and that includes the Big Five. Mahan expects Pennsylvania, LaSalle, St. Joseph's and Temple all to improve considerably last years fine records. LaSalle and St. Joe's are on the schedule for home and away games while the Quakers and Owls each visit Villanova once.

'Cat Baseball Team Splits Openers Loses To Maine; Defeats LaSalle

by Jim Proud

In the season's opener the Villanova baseball team lost to the University of Maine 6-3.

The 'Cats 1-0 lead in the fifth soon be came a 4-1 deficit.

On the strength of a three-run homer by Dick Kellinger which sailed over the left field fence, Maine jumped into a commanding lead which they never relinquished.

They padded their margain in the sixth with two additional runs but were held scoreless for the final three innings. The 'Cats added two more runs to no avail, one in the seventh and another in the bottom of the ninth. The winning pitcher was Dick Doloff who went eight innings allowing only three singles.

Bill Smith was the starting pitcher for the 'Cats and was charged with the loss.

A week later on the same field, Villanova's diamond, the 'Cats evened their season log at 1-1. Defeating the Explorers by 7-5, the 'Cats ended a three game winning streak of the LaSalle nine.

Led by second-baseman Art Mahan Jr., who had three singles and two runs-batted-in, the 'Cats took a 6-0 lead before the Explorers were able to get a man across the plate.

Tom Marziaz also turned in a notable job collecting two hits in three trips to the plate, one going for a triple.

Smith Starts Two

The starting pitcher for the 'Cats, called on by coach Mahan for the second time in as many games, was right-hander Bill Smith.

Smith began to tire in the sixth and seventh innings allowing four runs in these innings and was relieved by fellow right-hander Vic Majewski for the final two innings.

Majewski allowed one run in the ninth but held on to preserve Smith's victory.

Two doubles were supplied for the 'Cats by third-baseman Bob Hall and shortstop Dion Vonderleith, each getting one.

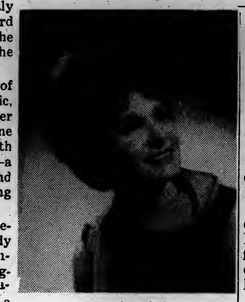
She becomes the first woman and the first non-Catholic to receive the "St. Augustine Award." This will be the ninth presentation of the award which is given for "Distinguished Achievement in the Field of Communications Journalism."



Named for St. Augustine, Patron Saint of Printers, and one of the great writers of all time, presentation will be made during the annual Villanovan-WWVU Dinner Dance at the Warwick Hotel on Saturday evening, April 25.

Marciarose is the wife of Jerome Shestack, prominent Philadelphia attorney. She is a producer-moderator of several outstanding program series at Station WRCV-TV. Her programs "Speak Up" and "Concept" have attracted nationwide attention.

A veteran of ten years in the broadcasting field, Villanova's 1964 "St. Augustine Award" winner was recently voted the "Golden Mike" Award by McCall's Magazine as the "outstanding woman of the year in radio and television."

She has been the recipient of many other awards from civic, medical, social, and other groups for the programs. One award-winning show dealt with "The Brain Damaged Child"—a program study of the causes and treatment of children suffering from brain damage.

Another program dealt tastefully with a report and study on natural childbirth; still another called "Silence No Longer" documenting an ear operation and eventual cure of a patient of deafness.

Meeting Urges This Motion: SGA Wants Financial Report

by Bill McCloskey

Villanova's Student Government Association has passed and sent to the administration a proposal calling for an annual statement to tuition payers of financial position and a statement of future intent in the area of sources and uses of funds.

Debate on this bill was the highlight of the association meeting last Wednesday night, April 8.

Other motions passed admitted the Sociology Club and the Engineer's Honor Fraternity, Tau Beta Pi, to the SGA, called for the erection of an outdoor "showcase" for communicating publicity for campus events and called for SGA representatives from campus organizations a report of activities.

A motion by John Roberts asking for weekend hours during which visitors may drive on campus was defeated. George McKeon, in negative debate, explained that permission in hardship cases, is readily available from the office of the security force.

Financial Statement

Debate against the financial statement request was led by Marty McGuinn.

McGuinn presented to the Association an analogy given to him earlier in the day by Rev. Joseph J. Curran, OSA, the University's vice-president for Financial Affairs. The analogy compared a University to a clothing store. It was emphasized that when a person buys from such a store there is no question of how the purchase price will be spent in the store.

McGuinn stated that Villanova is in business of selling education and should enjoy a similar immunity from financial questioning. He also questioned the right of the student to ask such a question of the University.

Dave Moore emphasized that he was interested in reports of the same style as Father Presi

The issue includes an article on art at Villanova which will feature such paintings as the Catherine Howard by Sir Peter Lely, Father Fedigan by Thomas Eakins, Adoration of Magi by Jean Mostaret and Saint Dominic, a fourteenth century Byzantine painting.

This issue also contains a variety of prose and poetry ranging from "Variations on a Theme of St. John Pearse" to Euripides and Ring Lardner. The languages employed in the works include French, Lithuanian, Greek, Latin, and German. In the poetry being published there is a rather timely piece dedicated to a recent socialite named Fernanda.

Villanova Mexico Volunteers Prepare For Charitable Work

One of the newest and least known of the many campus organizations is the Villanova Aid to Mexico Project which was evolved through the efforts of the Reverends Michael Gallagher and John O'Rourke, OSA.

Interest in this organization was immediate. This is not so unusual when you consider that VAMP is the only organization on campus whose goals are completely directed towards aiding peoples so much more unfortunate than themselves.

The organization boasts no socials, dinner-parties, etc., for it has no money for internal functions. The meetings are long and perhaps many would find them dry, for they are directed towards preparing students to live and work among the people of another country — Mexico.

Don't wait to be asked. Send your contributions to Villanova Aid to Mexico Project, c/o Student Council Office, Villanova University, Villanova, Pennsylvania or see one of the above named representatives.

Two Local Debators Excel As Beta Gamma Climaxes Away Season

The Beta Gamma Debate Society concluded its away tournament schedule last week by posting its finest record in state wide competition, in both individual and team competition.

Eugene Fitzmaurice, defending Eastern Forensic Association champion in extemporaneous speech, placed second in that field which were held last week at Seton Hill College, in Greensburg.

Jeff Radowich, competed in original oratory and won second place in the difficult field with his anlaysis of the world's poor. This marked the first time that one university was able to win two top awards at one tournament of the Debating Association of Pennsylvania Colleges.

At the competition the team also posted its finest record in debate. Captain Joseph Rohrer, whose career with Beta Gamma includes outstanding records compiled at Harvard and the Villanova Tournament Title, teamed with Jeff Radowich as they argued for the National Collegiate Debate Proposition, "Resolved: That the Federal Government Should Guarantee an Opportunity for Higher Education to All Qualified High-School Graduates."

Their counterparts, Fitzmaurice and Jim Griffin on the negative, joined with them to tie for first in the preliminary rounds of competition and to place fourth in the overall tourament for the state title. The team also had the highest number of awards and received the high median in speaker points as the team placed first in the overall point accumulation.

Mathematics Club Plans To Affiliate With National Group

The Villanova Mathematics Club is planning to affiliate with Pi Mu Epsilon, a national honor society. The club, presently headed by Joseph Mezzaroba, has been relatively inactive this year, but the members hope to increase their activities next year.

The club's functions are the presentation of speakers and the writing of papers on mathematical papers by the members. At the present time there are about 20 members in the club, composed of graduate assistants, and a few juniors and seniors.

Pi Mu Epsilon, the national society, has chapters in almost all the major schools across the country. Their monthly meetings will be followed closely by the Villanova chapter.

In six months the club will definitely know whether it has been accepted in Pi Mu Epsilon. A meeting will be held in about a month or so to discuss next year's projects.

A biographical insert on economist Barbara Ward will be included. Miss Card will speak at Villanova on April 23.

The well-documented articles are chosen for publication by Concept's editorial board. They are selected on the basis of originality and positive expression of student thought.

Grad Theatre Is Presenting Drama On Post War America

The Villanova Graduate Theatre presented the drama The World That Never Was by Hugh Wipple and William Himmelhoch on April 10, 11, and 12. The play is based on a novel of the same name by Wipple and will be given again on April 17-19.

The World That Never Was concerns the story of shattered hopes and dreams in post-war America. Jim Christy starred as Sid Ferley, a former G.I., in a mechanized society. A graduate of Catholic University, Jim made his debut at Villanova in Happy Haven as Dr. Copperwalte.

John Ferley

Joining him is Frank Broderick as John Ferley, idealist and big-game hunter in a world where there is no longer any game. Broderick is a member of the Wayne Footlighters and has had parts in Dark at the Top of the Stairs and The Matchmaker.

Mitzie Smyth, a secretary for the Theatre Department played Sid's wife Meg. She is a full-time graduate student and will be remembered for her part as Modesta in We Shall Have Larks, a former Playbox production.

Experience

Pete Mocci, a Villanova accounting major, played in The Gay and Burning Bridge. Bruce McPhail, an artist whose paintings are no being exhibited at the Philadelphia Gallery, is a member of the Community Theater. Another member is Don McMillan who has directed summer stock. Irene Walsh is also in the cast. Richard Harshberger is the director.

The authors, Wipple and Himmelhock, flew to Villanova for the premiere from Detroit, where both men teach.

All performances begin at 8:30 p.m. and admission is one dollar for students and their dates, and $1.50 for general admission.

'Desperate Hours' Will Close With Final Showing Saturday

Belle Masque's Spring production The Desperate Hours, by Joseph Hayes, will be presented for the final time this weekend in Vasey Hall Auditorium. Performances on Friday and Saturday nights will begin at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $1 and may be purchased outside the University Shop in Dougherty Hall or at the door.

The play has been hailed as a masterpiece in suspence. It maintains a nerve-racking degree of tension from start to finish. The story concerns three escaped convicts who invade and hold a home; but it is also the story of civilized human beings pushed to the brink of violence.

While on Broadway the play won the Antoinette Perry award as the best drama of the year.

The Belle Masque production stars James Mason, Kathy Roos, and Rich Rotella. Others in the cast include John Meehan, Jim Stillwagon, Bonnie Seecas, Brian Morgan, and Bill Byrne. The play is directed by Thomas Nevins of the Graduate Theatre Department.

Class Officers, Council Reps Will Be Elected Tomorrow

General Spring elections for the class officers and representatives to the Student Council will be held tomorrow in Alumni Gym from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Under the new constitution, recently ratified by the council, nurses will elect two representatives, one junior and one senior.

According to John Hagerty, vice-chairman for student government affairs, turnout for the nominations, especially in the Freshman Class, was very good, and elections in this class should be especially spirited.

Green And Riley Beaten In Finals Of Reimel Moot Court Competition

William Green presents a plea for the Respondent in the finals of the Reimel Moot Court held at the Law School.

by Jim Breman

The team of Richard H. Roesgen and Thomas H. Twardowski representing the Saint Thomas More Law Club and acting as attorneys for the Petitioner took first place in the finals of the Annual Reimel Moot Court Competition.

The defeated team representing the Chief Justice Warren Law Club and acting as attorneys for the Respondent was composed of William J. Green, III and Thomas A. Riley, Jr.

Justice William O. Douglas of the Supreme Court of the United States presided over the argument. Justice Benjamin R. Jones of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania and Justice J. Cullen Ganey of the United States Court of Appeals sat as associate judges.

The case involved the review of a conviction for contempt by a New York Court.

The Petitioner failed to answer the questions on the ground that the answers might tend to incriminate him, because he is subject to federal prosecution despite the state grant of immunity.

Speaking first for the Petitioner was Thomas Twardowski.

He stated that the problem has to do with self-incrimination and that the fifth amendment should be considered just as fundamental as the first amendment. The rule he sought was for a person to be able to remain silent when he will suffer real danger from federal prosecution. Richard Roesgen then presented an alternate course of action for the Petitioner.

The first speaker for the Respondent was William Green. Green asserted that we should have a living Constitution and that it should be open to change.

Justice Douglas announced that they had decided to award first place to the attorneys for the Petitioner. Their decision was based on the quality of the oral argument and the answers to the various questions they asked the attorneys during the presentation of the argument.

Joint Party On Friday Night To Open Interfrat Weekend

This coming weekend, April 17 and 18, the Interfraternity Council presents the annual Interfraternity weekend.

The weekend will be highlighted by a joint party on Friday night followed by individual fraternity dinner dances on Saturday night.

The Labor Lyceum on Ridge Pike in Conshohocken will be the scene of the Friday night party. Only fraternity members and their dates will be admitted, beginning at 8 p.m. A "beach-comber" theme will prevail and everyone should come dressed to keep this "summer in April" motif.

Lee Andrews and the Hearts, who recorded such hits as "Teardrops," "Maybe You'll Be, "Try the Impossible," and "Long, Lonely Nights," will be on hand to provide the music. In addition, the Ron Sheer Band will supply the entertainment during the breaks.

Delta Pi Epsilon is handling the ticket sales for the party and also announced that the Falcon House in Havertown will be the scene of their dinner dance on Saturday night.

Delta Pi Mu will also hold their Saturday affair at the Falcon House. DPM along with Pi Theta Chi are handling the decorations for the party, while Phi Kappa Pi is publicizing the event. Lambda Kappa Delta obtained the entertainment and the hall.

PKP's dinner dance will be held at Kuger's Restaurant in downtown Philadelphia, while LKD's travels to Stratford's Covered Wagon Inn.

On Saturday afternoon, each fraternity has planned a picnic with sites still to be announced.

In Spring A Young Man's Fancy Turns To Politics

The Program In Theology

The obvious distinction between secular and religious education is uniquely one of atmosphere. Catholic education has always been based on the concept that the secular brand lacks the religious climate essential to the development of the "complete man." Presumably, the purpose of Catholic education would seem to be the furnishing of that atmosphere.

In this series of editorials we have sought to examine objectively areas of university life that vitally affects its welfare. Consideration of this most vital and uniquely religious aspect is unavoidable, yet, admittedly, really effective evaluation is extremely difficult. Atmosphere eludes measurement.

It would seem fair, however, to point up certain questions that are crucial and have been widely discussed in the hope of bringing out of the divergent points of view some meaningful conclusions.

Of the many factors that influence a university's religious character the program in theology is without a doubt the most potent and measurable. It has also been, in recent months, a topic of intense discussion among the undergraduate student body.

The most frequently expressed criticism of theology courses here is that they lack the challenge and intellectual curiosity that should be an essential characteristic of any college level course. It is claimed that too frequently they take the form of "catechetical rehashings" of areas already familiar to the college student.

In addition, many assert that the courses fail to meet serious questions that the inquiring college mind does have, through cursory consideration of the material and stringent limitations on questions and discussion. Emphasis, it seems, is on simple accumulation of fact rather than serious understanding and intellectual investigation.

Educators respond that many of the difficulties with courses in theology involve questions of sheer physical and monetary necessity. More extensive discussion and questioning is precluded, they note, by the very size of the classes. The necessity of covering a specified amount of material per semester also militates against a freer atmosphere for intellectual inquiry.

Educators also cite the fact that instructors are at a premium, thereby demanding the use of substitute teachers.

Both of these points of view have merit. Real and limiting physical and monetary limitations do exist. But it is also a fact that disaffection, most unfortunately among the better students, is widespread. Logically, then, the question revolves around whether anything can be done to improve the situation.

The complaint that courses in theology are channeled too exclusively toward the simple accumulation of fact seems legitimate. Rigidity dulls the intellect. Lack of depth alienates most minds. Clearly, efforts at stimulating a more intellectually viable program in theology have been sadly lacking.

Solutions, or at least, possible solutions must exist and should be considered. Perhaps, as we have suggested before, several classes might be organized on a more informal, seminar-type level, with the increased possibility of more extensive discussion.

If successful on an experimental basis, the program might be extended to include other theology courses.

Granted, this might mean a "slowing down" of the educational process. But the process needs slowing. Deemphasis on quantitative fact with more pronounced emphasis on qualitative understanding is long overdue. Challenge, not in terms of an increase in the work load or more burdensome outside reading, but rather in qualitative improvement in the material presented is an urgency that should meet with imagination and force.

Finally, if the limiting factors mentioned affect the course in theology adversely, then it might be reasonable to consider reducing the three year program to two years. The shorter program might very well diminish the need for substitute instructors as well as permit full time teachers to concentrate more on adding greater calibre and depth to courses that are given. It seems only reasonable to prefer an excellent two year program rather than one of three years or more that is deficient.

These are only a few suggestions. They no doubt embody many defects. Yet deficiencies are clear. Criticism, hopefully, will stimulate re-evaluation. But what it most essential is affirmative response from Student Council, the administration, and all those who are directly concerned with the program in the direction of improvement.

Counterpoint

In Self Defense

by Frank Sauers

In last week's edition I was taken to task in a letter to the editor by a reader who criticized my objection to efforts aimed at barring Richard Burton from this country on the basis of his alleged immoral relationship with Elizabeth Taylor.

Because of lack of space in that issue, I was forced to answer the letter in a rather cursory and sardonic manner. But, because of remarks leveled at my personal moral character and also because of the sort of self-righteous intellectual arrogance I think the point of view expressed in the letter represents, I feel compelled to respond in greater detail.

Let me first assure the reader that it is a continual source of discouragement to me that such a thing as immorality should exist. It is equally as dismaying that so many people see immorality as the domain of a select few.

The world goes on and on, and vice will always be a part of it. Immorality, or evil, or failure to adjust, whatever you may wish to call it, should be recognized as something that must be lived with and understood rather than abolished.

I do not know whether there was in fact any semblance of immorality in the Burton-Taylor affair, and neither, I suggest, does the writer of that letter. But I do know that it is the highest form of intellectual arrogance to demand that all the rest of mankind adhere to one's own personal moral system.

The writer noted that the Catholic Church teaches that marriage is a sacrament, a contract to be broken only upon death. This argument might be valid if the couple were Catholics. Very simply, they are not.

These fundamental misconceptions aside, what is more disturbing about the view expressed in the letter and elsewhere is a more deeply rooted religious hypocrisy. The writer eloquently cites Christian teaching, yet from what I can perceive in the letter, by his very argument he thwarts what is the very essence of Christianity — understanding, love, and charity.

Christ made clear what should be the Christian attitude toward the sinner. He himself defended Mary Magdalen, supposedly the greatest sinner of her time, against those who would stone her to death because of her immoral acts. "Let him who is without sin cast the first stone."

We all occupy the most precarious of glass houses. It is Christian, or more basically noble, to put down the stones and grasp hold of something more valuable — understanding. Understanding and love, even of the greatest of wrongdoers; anything short of that, let alone its antithesis, violates the essence of Christianity and belies a naive religious hypocrisy.

The meaning and timeless beauty of essential Christianity is a rare and precious thing. It is a pity so few Christians understand it or practice it.

Hateful stone-throwing can accomplish nothing. Fighting fire with fire is absurd. It often leaves only ashes, and nothing more. Hate only begets more intensive hate. With love goes mercy, with mercy forgiveness, and hopefully, with forgiveness reciprocal love.

Richard Burton is an immoral man. But only in the sense that you and I, and even the writer of that letter, is immoral. It is not for me or that writer or anyone else on the face of this earth to begin passing judgment upon him.

I abhor the reason why problems such as these have to exist. I am disheartened at the horrible mental and physical sickness with which each individual has got to cope in some way or another. Some are more fortunate than others. Some are better equipped than others to cope with what is often an irrational and senseless world.

What is most needed is understanding and charity and love. I embrace that philosophy. I am sure the writer of that letter does as well.

Elections Are Tomorrow: Athletes, Personal Friend Or Effectiveness?

Elections are tomorrow.

The results will decide who will lead the school, who will lead the individual classes, who will represent the student body to the Administration and to the public.

There are many who deprecate these elections and the offices at stake as being meaningless. We are told that the student leaders can do only what the Administration allows them to do, that they are mere pawns in the clutches of an all-powerful hierarchy.

To a certain extent, this is true, but it is not a valid criticism. There is no Student Council or class officer in any American college who is free of Administrative supervision.

No Suppression

And there is considerable room for personal initiative in the Student Council and in the class office at Villanova. There is no member or officer who will tell you he was suppressed to any large extent.

The scope and effectiveness of every class and Student Council activity is a direct function of how responsible and effective the elected officers are.

So, although the Administration exercises a protective, and sometimes prohibitive, influence over both the class and Student Council activities, there is still quite a bit of leeway of which a responsible and effective leader can take advantage.

But the universal lament is that not enough responsible and effective leaders are elected. It seems too often that only the very popular "good guy" or the great athlete can win. There are numerous examples of where Mr. Popular and/or Mr. Athlete were also very good officers; but this does not necessarily follow.

Criteria

The question then arises: what should the criteria for class officers be? This is a question, of course, for individual consideration, but certainly some general qualifications can be outlined.

Every officer must be willing to put time in, must be willing to spend long hours working for his class.

Every officer must be effective, must be able to accomplish what he sets out to do.

Every officer must be articulate, must be a good representative of his class.

Naturally, it would follow that any individual who has previously demonstrated these qualities or abilities is to be preferred over an unproven opponent.

Anyone who is a real Villanovan wants to preserve the school's reputation, wants to make sure that the school always does the right thing. This is true patriotism.

But to knowingly vote for an individual simply because he is a popular fellow, or a good guy, or even a personal friend of yours, is to stab Villanova in the back.

The principal criterion must be your evaluation of the worth of the candidates, not such superficial considerations as who is a nicer fellow or a closer friend.

Thus, as Plato said, "We can easily forgive a child who is afraid of the dark; the real tragedy of life is when men are afraid of the light."

Let's not make a mockery of Villanova or a tragedy of these elections.

If we do this, if we vote intelligently, then, no matter who we vote for, there is no one who can quarrel with us.

1. I've decided on the kind of job I want when I graduate.

Knowing you, I'd guess it to be something modest—like Secretary of State or President of GE.

2. I hadn't thought of those specifically. What I had in mind was a job where they give you a lot of assistants. I think that would be nice.

Very nice. Maybe they could start you off at a hundred grand a year.

3. Well, I did run an extremely successful Nickel-a-Pickle sale.

Don't forget to demand plenty of stock options.

4. You think maybe I should lower my sights a little.

I'm afraid to tell you what I think.

5. I'd be willing to settle for a vice-presidency.

Look—why don't you see if you can qualify for one of Equitable's executive training programs. The work is interesting, the pay is good. And if you prove you have the ability, you may very well end up with a title and a couple of assistants.

6. You really have a way of seeing through a problem.

Rooming with you has taught me a lot.

The Rising Curtain

Tense, Dynamic Drama

by Paul Norton

The Belle Masque Society took a step into melodrama last Friday evening with the opening of its spring production, The Desperate Hours by Joseph Hayes. This is a dynamic drama of tense emotion and suspense.

The action of the play moves swiftly through the terrors of a family held captive by escaped convicts and draws strong reactions from the players and in turn from the audience. This is all to the credit of the production.

Acting

An outstandnig performance is turned in by Richard Rotella as Glenn Griffin the head thug. He sustains his characterization throughout the show and pulls together many of the weak scenes.

His counterpart, James Mason, as the harrassed father gives another excellent role to a long list of sterling performances for Belle Masque. His portrayal is mature and convincing. He fails only in the very end when his emotional explosion makes his character seem unreal.

As Eleanor Hilliard, his wife, Kathlene Roos, manages an attractive warmth but her moments of high tension become lost in many small nervous reactions and a lack of empathy with her fellow actors.

The supporting cast is ably upheld by Bill Byrne, Bonnie Lucas, Brian Morgan, and Jim Stillwaggon. John Meehan as a deputy sheriff and the rest of the law officers are generally ineffective and take away some of the excitement inherent in this play.

Actually, this is not a great play; it is merely a good play that is of the calibre of better than average television fare if well handled by the performance by good actors. Belle Masque has found a substantial amount of each of these qualities. Its show has excitement, suspense, and many of the important elements that produce an evening of good entertainment.

Each production of the Graduate Theatre Department becomes more difficult to criticize than the last. During the past year the plays presented by the grad students have for the most part been new shows and the neophyte dramatists have been given an opportunity to grow in these new plays, experiment with untried characterizations, develop productions from the very groundwork without any preconceived notion as to how the play should be performed.

If the play is outstanding then the students are given an unlimited opportunity to project themselves. If the plays are only fair then there is a greater challenge to tie up a presentable package for an audience.

The new production at the Playbox, The World That Never Was, falls somewhere between these two poles. It is a compelling provocative play with many facets and, yet, a simple almost familiar plot.

The story involves a young sensitive man struggling in his realistic environment of a small town family for expression and character definition. He arrives at a familiar solution and the story ends.

The obvious neatness of the plot belies the turmoil, the social commentary and insights in the drama. Its flaws are in the interpretation, the conclusion, and the lack of a simple plot conflict which makes the play somewhat episodic.

The jewel of the production is the acting and the direction. It is, overall, professional, analytical and consistent in its approach. Richard Harshberger has neatly directed a fine cast led by James Christy in the role of Sid Ferley. Mr. Christy captures the wonderment and the bewilderment of the young soldier just home from the war. He is a bit too aristocratic but this confusion and emotional turmoil are credible bits of acting.

Mitzie Smyth gives an intense performance as Ferley's wife though lacking depth. She is overshadowed by Irene Walsh as Dorothy, Sid's sister. Miss Walsh is dynamic.

Should freshmen use it, too?

(They'd probably let it go to their heads)

But then, wouldn't any man? If he suddenly found all those starry-eyed gals looking at him? So, if you think you can handle it, go ahead, use SHORT CUT! It'll tame the wildest crew cut, brush cut, any cut; give it more body, more life. Junior Concert, Dinner Dance Highlight Annual Weekend

The highlight of this year's Junior Week will be centered around the two dates of May 8 and 9, on which nights the Junior Concert and Dinner Dance will be successively held.

The concert, slated to begin in the Field House at 8:30 of Friday night, is expected to appeal to nearly all members of the class, as a varied yet careful selection. The folk and popular groups have been blended together to make a satisfying evening for all.

In the folk field, the range of music will extend from the vibrant sounds of The Phoenix Singers to the smooth artistry of Carolyn Hester, a girl who has been described as "one of the most promising of new folk artists seen in a long time." This serious side of the show will be balanced by the popular and always entertaining Four Freshmen, who will be making a return engagement at Villanova.

Saturday nights activities will be focused on the Junior Dinner Dance, to be held in the Sheraton Hotel in Philadelphia. It will begin with a cocktail hour at 6:30, then proceed to dinner at 7:30 and conclude with dancing to the Buddy Williams orchestra from 9:30 to 1:30. Reservations are now being taken for this affair. The price for tickets is $15.00.

The events preceeding this weekend will begin on May 4, when Junior week officially opens with Mother's Day. The day will begin with Mass at 11:30, include a luncheon in the Field House at 12:30 and concludes with Benediction.

Among the events of the day will be the distribution of the Junior Week Villanovan and the Diaper Dan contest. There will also be a special Turf and Tinsel performance Sunday night for the mothers who arrive on that day.

Other Events

Other events of the week will be the Sean O'Faolain lecture on Tuesday night, the Junior Class Smoker Wednesday evening and the Junior-Senior Muff Day beginning at 1:30 on Thursday afternoon.

Jack Emery, Junior Class President has urged all Juniors to purchase their tickets for all events at an early date, and thus avoid adding last minute confusion to this memorable week.

Orphans' Outing Highlights Sophomores' Spring Project

The Class of '66 will treat approximately 100 youngsters from St. John's Orphanage to a Saturday full of entertainment and activities on the Villanova campus.

The Sophomore Class Spring Outing will be held on May 9. The day will begin at 10 a.m. when the participating members of the class will pick up the youngsters at the orphanage and bring them to Villanova.

A tour of campus and various demonstrations and displays have been planned to fill the morning period. After an hour's lunch, a full program is in order to expend a little superfluous energy. Benediction in the grotto at 3 p.m. will conclude the day.

Tickets for the affair will be available at a cost of $1.00 in the Pie Shoppe during the last week of April.

General chairman for the affair is Frank Eck. Committee heads are: Brian Banmiller and Steve Freind, co-ordinating; Pat Mahady and Leo Carroll, lunch; Paul Dixon and John DiGennaro, orphans; George Valva and George Vrionis, publicity; Greg Galland and George D'Ambrosia, transportation; Jim Griffin, tickets; and Bob Mentzinger, special problems.

New York Maritime College Defeats Lacrosse Team 8-4

by Jerry Bruderle

The Villanova Lacrosse team lost to New York Maritime College on Saturday, by a score of 8-4, at Long Island. Villanova held Maritime scoreless in the 2nd half after falling behind 8-2 at halftime.

Superb defense kept Villanova in the game but they never got closer than the final margin.

"Spook" Hilgartner scored two goals to lead the Wildcat attack. Bill White and "Hill" Russell also tallied but it was not enough to offset the New Yorkers.

In the first period, Maritime raced to a 3-0, and stretched it to 4-0 before Villanova hit the scoreboard. Hilgarten scored his first on an assist from Jim Bonaivto, and White also scored before the end of the half, but N.Y. led 8-2 at intermission.

Russel Again

Russel scored in the third period and Hilgarten hit again in the final period, but Maritime could not be caught.

V. nova is now 0-4 with games coming up at Washington and Lee on Saturday, and at Farleigh-Dickinson on April 25. The men of Coach Jack Smythe don't play at home until May 2.

That game will be against Dickinson at 1:30, behind the stadium. They will be hard pressed to equal last years 6-5 record, which was their first winning season in four years of existence.

Ruggers Begin Spring Season With 9-3 Triumph Over Penn

by Roy Baron

Villanova's rugby team won the opening game of their official league season last Saturday afternoon, a 9-3 decision over Pennsylvania. This gave the Wildcats a 1-0 record in the Southern Division of the Eastern Rugby Union.

The game, played on the field across from the Stadium, was closely contested throughout. Following a Quaker score midway through the first half, the host Mainline team came back quickly. Wing Jim Brant was sprung loose for a 20-yard scoring run to tie the score at 3-3.

Then, with about five minutes remaining in the half, Bob Shayer ran for about 20 yards and then passed the ball to Bert Lombino, who carried it the remaining 10 yards for the three points. This gave Villanova a 6-3 halftime advantage.

Cats Stymie Threat

The second half provided a see-saw battle with neither team gaining an advantage until the final minutes. At this time Penn got the ball deep into Wildcat territory. However, a brilliant defensive stand by the 'Cats kept the visitors from scoring.

With only about a minute remaining, Shayer broke loose for a 60-yard scoring jaunt to cap off the triumph for the Wildcats.

In the second game, a 7-a-side contest, the "B" team, led by Ross O'Donohue's 11 points, took a 15-3 decision from Penn.

Sailing Club Takes To The Seas Dan Hurley Points Towards Olympics

by Al Lupcho

The Villanova Sailing Club has become very active this spring under the able leadership of the club Commodore, Joe Lansalata.

Other officers include Jim Gapstur, vice-commodore; Mike Riley, secretary; and Mike Faas, treasurer.

The members of this club have been participating in various regattas and have more regattas scheduled throughout the semester.

On March 21, Villanova competed against Princeton, St. Joseph's, Rutgers, and Haverford on the waters of the Schuylkill River. Under adverse weather conditions, a team composed of inexperienced members finished in fourth place. In the 10 races, only two skippers were used more than once. This is a big handicap because the skippers generally do much better after they have warmed up with a couple of races.

The Regatta

However, since the regatta was used to give the skippers experience, the fourth place finish is very commendable. The regatta was won by a powerful Rutgers team followed closely by Princeton. These two teams used but three skippers whereas the Wildcats used eight.

March 28 found Villanova hosting the First Annual Villanova Invitational Regatta. Rutgers and Wagner College were invited to do battle with the Wildcats. Although Dan Mullray won four out of five races, Villanova could take no better than a third place finish due to three disqualifications.

Four points were awarded to the first place finisher in each race with three points for second, two for third, and one point to a disqualified team.

Alpha

A boat or alpha may be disqualified in a particular race by hitting an opponent alpha. Villanova's three disqualifications cost them at least six points and a possible upset over victorious Rutgers.

On April 5 two members of the club qualified in the Mono Type eliminations held by the Middle Atlantic Intercolligate Sailing Association (MAISA) in the southern division.

Mono Type means one man per boat, whereas in a regular race you find a skipper and a crewman. Dan Hurley, a senior, came in first in the A division to make himself eligible for the MAISA Championships. Mike Riely, a sophomore, placed second in the B division, also gaining a birth to the championships held at Kings Point on May 2 and 3. Incidently, the different divisions have nothing to do in regards to ability. Skippers may change divisions at their own wish.

Mono Type

During the Easter break, Hurley upset a star-studded field of skippers at the 1964 North American Finn Championships held at New Orleans. This was a mono type affair and has made Dan the number one seeded skipper, in his division, in the United States. This victory also gives him an opportunity to try out for the Olympic team and has designated him as the favorite to represent the U.S. (and Villanova) in Tokyo this fall.

He also received an invitation to go to England in quest of the Gold Cup Regatta Championships held this summer.

The spring schedule includes seven more regattas to be sailed along eastern shores. The club is completely independent of school funds and is currently accepting new members.

Future plans include a training program for new members and an all out drive to win the team championship of the MAISA next year.

VU Baseballers Lose And Win To Army, Temple By 6-3 Score

by Jim Proud

The 'Cats, in their third game of the season, faced the Cadets of Army and lost their second game thus far in the campaign.

In the game played at the Main-Liner's home field, the hitting of Ed Haydash and Bob Fazen proved to be the winning margin. With each getting three hits and Haydash collecting an r.b.i., the twosome proved to be the boost Army needed to even their season log at 1-1.

The brightest spot in the game for the 'Cats was the hitting of Andy Camelio, the Wildcats star catcher.

Slugging at a .500 percentage for the day, 2 for 4, and hitting a two-run homer, Camelio turned in the best performance to date of any Villanova batsman this year.

The game was decided in the top half of the sixth inning. After Camelio blasted his two-run homer in the bottom of the fifth to tie the score at 2-2 the Cadets came up with two runs of their own in the top of the sixth to put the game on ice. The nine from the Hudson added two more runs in the eighth to end any chance of a 'Cat victory.

The 'Cats didn't allow the Cadets to go to the locker-room without a final scare, however. In the bottom of the ninth they mustered enough strength to start a minor rally which ended in one man crossing the plate. It was snuffed out, however, before anymore runners could score.

The 'Cats again evened their season record on Saturday by defeating the Temple nine.

In their fourth home game in a row the Villanova squad defeated the Owls, by the same score that they had lost to Army the previous day, 6-3.

Behind their control minded pitching ace, Bill Smith, the 'Cats jumped to a 3-0 lead in the first inning and stayed ahead for the remaining eight frames.

Led by the strong hitting of Mehan, Edwards, Bergold and Zaia, the 'Cats chased Owl starter Charlie Bishop in the seventh and went on to win their second city series game.

Temple put on a surge in the seventh and came to within one run of a tie but the 'Cats added two in the bottom of the seventh for a margin of safety.

Smith (1-1) struck out seven and walked two in his battle for the victory. Backed by fine fielding and two clutch double plays, he pitched the full nine innings allowing nine hits but spaced them so that they only accounted for three runs.

Up-Coming Games

Yesterday the local favorites traveled to Scranton for a contest and will return home to face the always dangerous Nittaney Lions of Penn State on Friday. The next day, the 'Cats hit the road again to face the Princeton Tigers.

An unidentified Villanovan crosses the plate in one of the two games played at the Main-Line diamond last weekend. Last Friday the Black Knights of West Point took the measure of our heroes by a 6-3 score. On the very next day, the 'Cats bounced back to whip the Temple Owls by the very same score.

Outdoor Track Season Opens As 'Cats Win In Puerto Rico

by Bob McIntyre

A fifteen man Villanova Track squad returned home last Sunday night, an 84-61 conqueror of the combined teams of four Puerto Rican universities. The cindermen coaches and all those who made the trip agreed that it was just fantastic.

As soon as they stepped off the plane they were greeted by Mexican hats and a large crowd. After this they were given a large reception and shown all around San Juan. All the parties and the big parade that followed were due to the enthusiastic Alumni in Puerto Rico as well as the more than friendly crowd that continually followed them everywhere.

Friday Night

The meet was held Friday night in the newly built San Juan stadium under almost perfect conditions and, as usual, the Cats, under the watchful eyes of Coaches Elliott and Tuppeny put on a fine show for the 14,000 in attendance.

The team won eight running events and four field events against the combined forces of the four Puerto Rican universities. As Jumbo put it, "The times were tremendous for the first outdoor meet of the season." Of course he added that the conditions were perfect.

Sullivan-Livers

Tommy Sullivan, Larry Livers and Rolando Cruz were the hits of the show. Sullivan won the 1500 meters in 3:48.6 by four yards over teammate Vic Zwolak. The time, equivalent to a 4:05 mile, was the swiftest run by Tommy since his 4:03.5 as a high school senior.

Livers won the 110 meter hurdles with a 14.4, the 400 meter hurdles with 52.5 breaking the school record in the process. He also placed second in the high jump with a 6-2 and anchored the 400 meter relay team to a 41.7 second place finish.

Cruz, a native of Puerto Rico, received one of the biggest ovations of the evening as he cleared 15-6 in the pole vault. He came close at 16-1 on his second effort. Irishman Noel Carroll won the 400 meters in a new Irish record of 47.5 ahead of Stan Kozlowski, 48.1, and anchored the 1600 meter relay team to victory.

Marshall Uzzle won the 100 meters in 10.5, soph Earle Horner took the 200 meters around a turn in 21.2 and Al Adams outdistanced teammate Jimmy Orr 1:51.8 in the 880 meter run.

Soph Dick Kurnik captured the shot with a put of 53-6½ and won the discus at 144.3. George Reynolds hurled the javelin 204-3½ for a gold medal.

The 600 meter relay team composed of Orr, Adams, Kozlowski, and Carroll captured the last gold medal with a time of 3:14.2.

This Saturday, the squad takes to the road again as they travel up to Randalls Island, New York for the annual Queens-Iona Relays.

On the following Friday and Saturday, April 24-25, the team makes it local debut in the always tough Penn Relays to be held at the Quaker's Franklin Field. May 2 finds them in Quantico, Virginia for the Quantico Relays.

Freindly Foolishness

Now and then it's fun to let the imagination run rampant through the realm of sports. Motivated by a desire for mirth and an acute inability to create a feature story, the following gems are humbly presented:

Red Auerbach, fiery coach of the Boston Celtics, has announced his retirement from the basketball scene. Mr. Auerbach intends to devote his time writing a book entitled The Value of Temperence in Speech and Action. The future best seller will be dedicated to Sid Borgia.

Former heavyweight champion Sonny Liston has turned his talents to the record industry. Attired in a striped suit, Mr. Liston will appear on Bandstand to present his first vocal release, "Up the Lazy River." The flip side, "Don't Fence Me In," is also rated as a sure smash. The most interested spectators should be the boys at the Missouri State Penitentiary, who always like to see a hometown boy make good. Incidentally, Blinky Palermo is in for 25% of Sonny's royalties and Jack Nilon is in for a good cry.

Alex Karras, reinstated defensive tackle of the Detroit Lions, has accepted as invitation to appear on the Jack Paar Show to discuss life in general. NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle has consented, the only stipulation being that Alex remains gagged during the entire program. Paul Hornung seconded the motion.

Steve "I Never Touched Him" Courtin has been awarded the Sportsmanship Award for his conduct during the past basketball season. Courtin's actions on the court have showed him to be a clean-cut gentleman, especially after his first basket against Villanova. Sonny Liston is not the only one to wax his vocal talents. Nick Skorich, "retired" coach of the Philadelphia Eagles has just released a touching rendition of "Born to Lose." His successor, Joe Kuharich, inspired by fan reaction to his recent trading escapades, has recorded that old favorite, "Nearer My God To Thee."

Abate, Eck, Coyle Elected; Voter Turnout Excellent

by Tom Krause

Junior Ernie Abate, Sophomore Frank Eck, and Freshman Tim Coyle were elected to the presidencies of their respective classes, 1965, 1966, and 1967 on Thursday, April 16. There was a fine turnout of voters at Alumni Hall on a clear, Spring day.

Elected to the posts for the class of 1965 were the following; vice-president, Carl Dolente; secretary, Al Verdi; treasurer, Howard Ulep; and alumni representative, Charlie Zaccaria.

In the Secretary race, Al Verdi defeated Bob Spellmeyer by a tally of 245-235. Dolente and Abate won out over Vince Arpa and Rusty Miller, respectively.

Other winners in the class of 1965 were: Arts and Sciences Division; day-hop rep. to the Student Government Association, John Casey; resident rep., Mike Neuman; Engineering; day-hop rep., Jim Murphy; and resident rep., Robert Stout.

For the College of Commerce and Finance, the winners, who ran unopposed, were: day-hop Jim Whalen and John Smock, resident rep. Faith Connor was elected to the nursing representative position.

McErlane-McKeon Committee Makes Senior Father's Day Tickets And Plans

by Rich Lavelle

Jim McErlane and George McKeon, co-chairmen of the Senior Father's Day, have announced that plans for the event are currently under consideration.

The sale of tickets began last Monday in the Student Council Office, and will continue through Friday, April 25, from 11:30 a.m. until 2:30 p.m.

Registration will mark the opening of the day's activities. The Rev. Michael J. Gallagher, OSA, will then celebrate Mass. After Mass the seniors, their fathers, and guests will be served a light buffet luncheon in the Commerce and Finance cafeteria.

6 Unnamed Finalists Compete For Commencement Speaker

The Rev. Joseph Kemme, OSA has announced a new policy in the selection of the student commencement speaker to be applied for this year's graduation exercises. The selection draws from the Villanova students in this year's Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities with the twelve highest cumulative averages.

Father said that the new format was being used in an effort to get a better representation of the class from which to pick the speaker. He commented on the fact that the past system often was hampered by the fact that the deans of the respective colleges would pick only their top students, giving no preferential recognition to students who were active in campus organizations.

At this point the process of elimination has narrowed the field down to six finalists. They were chosen on the basis of their speaking abilities. These six will now prepare a commencement address to be delivered before a panel of three judges later this month.

The winner of this final round will draw up a longer draft which he will deliver at the commencement exercises on Monday, June 1.

Act of God

Betsy Massiniso and Dick McDonough, chairmen of the committee for afternoon activities, have announced only that their plans are, as yet, tentative.

In reference to these plans George McKeon wishes to inject the following remark: "It is rumored that recent acts of God may force the cancellation of one of these activities."

Obviously, George is referring to the recent fire at Kelly's. To cage such creativity would be to captivate a reading public.

A banquet at Kugler's Restaurant in Philadelphia is expected to be the climax of Father's Day. Cocktails will be served at 5 p.m. and dinner at 6 p.m.

Free Parking

Arrangements have been made with the Philadelphia Police Department to provide free on-the-

Dr. Riley Dissects MacArthur In Conservative Club Lecture

"It was not General Douglas MacArthur's position that the United States should ally themselves with the Nationalist regime of Chiang Kai-Shek during the Korean conflict. But it was the position of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in 1951." This statement was made by Dr. Donn C. Riley of the Villanova History Department in an address to the Conservative Club on Thursday, April 16.

M. W. Hampton discusses Labor-Management relations in the railroad industry at a recent meeting of the Society for the Advancement on Management. Mr. Hampton represented the Brotherhood of Railway Workers.

Riley Speaks

Dr. Riley spoke on a segment of MacArthur's career from the Fall of 1950 to the Spring of 1951. He explained that he was following the interpretation of Dr. Robert Strausz-Hupe of the University of Pennsylvania in analyzing this portion of the Korean War.

Next Speaker

The Conservative Club's next speaker will be Dr. Thomas Molnar, Professor of French and World Literature at Brooklyn College. Dr. Molnar will speak on the subject "Problems of Sub-Sahara Africa" on Friday, April 24 at 3:30 p.m. in 110 Bartley Hall.

Labor Management Relations Discussed At SAM Meeting

by Ray Ritter

Labor-management relations in the railroad industry are as vital today to the employer and the employee as they were in the early history of organized labor, a rail union officer told the Villanova Chapter of the Society for the Advancement of Management on Thursday, April 9, 1964.

M. W. Hampton, Assistant President of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, told the Chapter that prior to 1910 labor-management relations were very weak. Often contracts were management dictated, and obviously showed the need for stronger labor organizations.

Hampton said "Between 1915 and 1920 federal controls were being introduced and Congress enacted the eight-hour day for railroad workers."

The Railway Labor Act was written into law in 1926, providing definite means for the prompt disposition of disputes between the carriers and the employees.

Outlined Benefits

Later, the Labor Management Reporting and Disclosure Act became law in 1959, Hampton went on. He continued his discussion, outlining the benefits to rail workers created by equal rights, freedom of speech and assembly, the right to sue, and the elimination of improper discipline.

"Labor-management relations are breaking down," the Assistant President emphasized. "Railroads are running to courts, and they are replacing practical railroad officials with men who have a very limited on-the-job understanding of the problem involved in running a railroad."

Graduate Drama Group Begins 'Theatre In Revolt' Lectures

by Tara Siegal

The Graduate Theatre of Villanova University has announced the start of a new lecture series. The series is entitled "Theatre in Revolt," and all the lectures will be published in a magazine and later collected into a book.

An advisory board of prominent people in theatre is resulting from the series. They have agreed to give Villanova the benefit of their advice. They will appear on campus to speak to interested students, especially those of the theatre.

Although no dates have been set for the lectures, the series will include many prominent names. Arthur Cantor, producer of all Paddy Chayevsky's plays; Kermit Bloomgarden, well-known producer; Sidney Kingsley, Pulitzer prize winner; and Michael Ellis, producer of Come Blow Your Horn and other Broadway shows, will be among the speakers.

Bolt on Theatre

Robert Bolt, who wrote A Man for All Seasons and the screenplay for Lawrence of Arabia will be featured in the 1964-65 season. Sidney Kingsley is expected to return to present another lecture during the coming year.

Because the Department of Theatre is interested in the development of college teachers and playwrights, it seems essential that they understand the revolution in the world theatre.

Heraclitean Theatre

According to Richard A. Duprey, Chairman of the Graduate Theatre Department, there is a continuous and rapid change in the contemporary theatre. Students may learn what is happening to the nature of their culture if they hear it from prominent people.

Graduate Theatre is also planning a "folk-sing" on Friday evening, April 24, and Saturday evening, April 25. Performances begin at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $1 per student and admission is $1.50.

The program, entitled "This Land Is Your Land," will feature all aspects of American folk music. Miss Leith Carroll and Miss Mitzie Smyth will be the performers. A narration and introduction will be given before each song by William Long.

Literary Club Elects Tom Krause Prexy, Mitchell Lecture Set

Sophomore Tom Krause, assistant news editor of the Villanovan, was unanimous choice of the members of the Literary Society for President, 1964-65.

Elected to the post of Vice-President was Matt Roche, also a sophomore, whose functions center about publicity and public relations.

Secretary - Treasurer - elect is Dave Roberts, who will moderate a student discussion on author D. H. Lawrence tomorrow during the activities period. The program will be held in 207 Vasey.

On Thursday, April 30, moderator James J. Mitchell of the English Department will complete the series of club lectures on the literature of the Twentieth Century.

His topic, announced the president-elect, will be A. E. Housman, poet laureate of peace and pessimism, and perennial springtime favorite of young male adults. The talk can be heard at 10:30 a.m. in 207 Vasey.

With eyes to the coming year, Krause and outgoing President Frank Quattrone are re-writing the club constitution, and are planning an elaborate series of lectures by renowned authors.

Harry Lee, coordinator of the Spring Formal, announced that the Greenbrier Country Club will host the affair. Entertainment will be provided by "The Squires" beginning at 9:00 p.m. and continuing until 1:00 a.m.

Villanova Enters Shakespeare Derby, Noted Critic Dr. Miller Will Speak

by Frank Quattrone

Villanova University has begun its quadri - centennial commemoration of William Shakespeare's birth (April 23, 1564-1964). Quite independently of one another, but with motives markedly similar, the English Department, Library, Literary Society, and radio WWVU have prepared a number of memorials to honor the greatest poet and dramatist of the English language.

The peak of the semester's tribute will be the campus appearance of noted Shakespearean critic and lecturer, Dr. C. William Miller of the Temple University English Department.

Dr. Miller, who is participating in a Shakespeare symposium tomorrow afternoon at Philadelphia's Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, is expected to lecture before the Villanova Literary Society at 7 next Tuesday evening, April 28, in 110 Bartley.

Shakespeare On WWVU

Tonight at 7 p.m. WWVU, the Radio Voice of Villanova, is broadcasting a "live" student-faculty discussion of the Bard of Avon in his myriad aspects. Joseph Kinney of the English Department here will moderate the hour-long special on the eve of Shakespeare's presumed birthdate.

Several members of the English Department of Villanova will attend "The Living Shakespeare" seminar series.

Spring Elections Engender Villanova's 'Great Debates'

The Villanova spring elections produced a political climate which gave rise to a dual debate on Wednesday, April 15. Participating in the debates were: the junior presidential candidates, Brian Banmiller and Frank Eck; and the senior presidential candidates, Rusty Miller and Ernie Abate.

The debates were broadcast over station WWVU for the first time. There was a large turnout in Vasey Hall Auditorium, where the debates were held. Senior Class President Jim Murphy was the moderator.

In the debate over the office of the president of next year's Junior Class, Frank Eck and Brian Banmiller met in a no-holds-barred contest. Each candidate was given five minutes to make an introduction, after which the floor was opened to questions and the candidate allowed one minute to respond.

Eck led off the debate with a promise that he would do his best to translate his proposals into action next year. He said that he had already been discussing several of his proposals with a member of the administration. Some of his proposals were a practical lecture series, an intra-class athletic program, and better communications.

In his five-minute speech, Banmiller proposed a polling of the class for their opinions on specific issues. He also stated that the promises evoked in an election campaign do not always become a reality. Together with Eck, he called for an objective consideration of the nominees for their respective positions.

For the Senior Class presidency, Rusty Miller and Ernie Abate defended their platforms; using a different format than that of the Junior Class office. Each presented his views in a two-minute introduction, a 10-minute platform dissertation, and a three-minute rebuttal.

NROTC Drill Team Captures Eighth Place In Washington

Whiskey Company of the NROTC Drill Team recently captured eighth place in the National Drill Championships held in Washington, D.C.

The Championship competition which is held annually as part of the Cherry Blossom Weekend draws only the top of the nation's drill units. This year's unit numbered 54 teams representing Army, Air Force, Navy, and Sponsor Corps ROTC units from colleges and universities from across the country and also from our newest state, Hawaii.

The end of the day's competition saw Villanova's score of 813 out of a possible 1000 high enough to capture eighth place.

Accomplishment

This was indeed an accomplishment, greater than meets the eye, as the quality of competition this year was definitely at its peak. Only 80 points separated the first eight teams with the University of Wisconsin capturing first place by three points.

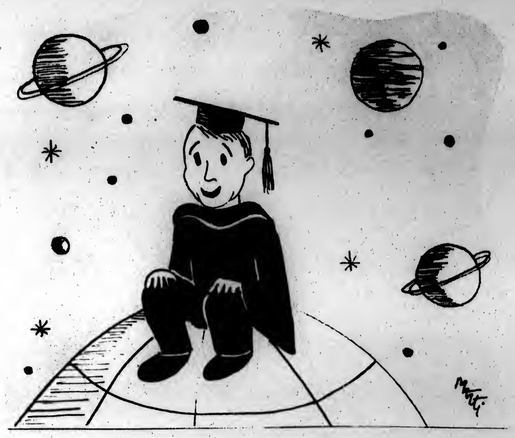
In second place was the Capital Guard from Capital University, third was Purdue, followed by Howard University, AFROTC, University of Hawaii, AFROTC, and Rutgers Queen's Guard.

As with any military unit, team effort and leadership are the qualities that produce the winning combination.

Nelson Leads

The latter quality this year is supplied by Midshipman Lieutenant John J. Nelson, a Marine option student, who finds time on the side to maintain a high average while majoring in Electrical Engineering.

With the National Championships behind them, Whiskey Company still can be seen between the hours of 7-8 a.m. on Mendel Field preparing for the final two events of this year's drill calendar.



Local Teams Featured

On April 22, at 1 p.m., Villanova will host the Greater Philadelphia Drill Championships. This competition features teams from Penn, St. Joseph's Drexel, LaSalle, PMC, Rutgers and Villanova.

The competition will be held in the Villanova Stadium and should afford the students a chance to see drill competition at its finest.

The culmination of the drill season will feature a special performance by Whiskey Company during the Spring Review on May 1.

40 More Days!

A Degree Of Insanity

Five students from Haverford College have recently decided to raise money for medical supplies to be sent to Communist Viet Cong guerrillas in South Viet Nam.

These pseudo-intellectuals claim that the United States is supporting a totalitarian government in Viet Nam and persecuting people fighting for their national independence.

We disagree with both of these statements and especially with the utter idiocy of trying to prolong the lives of people who have so far killed 210 Americans.

These students have a perfect right to their own opinion on the Viet Nam conflict but to aid and abet the enemy that is causing the loss of American lives and money shows not only a definite lack of patriotism but a certain degree of insanity.

We wonder if these students would assume the same position if they had a father or brother fighting in Viet Nam.

These young men also stated that they would not fight for their country in Viet Nam, although they would serve in a war against Nazism or Fascism.

The essence of what they are saying is that they will not fight against Communism.

We can only have pity for such individuals who cannot comprehend the importance of even the smallest victory over Communism.

Counterpoint

Equal Right To Be Free

by Frank Sauers

Of all the methods being used by conservative opponents of the civil rights bill to obliterate its real meaning is the inevitable misinterpretation of the word "equality."

Their contention that it represents an attempt to level the divergence among men and "make everyone the same" reflects the rather typical conservative tendency to blur complexity, their puerile attempt to simplify through distortion that betrays a consistent lack of conceptual ideas of any real depth.

That fundamental inequalities among men, in terms of ability, character, compassion, talent, intellect and so on, do exist must unavoidably be acknowledged. It is obvious that a Hitler is hardly as objectively worthwhile as a Francis of Assisi.

The liberal interpretation of the concept of equality recognizes the qualitative distinctions between men but asserts the equal right of every individual to develop those abilities he does have under the protection of the law. Every man, in short, has an "equal right" to be free.

In a pluralistic society, however, the equal right to freedom can never be absolute. Absolute freedom, except the necessary and unqualified freedom of the mind, would mean chaos and anarchy. Instead, we have a delicately balanced system of liberties with the freedom of each individual tempered and given bounds by the freedom of others.

Civil rights legislation reflects an effort to cope through law with what appears to be a serious imbalance in the system of rights.

Businessmen invoke their "divine right" to determine whom they will and will not serve. Southern educators defend their right to protect their young from corruption by nonwhites by segregating their schools.

Negroes claim that discrimination, especially in the areas of education and public accomodations, has extended far beyond the point of forbearance.

Distasteful though it may seem, the right to discriminate cannot be destroyed. Privacy or individual segregation from other races is a legitimate liberty.

But when it becomes a hideous affront to the character of an entire segment of the population as it has with regard to the Negro issue, then attentive revaluation of the balance of rights is essential.

Civil rights legislation is not aimed at destroying one form of liberty in favor of another, or at wresting all rights from the businessman in favor of absolute freedom of movement for the Negro.

It simply insures that individuals who feel they have experienced excessive and unnecessary discrimination in places of public accommodation or public schools might have recourse to justice in courts of law.

The direction and force of the legislation will have to be rooted in a basic sense of values. What freedom is of greater value, that of a citizen to move about freely in an open society without regard to the color of his skin, or that of the businessman to discriminate?

Which right demands more emphasis, that of the white child to huddle in his classroom, uncorrupted by children of another color, or that of a Negro child to receive equal education to that of any other American citizen?

The conclusiveness of the final answer is assured. The tides of righteous discontent will not be abated except through reasonable response.

Granted, the right of the businessman to discriminate will be limited, and the freedom to deprive Negroes of a decent education will be tempered. But, hopefully, out of a more just balance of rights, will emerge a broader and more viable opportunity to be free.

LEO GOODREAU

Sino-Soviet Split

For the Soviet Union, all things are quiet on the western front. In comparison with the recent past, her dealings with the Communist bloc countries are relatively smooth.

But Russia has been historically a two-front nation. She has always had to contend with the threat of a hostile Chinese power at her eastern gate. This apparently ceased after the Communist revolution in China.

Appearances are deceiving and the Sino-Soviet rapport is just such a deceiving appearance. Some people urge action by the West, and particularly the United States, to give impetus to the growing split.

To do this would be disastrous, for such an action would be recognized for the ploy that it is and would therefore be ineffective. If any, its results would probably be a rapprochement.

To stand by doing nothing would be equally as disastrous. Mutual understanding between the West and the Soviet Union could be better achieved by their recognition of a common heritage and of the benefits that could result from exchanges on the cultural and economic level.

Our challenge rests in the fact that there is unrest along the Amur border and that we aren't really as different from the Soviets as some would have us believe.

President's Report

Student's Concern Is Valid

by Martin McGuinn
President, Student Body

The student concern about the financial position of the university is a valid one when it emanates from a sincere attempt to understand related administrative policies. The consideration of legislation calling for a University financial statement should have been preceded by an investigation into the sundry problems and methods of implementation.

While this motion was pending on the congress floor, I presented to the assembly a partial report of a discussion with the Rev. Thomas Kenny, O.S.A. (not the Rev. John Curran, OSA as was misreported by this newspaper.)

The purpose of recounting this conversation was to emphasize the necessity for Student Government to recognize its position in relation to the University administration, and to proceed in all matters with mature intelligence and respect.

Rev. William E. Farrell, OSA, Assistant to the President, addressed the Student Senate on Monday, April 13th, and disclosed that the Board of Trustees of the University had approved the publication of a general financial statement, in connection with the reporting of gifts and grants, during the summer.

A meeting with Mr. Spescha concerning problems in the resident cafeteria pointed out the culpability of many students for conditions in the dining room. He refused the posting of menus in advance and said that because of the verbal abuse to the employees by students and their gross waste of food, he was having difficulty hiring help and preventing a rise in costs.

I felt that the meeting was a beneficial one and that students should recognize their own obligations in this area.

This report is primarily intended to clarify those matters reported in the last edition of the Villanovan which misrepresented certain facts and employed quotations out of context. Members of the administration have always given any student proposal the greatest possible consideration and the many proposals which have been accepted and subsequently implemented attest to this fact.

The Student Congress will conduct the elections of its officers tonight at 6:30 p.m. in a joint meeting of the old and new Congress in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall. All newly elected orginizational officers must be reported to the Dean of Student Activities.

Two Offerings On Capitol Theme

by Jan Dyroff

Philadelphia audiences will get the first look at The White House, the new Broadway-bound play that has lured Helen Hayes out of retirement. The play, by A. E. Hotchner, will light up the stage of the Forrest Theatre for two weeks beginning Monday, May 4.

The First Lady of the Theatre will portray the First Lady or, to be more accurate — the First Ladies, of the White House. Her co-stars, Fritz Weaver and James Daly, will portray the majority of the Presidential roles.

Event Cavalcade

A cavalcade of events linking the lives — historically and personally — of the 36 men and women who have shared the highest office in our country, and the women who have shared their lives and responsibilities, The White House will have its Broadway premiere at Henry Miller's Theatre on Tuesday, May 19.

Miss Hayes was last seen on Broadway in the 1958 production of Eugene O'Neill's A Touch of the Poet. This winter she played the title role in Good Morning, Miss Dove at Catholic University, and appeared here last season opposite Maurice Evans in A Program For Two Players, a Shakespeare reading with which they toured the country.

Refresher Course

Although the play presents the audience with a dramatic and exciting "refresher course" in many of the major events of American history as they were shaped by the men destiny placed in the White House, the play is primarily a non-political, intimate study of the impact the Presidency had on the personal lives of the people who lived at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue.

The bulk of the material concentrates on the period from George Washington to Theodore Roosevelt, with the 20th Century presidents represented in an epilogue.

Many Stars

Henry Kaplan, who took over the direction of Any Wednesday and brought it to Broadway a hit, has been selected to guide Miss Hayes and her company along the path to Capitol Hill.

The set and costumes are designed by Edd Wittstein, and lighting by Jules Fisher. Incidental music in the play is arranged by Lee Hoiby.

Other People

A Gilbert Miller, Helen Bonfils and Morton Gottlieb production, The White House will mark the reunion of Miss Hayes and Mr. Miller, who has previously presented her in Victoria Regina and many other hits.

Mr. Gottlieb, for many years Mr. Miller's general manager, produced last season's hit comedy Enter Laughing, and Chips With Everything, the latter with Miss Bonfils.

The White House will be on the Theatre Guild-American Theatre Society Subscription Series under the auspicies of the Council of the Living Theatre. A special public preview to be offered on Saturday, evening, May 2, will not be on subscription.

Point of Order one of the most exciting new movies of the year, is scheduled to open at the Trans Lux Theatre, Chestnut at 15th Sts., as the next attraction. The movie will open about April 29.

The film presents the most exciting and unbeliveable-but-true American phenomena that actually happened in 188 hours of the Army-McCarthy hearings of 1954 in a fast, incredible, and fantastic 97 minutes.

VU Symphonic Band Has Good Leadership And Is Going Places

by John Riggs

Within the last two years there has been a tremendous improvement in the Villanova band. They are continually striving for greater achievements.

The band is moderated by the Rev. E. C. Doherty, OSA, and is under the direction of Mr. Joseph Colantonio, who assumed control of the band for the Liberty Bowl game in 1962.

Mr. Colantonio has just been appointed by Jerry Wolman, the owner of the Philadelphia Eagles, to assemble and conduct the Philadelphia Eagles Marching Band.

New Conductor

In the absence of Mr. Colantonio, the leadership of the band falls to the newly appointed Student Conductor, Joseph Paperman, who is a graduate of Lower Merion High School.

The other band officers are: Arthur Chappel, president; Joseph Rink, vice-president; Vincent Cardinal, secretary; George McKeon, Student Council representative; Joseph Paperman, student director; Donald Swartz, publicity manager. All these people are doing wonderful jobs and deserve much credit for their accomplishments.

Quality

As tangible proof of the quality of the Villanova University Symphonic Band consider the following:

They have just completed a successful concert tour at our nation's capital. Performances were given at Immaculata Junior College and Archbishop Carroll High School on Sunday, April 12, and at the Augustinian College on Monday, April 13.

Also, the band will play at the World's Fair in New York City on May 11. The duration of the performance will be one hour, after which the band members will visit the other exhibits.

Prospective Members

If any Villanova student desires to join a worthwhile activity, this is it. The main requirements are the ability to play a musical instrument and the sacrifice of a little time. If you have any questions about joining, contact any of the officers.

Participation in an activity such as the Villanova University Band is a fruitful and very satisfying experience.

Mexico Project

The spirit of taking a personal interest in other people throughout the world received a great impetus when John F. Kennedy publicly supported the Peace Corps.

The people of the United States had given their financial support over the years to millions of needy people and nations. Yet much of the effect of our generosity was lost because we sent money without personal interest.

Slowly the image of the "Ugly American" is changing, thanks to the involvement of interest on a people to people basis.

Some Americans can and are giving two or more years to a direct service in Latin America and other areas.

Many more would like to do something but just cannot afford the time or money.

We are proposing a plan which will enable all those at Villanova, Rosemont and Immaculata to become more directly involved in helping some of our underdeveloped neighbors.

Some fifty-eight colleges are planning to send from five to fifty of their students to help on various summer projects in Central and South America.

Less than a month ago, several students from Villanova, Rosemont and Immaculata decided to get into this movement. We have formed a group (known affectionately as "VAMP") of fifteen people who can go to Mexico in June to work on a project for six weeks.

Our Spanish is weak, but we are trying to cram; our labor is unskilled, but we're willing to work; our time is short, but our interest is high.

We are willing to give the time this summer, but we realize that it will cost menoy for transportation and supplies. The loss that we will face by going on this project instead of being paid for our time and labor here in the United States was a big consideration of all of us.

Our problem is that our members cannot really afford to pay for our expenses by ourselves, (about $350 each for travel, etc.).

So we appeal to you to support our project.

If we give our six weeks for free in order to help some people begin to pull themselves up — will you be willing to give us one hour's pay that you will be making in your job this summer?

We realize that you will be using most of your earnings to pay next year's tuition, but we hope you would be willing to give us this small share of your earnings ($1, $1.50, $2 etc.) as your personal consideration for the people we will be working with and for.

Tommorrow and Friday, April 23rd and 24th, members of our organization will be in Dougherty Hall so that you might conveniently make this small monetary pledge. We are relying on you.

We were commanded by Christ, "Love thy neighbor as thyself." Don't miss another opportunity.

"If you don't need me, I'll sit down."

When Best Isn't Best!

by Tom Bruderle

It's nice to think and hope that every newly emerging nation in the world community will adopt the free enterprise system as it is practiced in the United States, along with a constitution similar to our own.

America is the world's only major state whose form of government has not changed since its creation; this is something in which Americans can and do take just and honest pride.

We confidently and, sometimes, arrogantly, believe that our system is the only one that can successfully resist and overcome internal turmoil and all alien "isms" that have afflicted man over the past two centuries.

And it is with this thought in mind that The News of Delaware County, in an editorial dated March 19 of this year, criticized a proposal made by John K. Galbraith in the March issue of Harper's Magazine.

While he was a United States Ambassador to India under President Kennedy, Galbraith attempted to persuade the Federal government to subsidize an Indian steel mill for a least 600 million dollars.

This would have put the Indian government into direct competition with that nation's privately owned steel firm. All in all, it is a proposal looked upon with such editorial disdain by The News, that the paragraph in which the idea is found is closed by an exclamation point.

It is an American trait to be honest with one's neighbors and one self and now is a good time to put this noble thought into practice. The main purpose of American foreign aid to any country today, and for the past 16 years, has been a selfish one.

The main thesis behind it is to protect and strengthen free nations against the influence of communism and, in so doing, we are protecting ourselves. This is the theory behind our foreign aid programs in all its harsh unhumanitarian, unaltruistic, and, seemingly, un-American nakedness.

It should not be necessary to explain the necessity of a thriving, vibrant economic system in India with a monolithic and always dangerous Red China just a hair's width away.

Although we scornfully call India a so-called neutralist, the U.S. should do all she can to see that India maintains this American-press-hated fence-straddling.

Indeed it would be wonderful and chest-swelling to think that an exact replica of the American system as adopted by India, is actually thwarting communism in such a critical spot in an equally critical part of the world, but such is not the stuff of reality.

A threatened man will choose the best but not always the perfect way of defending himself. If the best does the job, all right, but still, it is not the perfect method.

If government competition with private enterprise in India will create a strong Indian economy, it is the best weapon against Chinese communism, although not the perfect one.

Television Tripe

by Philip Ludlow

Television has had an impact on our civilization that is unfortunately of questionable merit. This overall impact comes not only from the programs themselves but from the advertisements which flit across the screen in between times.

Shows for the most part are insipid and banal and not worth the time spent in viewing them. Even the so-called controversial offerings, such as That Was The Week That Was, have off-screen editors to keep them from becoming too controversial, just as most newspapers have a limit imposed upon them by the policies of their publishers.

Pleasing Pop

It has been maintained by critics that television caters to the advertising agency and presents only what is pleasing to BBD&O, not to Joe Doaks. They decry the lack of cultural orderings.

But nobody digs culture, not even the critics who clamor for it. Take a case in point, a few years ago the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, who can do such things, took a poll of the critics to see what cultural offerings could be made available.

You Shoe

In other words the broadcaster said "you've been knocking us for years, now here's your opportunity to get what you really want or think you should have."

So the CBC set up a special series of programs on a non-commercial cultural network just to see what would happen. They offered bassoon players, and economic speakers for a whole season.

Bassoon Players

Then one night when the Harvard Marching Society was on the air opposite a bunch of bassoon players the CBC called the critics to find out what they were watching.

Out of 500 critics, 499 were watching the Harvard Marching Society and only 1 was watching the bassoon players. As far as their own standards go, the rest were just out of it which just goes to prove that nobody digs culture.

Dig or No

Whether one digs it or not, one is to some small degree responsible for what kind of shows are put on or not, otherwise why all the fuss about the Nielson ratings?

However, there is nothing that can be done about the tripe in between. There really should be some sort of rating for advertisements.

Admen should realize that quality ads sell, the poor ones just don't. This is a fact that most TV writers never seem to have quite caught on to.

There have been very few quality TV ads — the Johnson and Johnson spot with the tearing band-aid was one, the old Ernie Kovacs Dutch Masters was another.

Worthless Print

The rest probably aren't worth the amount of lead that it takes to print about them. They violate the basic sensibilities of the viewer either because the ads are absurd, literally, or they show people in a position that is too degrading to be real.

In order to sell, one must be believed. In order to sell, one must make one's product or one's pitch agreeable and pleasant. If not, forget it buddy you flunk the rating.

It is hoped that the impact that TV will have will not be all bad, and that the snotty little kids and the 35-IQ repairmen and floorscrubbers will fade as ghost images.

Even more we hope and pray that those responsible for TV remember that quality pays, adwise or programwise.

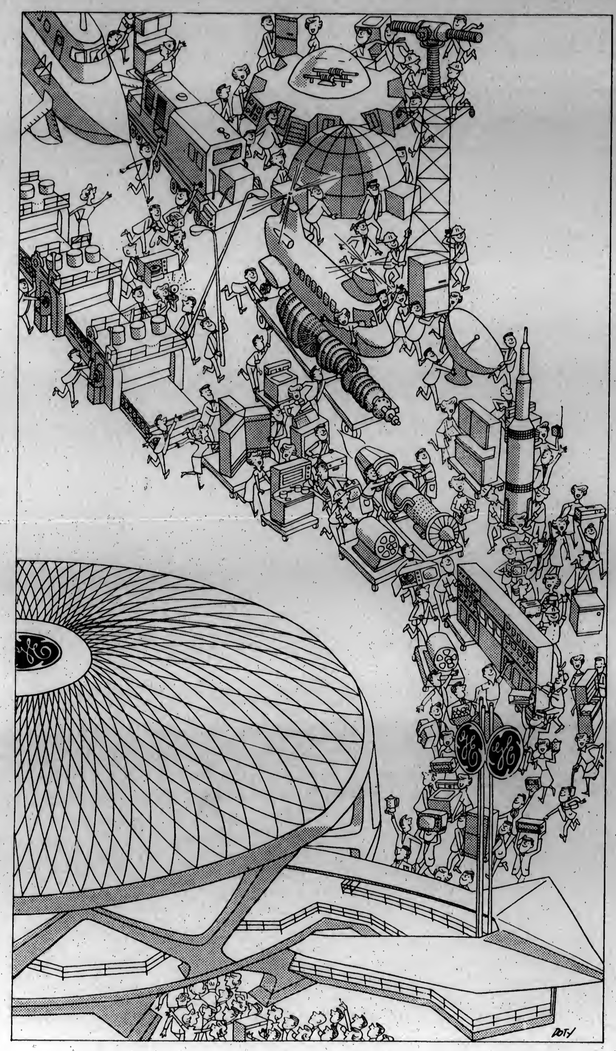
People-To-People

by Jim Napolitano

Last summer, an American college student personally helped to strengthen the friendly ties between the United States and Israel when he administered cholera shots to 3,000 fluttering chickens on an Israeli farm. At Villanova everyone has a chance to build international friendship without innoculating thousands of birds.

The People-to-People University program which was founded under the chairmanship of Dwight D. Eisenhower is a non-governmental, non-profit organization involving college students who wish to further international understanding.

Its goal, like that of all programs of People-to-People, is to bring together on college campuses individuals from other countries so they will learn to appreciate one another's cultural traditions.



On April 11, William Kaplan, regional representative for People-to-People, visited Villanova. He explained that on any campus the University program functions in five basic areas: personal assistance, orientation and hospitality, international affairs, international travel, and special projects. Each of these functions has many ramifications and can be tailored to the needs of each college.

At the present time more than 100 colleges and universities have People-to-People programs. At Stanford University, the chapter donated some money in memory of a Turkish student who died while attending school. The young man left a wife and two sons who received aid from the donation to help them return to Turkey.

Student translators helped foreign students register at Georgetown. They also published a 14 page handbook introducing foreign students to Georgetown and Washington, D.C.

As a result of Mr. Kaplan's visit, Villanova, with its more than 150 foreign students, is now in the process of organizing a People-to-People chapter. If you are sincerely interested in learning more about this worthy organization, please contract Ken Curtin or Jim Napolitano in 114 Sullivan or write to Box 85, Villanova.

Remember, the people the world over are the same, only different — what makes them different is what makes them interesting.

FORD MUSTANG

NEW GRRR IN TOWN

Ford Mustang . . . a car as American as its name. And one that aptly fits the dictionary definition: small, hardy and half-wild. Conceived as a nimble, sporty car, the Mustang offers distinctive styling in two tasty packages—Convertible and Hardtop. Both are 2-door, 4-passenger vehicles. The price? Sporty going never came more economically.

It took a lot of hard work and many people with creativity, imagination and drive to get the "grrrr" to town. All kinds of skills were involved: styling, research, manufacturing, marketing, product planning and many others were needed and will be needed in the future. For the Mustang is merely the latest expression of Ford Motor Company's ability to anticipate modern tastes in driving.

In Ford Motor Company's search to find better ways to do the unexpected, there is the constant need to enlist people with a flair for the future. This year, approximately 1,000 college graduates in all areas of study and with all kinds of majors can enjoy the challenge of creating new automotive marketing and manufacturing concepts. If you're interested in joining a leader in a growing industry, check with your Placement Office or write us. Maybe you can help "tame" the next Mustang.

New Group Concentrates Support In Aiding VAMP

by Bob Dean

The newly formed campus organization of the National Federation of Catholic College students met last week to outline their plans for the remainder of this year and for next year. The meeting was the first since the group was organized following the Student Government Association adoption of their new constitution.

The new status of the NFCCS at Villanova is as a separate organization—not as a committee of the Student Council as before. Terry Cooney, Senior Delegate, will present a new charter to the group for their approval at the next meeting.

Under regulations of the new SGA, the group must now await for a period before applying for official recognition and membership in the Student Council.

For the remainder of this year the NFCCS on campus is working in cooperation with VAMP—the Villanovan's Aid to Mexico Project—helping raise approximately $7,500 which VAMP will need for this summer. John Shade—active Freshman member of both organizations—is directing the venture for the NFCCS.

National President James O'Donnell announced that Villanova's national dues of $550 will be turned over to the campus unit for use on the VAMP project.

Pending the success of this summer's efforts, the Philadelphia Region hopes to adopt the Mexico program as its primary fund-raising project next year.

In addition to the restructuring of the organization at Villanova, plans are in the offing for drastic revision on both the Regional and the National levels aimed at eliminating many of the undesirable or inefficient aspects of its scope, enlarging its membership (currently 142 colleges and universities), and becoming more effective as a national organization.

The important effect — which must be overcome — of the recent 'indictment' of the organization by the Student Government President, and the subsequent action of the SGA, is that the NFCCS has lost a good deal of 'face' here at Villanova.

They must now drop into the background for a while—to reorganize, reassess, and prepare to launch a new set of programs which will leave little doubt in anyone's mind of their ability to function effectively on a campus such as this. This will be accomplished.

Villanova Singers Welcomed From A Successful Sojourn

About 12:30 last Monday afternoon two huge Greyhounds rumbled onto the campus and came to an abrupt stop in front of the Annex. Out poured sixty-two travel-weary Villanovans, members of the touring Villanova Singers.

For them five days and 2400 miles had elapsed since their departure for the Midwest last Wednesday. In that time, the Singers helped further the good name of Villanova with concerts in Columbus, Toledo, Chicago, and Detroit.

The performances were given at St. Mary of the Springs College in Columbus, Mary Manse College in Toledo, Barat College in Lake Forest, Illinois, and Marygrove College in Detroit, all Catholic women's colleges.

The concerts followed a similar format which consisted of the girl's Glee Club and the Villanova Singers performing their own repertoire, and then both clubs combining to do several numbers. The largest combined undertaking was the Cantata by J. S. Bach. Selections from West Side Story were also performed by the mixed choruses.

The Singers were well received at each of the colleges, with large crowds on hand for all four concerts. As well as offering both religious and secular works, the Villanova portion of the show was enhanced by performance of the Spires, the popular folk group within the Singers, and tenor soloist Joe Prestileo.

As well as having quite a successful tour, the Singers served well as good will ambassadors to the many people in these cities.

Harry Smeck, president of the society, reminded the members that the elections for next year's officers will be held at tomorrow's meeting at 10:30 a.m. in 110 Bartley.

a vote of 384 to 330.

Elected representatives to the SGA are: Arts and Sciences; day-hop, Steve Freind, and resident, Leo Carroll; Engineering; day-hop, Jim McDonnell, and resident, Bob Mentzinger; and Commerce and Finance, day-hop, Dave Banmiller, and resident, George Valva.

The junior nursing representative is Roseanna Boylan.

All of the elections for the representatives were fairly close, especially the one between Valva and Bill Melchionni, where the final vote was 134-125 in favor of Valva.

The class of 1967 elected as class officers: vice-president, Don Serafano; secretary, Marie Gadren; and treasurer, Brenden Moore. Ward Williams and Brenden Brett were elected to the resident and day-hop representative positions, respectively.

Most of the freshmen elections were in the nature of "runaways." Brenden Brett tallied 258 votes against his nearest opponent, Jim McFadyen, with a count of 237, in the closest election of the class of 1967.

Portrette

Lucky Leader

Competence is the outstanding adjective used when describing Robert Strong. Bob's abilities and aptitudes make him an ideal representative of the engineering element at WWVU.

This native of Pittsburgh has been reelected as the Station Manager of the Voice of Villanova. Insuring and maintaining broadcasts of a standard quality is his aim. His success has been noted, and his accomplishments acclaimed.

Bob will be officially installed as the Radio Station Manager at the WWVU-Villanovan Dinner Dance on April 25. It is also interesting to note that this year marks Bob's second year of service to the radio station in the capacity of manager.

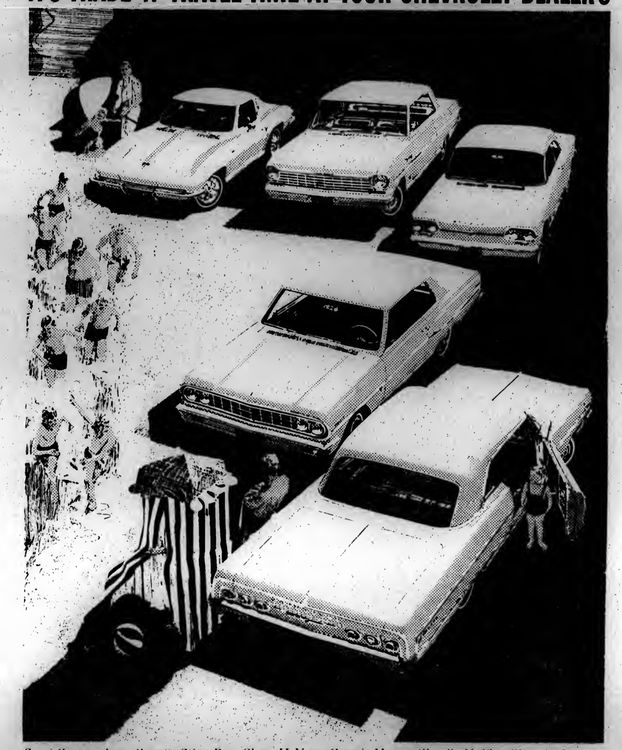
Bob began work at WWVU when he was a freshman. He served that year as an engineer. In his sophomore year, he was appointed to chief technical engineer. Then, in his junior year, he was elected Station Manager. This year, he was reelected to that position.

He is also a member of the Institute of Electronic and Electrical Engineers. In a related line of electronics, Bob serves as the technical supervisor for the sound and lighting at almost all of the major concerts and social events.

However, not all of his interests are devoted to electronics. In a completely diverse field, Bob is an ardent mountain climber and skier. He developed these two talents from his residency in Idaho.

In scholastic vein, it is interesting to note that Bob was one of the 28 students who achieved a 4.0 average for the fall semester. He was elected during that semester to Tau Beta Pi, the national honorary fraternity for engineers. Membership during the first semester of junior year is especially important because it is extremely limited and represents a high degree of academic proficiency.

After his graduation, Bob plans to attend graduate school and possibly major in applied physics. From there, he hopes to enter research and development in the space communication field.



Summer work for Bob is in the form of a television cameraman for WTAE in Pittsburgh. In this manner, he hopes to increase his perception of the communication field.

When asked to comment on his position of Station Manager of WWVU, he said: "I take great pride in serving the Villanova student and the University as manager of the 'Radio Voice of Villanova.'"

He hopes that WWVU will "continue to develop the professional sound of music which we have achieved during the past year and to extend this 'professionalism' into the areas of news and public service."

Bob believes that Villanova has given him an outlook on life not necessarily associated with classroom ideas. He considers himself fortunate in attending Villanova.

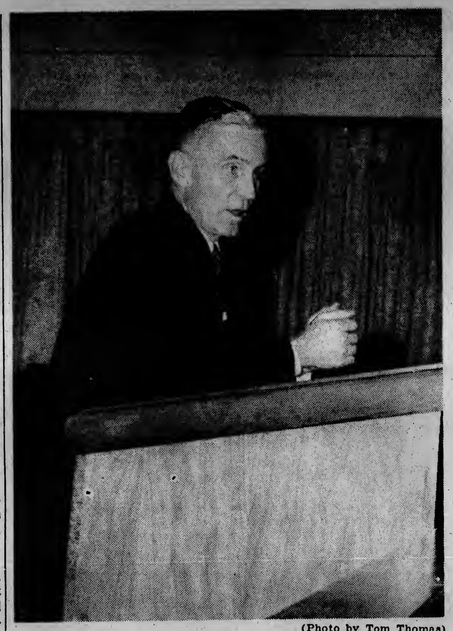
Prof. Howe Justifies Activism In Courts At Last Law Forum

With Professor Mark DeWolfe Howe of the Harvard Law School saying 'the legislatures have failed to do their job," and Dean Harold Gill Reuschlein stating "the Pennsylvania legislature is the worst in dealing with the problems of re-apportionment," the final meeting of the Villanova Law Forum was brought to a close.

Howe, whose topic was "Activism and Neutralism in Constitutional Law," stated that the activists would be equal to the liberal wing of the court, while the neutralist would be represented by those who are more conservative.

As opposed to the activists, the neutralists see the court as very limited and feel its powers should be used with restraint. The court should protect people from the excess of the federal government.

Professor Howe found justification for activism in today's court in the areas of segregation, re-apportionment and criminal procedure.



Concerning segregation, he stated that it was a great step when the court decided segregated education was unconstitutional. "In the area of segregation the court has done what is right."

If the civil rights legislation does not pass it will again show the inability of Congress to do anything.

Speaking on re-apportionment, he said that some types of representation must be set up. The courts have reminded the legislatures to do something about this, but they have failed.

The courts have again taken the initiative in criminal procedure because others have not acted.

If we get an activist court it is because we have a neutralist legislature. "Our real problem is that of somehow creating a responsible Congress and government and not relying on the courts to save us from ourselves."

The TNT production, "Who's Afraid of Utah Wolf," will open on Thursday, May 7 and play till Sunday, May 10. There will be a special for Juniors and their Mother s during Junior Week.

Although the club is only open to the male students it is traditional for the nurses to assist in the production through costume designing, make up and acting as hostesses for the performances. All interested girls should contact the president of the organization, Rusty Miller.

This year a full-sized publicity campaign is being launched. In former years a large audience attended the productions but due to the lack of publicity the affair was poorly attended.

Help is needed on the stage crew. Anybody wishing to help may contact Paul Varello, 306 Fedigan Hall.

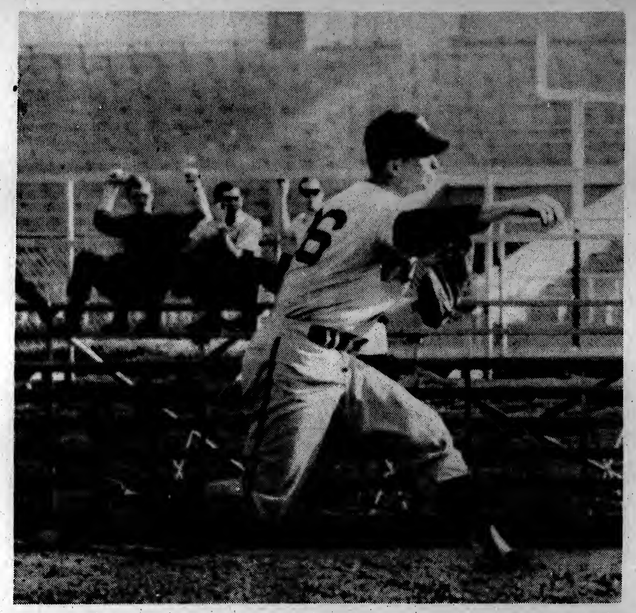
hand differs from the right hand in ring sizes. The student should also consider the wide range of weights in which his ring may be made. Regardless of the weight, however, all rings will look the same on a person's hand.



More Information

The most pertinent information involves — the color gold which is prefered — green, yellow, or white; the stone of their preference — ranging from Amethyst to the white Sapphire; and the three initials which he will want engraved on their ring. Complete information, regarding all types of rings and stones which may be procured, can be obtained in the University Shop.

All orders must be accompanied by a minimum deposit of $10. The balance is due when the ring is delivered. Rings will be held by the University Shop for a period of sixty days after they are received. If not picked up in this time, the rings will be returned to the manufacturer and deposit will be forfeited to the manufacturer. Likewise, since all rings are made to an individual's personal specifications, orders cancelled after May 15, 1964, will also result in forfeit of the $10 deposit.

Class Pins

In addition, class pins may be obtained to match the ring, if one should like to have a charm for his mother, fiancé, or "friend". These pins can be purchased at a lower price if one places his order for them at the same time as he orders the class ring. Likewise, for dad, Dieges and Clust offers a beautiful pair of Villanova cuff links in various colors of 10 karet gold.

Rugby Team Downs Philadelphians; Prepares To Meet Washington Club

by Al Lupcho

The Villanova Rugby Club beat the Philadelphia Rugby Club 21-0 at Swarthmore College Saturday. Playing its finest game of the year, the Wildcats ran, passed, and kicked themselves to an impressive victory over the tough Philadelphia team.

The game was played at Swarthmore in order to try to stimulate the Swarthmore students into forming a team. The field was not equipped with goal posts so conversions were not attempted after each touchdown. A try is worth three points and a conversion is awarded two points.

Bill Glenn, a soph forward got Villanova off on the right foot as he scampered six yards for the first score. Freshman wing, Jeff Houlihan, scored on a short run to increase the halftime lead to 6-0.

The second half was all Villanova. Captain Ed Wilkinson, a senior fullback, started the parade across the goal line with a 10 yard run.

Future Games

The team will need an equal performance to defeat the tough Washington Rugby Club in D.C. next week.

The victory made the team's season record three wins and two losses this year with a clean 2-0 slate in league play.

son for the 'Cats defeat and he was the Tigers' starting pitcher Tom Scott.

In the bottom of the second with the bases loaded Scott drilled a single to center and drove in two runs.

His performance from the mound was likewise devastating. He held the Villanova nine to four hits all of which came in the first five innings.

The starting pitcher for the 'Cats was Vic Majewski who was relieved by Porello in the fifth after allowing the winning runs to cross the plate.

Villanova's next game is against Rutgers this afternoon at the 'Cats home field. Gaue time is 2:30.

So far this season the 'Cats are playing as expected. Although they have lost four games the hardest part of the season is behind them.

One phase of the baseball scene, however, is brighter than expected. Villanova is in first place in the Big Five competiton, the spot expected to be held by Temple, last year's M.A.C. champions. The 'Cats, by beating LaSalle and Temple, have for the time being upset the pre-season picks and plan on finishing number one in the Big Five.

Intramural Department Plans Busy Spring Sports Calendar

by Buzz Langan

The Intramurals softball league officially opened on March 23. After a dismal start because of nine rainouts, the six team league is now in full swing. There are numerous upcoming events on the spring sports calendar.

The Red Cross Water Safety Course will be given April 28. All those interested may sign up at the pool from April 22 thru April 28. The only qualification is that those signing up must have their current senior life saving card.

On Wednesday, April 29 the Intramural Track Meet will be held at the stadium. Applications are available at the intramural office in Alumni Hall. There will be ten events.

Contestants can enter into any three of the ten events. Medals will be awarded for the first three places in each event. Competition begins at 3:30 in the stadium.

The Junior-Senior Athletic Day originally scheduled for May 6 has been moved forward to May 5. Competition begins at 3:30 on Sullivan Field.

The volley ball league began competition on April 25. There are sixteen teams and the games are at 4:30 and 5:30. The Snuffers led by Joe McGill are defending champs and are expected to repeat last year's performance.

Each team is scheduled to play six games. The volley ball playoffs will be held May 11, 12 and 13. Medallions with the Villanova crest will be presented to the winners.

Where are they all hiding?

The who?

4. The Demograph—it's this gigantic population counter that Equitable put up at the World's Fair.

It tells you where the girls are?

5. It gives you the up-to-the-minute story of the population explosion.

Friendly Foolishness

Man On The Spot

by Steve Freind

Ara Parseghian is a man on the spot. When the youthful crewcut left his post at Northwestern to direct the football fortunes of Notre Dame, he assumed a job guaranteed to create ulcers in record time. The bleeding remains of his two predecessors are grim illustrations of Paraseghian's problems.

To appreciate the complexity of Parseghian's position, it is necessary to realize the tradition of the team he now commands. For forty years the Fighting Irish enjoyed a reign of unparalleled grid success and South Bend was acknowledged as the football capital of the world. The mere mention of Notre Dame produced visions of pigskin glory as names like Rockne, Gipp, Leahy and Lujack stole the sports headlines.

The entire country was captivated by the Irish spirit and the Victory March became a national hymn. The famed Subway Alumni, composed of men from every walk of life, adopted Notre Dame as their own, flocking to see their heroes in action.

Rather than frowning on such publicity, Notre Dame's administration welcomed it. Winning football teams meant a happy alumni and a happy alumni is always characterized by extreme generosity. Aided by donations from grateful graduates and adoring fans, the university expanded rapidly. Requests for admission poured in from across the country and there seemed to be no end to the happy cycle in South Bend.

Abrupt End

This peaceful setting was abruptly ended in 1956 as Terry Brennan posted a 2-8 record, worst in Notre Dame history. When Brennan failed to field a powerhouse the next two years, he was dismissed for "failure to execute the university's commitment to excellence" and the sparkle of the Golden Dome began to fade.

After screening a dozen candidates, the administration called in Joe Kuharich to retain the Irish prestige. When Kuharich failed to produce a winner, Notre Dame students brought out the ropes and Kuharich decided it was time to retire.

Parseghian

Parseghian's appointment set off a chain of indignant reactions. Loyal Irish fans considered a non-alumnus head coach the greatest heresy since Martin Luther began tacking papers on church doors. There was also Parseghian's record at Northwestern.

His 34-33 log did not exactly place him in the Rockne-Leahy category and his Wildcat squads were noted for their inability to win the big ones. Starting quickly every year, Parseghian's teams consistently caught "rose fever" in November and never were able to win a New Year's trip to Pasadena.

Lack of Talent?

Many feel that, regardless of Parseghian's ability, the Irish will never again regain their national gridiron supremacy. The theory goes that stepped-up recruiting by other major schools has permanently sealed off Notre Dame's pipeline of talent. Hampered by strict scholastic regulations, the Irish no longer receive the material required to field a consistent winner.

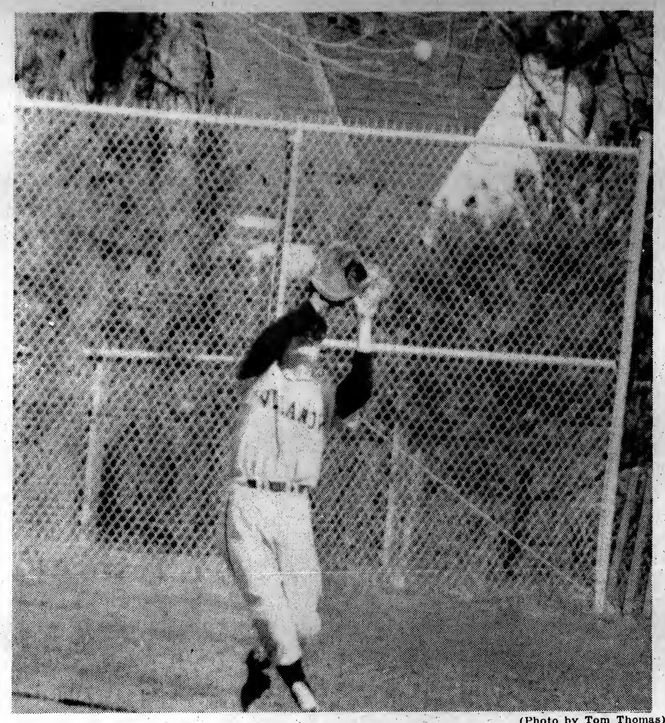
A quick glace at Notre Dame's roster will destroy that opinion. Jim Snowden, a 6-4, 240 lb. fullback who runs the 100 in 10.0 was unable to crack into the Irish backfield and had to settle for a tackle position on the second unit.

Quarterback Frank Budka saw only part time action during his career at Notre Dame. During his high school days he consistently outshined a neighborhood rival named George Mira, who happened to be a three time All-American at the University of Miami. Each December Notre Dame leads all colleges in the number of players drafted by the pros. The talent is still there. The results are not.

The crisis at South Bend can be solved by a coach who can once again harness the Irish spirit. Ara Parseghian may be the man, but he had better hurry. The Irish are an impatient breed.

'Cat Lacrosse Club Defeated By Washington And Lee, 20-1

by John Barrow



The Wildcat LaCrosse team traveled over 1,000 miles this weekend, only to receive a 20-1 pasting at the hands of Washing and Lee's nationally rank sticksters.

Despite the score, coach Jack Smythe was heard to remark that this was the Cats' best game thus far, and that they were just outclassed by the Virginians from Lexington.

Villanova with only seven reserves, was outmanned almost two to one, and just could not keep up with the Southerners lightning offense.

Goalie Jack Wehrum caught the brunt of the Wally Jones type attack as the Generals fired 81 shots at the net. Wehrum had an unbelievable total of 34 saves. Captain Bill White tallied the lone Villanova goal.

The Villanova stickmen next play Fairleigh-Dickinson at Madison, New Jersey next Saturday and then return home to meet Dickinson on May 2 in back of the stadium.

VU Baseball Team Loses Twice Bows To Penn State, Princeton

by Jim Proud

Over the past week-end the Villanova baseball team ran its season record to 4-3 with two losses, one to Penn State on Friday and another to Princeton the following day.

Penn State

On Friday afternoon the 'Cats lost to the Nittany Lions in extra innings by the score of 8-4 in their seventh home appearance.

Although the Villanova nine took an early lead on the strength of two two-run spurts in the first and third innings a rally in the top of the tenth accounted for four runs and a Villanova loss.

Starting pitcher for the 'Cats, Bill Smith, allowed seven hits and four runs before being relieved by Ed Porello in the top of the tenth.

The starting and winning pitcher for Penn State was Dick Nye, who held the 'Cats to six hits, four of which came in the first three innings.

The leading performance for the 'Cats was turned in by centerfielder Edwards who was 2 for 5 with one run-batted-in. He also scored two runs himself.

Wildcats Take Iona Relays On Preas' Points In Last Event

by Bob McIntyre

Villanova's redoubtable track team won the Iona Relays at Van Cortlandt Park last Saturday afternoon. The Wildcats, in a pre-Penn Relays workout, ran off with three major races and the team title as they totaled up 44 points to defeat Manhattan who had 43 points.

Chuck Preas is a sophomore, from Toledo, Ohio, that not too many people have heard of up till last Saturday afternoon.

But that is all changed now for if it had not been for his two points in the final event, the triple jump, the Cats wouldn't have won the meet. Preas, called by Jumbo Elliott, "My All-American boy, he can do anything," ripped down the asphalt runway on his final jump knowing he would have to move from fifth to fourth place to win the meet.

He did just that, as he exerted a hop-step-jump that put him justt one-half inch in front of Ed Odom, of Morgan State, 44 feet, 8½ inches to 44-8.

Never Stops Trying

"He has tried just about everything and its a good thing for us he never stopped trying," said Elliott afterwards. Besides the heroics of Preas, the 'Cats had smashed out three relay victories and individual wins by Ken Caniglio in the 120-high hurdles and Dick Kurnik in the shut put.

The four mile relay team set one of five records. Noel Carroll, who was marred during the winter by a charley horse, ran well as did Tommy Sullivan, despite a cold, and Jimmy Orr, whose legs of 4:17 in the four mile and 1:56.4 in the two mile relays got both teams off to a winning start.

Livers Works Hard

Larry Livers, the hurdler and quarter-miler, ran third in the 440-yard hurdles and ran legs on the 440 and mile relay teams as Coach Elliott tried to give his squad the rugged afternoon they need in order to do well at Penn next week.

The 'Cats should figure in at least four events — the sprint medley; two mile, four mile and distance medley relays — maybe even the mile relay.

Manhattan piled up an early 25-10 lead on Villanova after five events. But as in the indoor IC4A meet when the Jaspers lost to Villanova, 22-21, the Wildcats came on when they had to. The record 4 mile relay team of Orr, Al Adams (4:23.2), Sullivan (4:21.3) and Vic Zwolak (4:15.3) won by 70 yards over Fordham.

Sprint Medley

The sprint medley team of Stan Koslowski (49.2 in the 440), Earl Horner, Marsh Uzzle and Carroll (1:53.2 in the 880), beat St. John's by four yards as Carroll toyed with Redman star Tom Bauer, passing him with ease at the end.

The two mile team of Orr, Zwolak (1:53.1), Adams (1:53.8) and Sullivan (1:53.9) ripped Seton Hall by 20 yards. The 'Cats got an assist when Seton Hall anchor Bob Budwieg dropped his baton on the path, although he trailed at the time by seven yards.

Soph Caniglio won the 120-hurdles by a full yard over American University's Jim Hackett in 14.6.

Kurnik, in the shot put, won with a heave of 55 feet, 3½ inches. Thus with this victory behind them, the high flying Wildcats seem to be the team to watch in the 1964 Penn Relays to be held this Saturday at Franklin Field in Philadelphia.

Festivities Of Junior Week End Toils Of Class Officers

by Don Leber

The Junior Class officers are presently culminating their service to the class with the presentation of an extremely-well-planned and hopefully successful Junior Week.

John Emery, class president and a graduate of Phillipsburg High School in Phillipsburg, New Jersey is an English major. In his sophomore year John was chairman of the Recreation Facilities Committee for the Orphans Outing.

Known to almost everyone as "Jack" John has been described by those closest to him as honest, sincere and very capable. Emery feels that the Class of '65 has had a very successful year even though at times things were difficult. He feels that it was worth the effort and he would certainly do it again. He also said that he enjoyed the job, and through it met many interesting and stimulating people.

Our vice president believes that the V.P. should do whatever is in the best interest of the class Charlie Zaccaria hails from the land of the early patriots, Revere, Massachusetts. Charlie is in the College of Commerce and Finance as a marketing major, and he was also the Villanova wildcat at all the athletic events this past year.

Besides holding the office of vice president, Charlie has been an active member of the Spirit Committee, the cheerleading squad and the Blue Key Society.

John Smock, this year's secretary believes that the most important part of the secretary's job is to assist the president in carrying out the duties of his office.. He, also in the College of Commerce and Finance, is an accounting major and lives in Elmhurst, Illinois.

John is president-elect of the Blue Key Society and he is also the resident representative for C.&F.

This year's Class Treasurer, Carl Dolente, feels that the job entailed more work than he expected. Carl is an English major and hails from Cherry Hill, New Jersey. Besides being treasurer, Carl held two other chairmanships this year, Charity Weekend and Shamokinaki collections.

Reverend James Ryan Is Junior Class Moderator

by Bill Manfred

This year, our junior year, has been one in which we have felt our maturity and importance on the Villanova campus. As juniors we have had many new experiences and have engaged in many new activities, such as Charity Weekend and the numerous events of Junior Week. Throughout our many activities, we have had the guidance and inspiration of the Rev. James Ryan, OSA. Although Fr. Ryan is quite small in stature, his inspiration and help have not been proportionate to his size as he has been one of the reasons for the success of our class activities.

Father Ryan, was born in St. Louis, Missouri, but lived most of his life in Philadelphia. He attended St. Joseph's Prep in Philadelphia before he enrolled at Villanova as a civil engineer. After his graduation from Villanova, Father entered the Good Counsel Novitiate after which he spent another year at Villanova. Following this, he studied for four years at the Augustinian College in Washington and was ordained in February, 1963.

Father Ryan holds a bachelor of civil engineering degree and a Masters degree in Theology.

Class Leaders Gain Academic Honors

by Bill Manfred

During this week the Junior class is spot-lighted for its achievements in the many aspects of life at Villanova. Therefore it is only fitting and proper that the academic leaders of the class be recognized and lauded for their superior achievement, an achievement which has been gained only through perseverance, hard work, and devotion to the scholarly life.

Commanding the honors in the Junior Class are Robert Vacchiano, an Education major with an accumulative average of 3.89, followed closely by Joseph Karnicky, a Chemistry major with 3.87, Francis Farrell, also a Chemistry major with a 3.84, and Rachael Ramspacher, a Nurse with a 3.81. Top Performers Seen At Junior Song Fest

by Mary Ann Rowland

The Junior Week concert, traditionally a high spot in the week's activities, will be held this year on Friday, May 8. The Four Freshmen, the Phoenix Singers and Carolyn Hester will be appearing in the Field House at 8:30 p.m.

Concert Chairman Ed Bride commenting on the evening's talent said, "Instead of trying to get all the top-name, top-priced talent that so often appeals as a great way to a small part of the class, I feel that, in these three groups, we have an assortment of top-rate talent which will appeal in a big way to a great part of the audience. We've managed to secure groups from the popular/jazz, folk and traditional veins of American music. I am enthusiastically looking forward to—first, a sellout crowd, and second, an enjoyable evening."

A performance by the Four Freshmen combines fresh, imaginative arrangements with outstanding musicianship. Bill Flanigan sings the top voice, plays trombone and doubles on string bass; Ross Barbour is master of ceremonies, sings third voice, and plays drums and trumpet. Ken Albus, the bass voice of the group, plays trumpet and mellophone while Bill Comstock sings second voice and plays guitar.

In the year that this trio has been together, the Phoenix Singers have had sensational impact on the folk-singing scene. In addition to scoring as guests on the "Tonight," "Today," and "Hootenanny" television shows, they became pets of the "Capitol set" during their engagement at The Shadows in Washington, D.C. Their albums, "The Phoenix Singers" and "The Phoenix Singers in Concert," have met with instant success.

Texas born Carolyn Hester is one of the fastest-rising performers on today's folk-singing horizon. She has headlined at all the country's top folk clubs, on network television, and at college campuses. "Cashbox" magazine states, "She displays an emotion-packed, stunning, wide-range voice that immediately sets her apart." Her latest album is "This Life I'm Living," and is regarded as a masterpiece of the folk idiom.

Tickets are priced at $2.50 for balcony seats and $3.00 for orchestra. They are currently on sale in the Pie Shoppe from 9:30 to 3:30 Monday through Thursday and from 9:30 to 2:30 on Friday. Reservations may also be made by calling Villanova at LA 5-4600 and asking for the Student Council Office.

We are quite confident that this concert will assure one an evening of pleasant listening. It will include three examples of the wide range of sounds that are the vogue in American music today. No matter what an individual's taste in music, it is assured that all persons hearing the Four Freshmen, the Phoenix Singers and Carolyn Hester will find among them an outstanding performance geared to their personal preference.

Unsung Junior Heroes Get Into 'Sing' Of It

by Mary Ann Rooney and Eileen Walter

As you read through the pages of this Junior Week Villanovan you will find the names of the many students who have represented the Class of '65 in various campus activities such as the Student Government Association and athletics. However, there are many juniors who have contributed their time and services to the success of the class and University functions and who have received little or no recognition for their work. In this article, we would like to tell you about a few of these "Class Unknowns."

Some of the most active members of the class are people like Denney Driscoll who was co-chairman of the Junior Ring Mass with Tony Pennacchia and is now ticket chairman for the Junior Dinner Dance. Both men are also members of the Junior Steering Committee and participate actively in all class functions.

Ken Curtin contributed his time and efforts to the class as an Orientation Committeeman and then as chairman of Charity Weekend's Orphans Outing. Dick McCormack as chairman of the Charity Ball, and Don Pellecchia as head of the tremendously successful Missing Link Contest which saw junior Mike Strofolino as winner, helped to make this particular weekend a great success.

John Casey is another one of our unknown heroes who has participated in such functions as the Sophomore Orphans Outing, the Junior Steering Committee and now is ticket chairman for Mother's Day.

Any Junior who wants to get even with the fellow who hung up his baby picture for everyone to gape at should get in touch with Al DeCotis, chairman of the Diaper Dan Contest, or his right hand man Bob Canton. These two men have given much of their free time to decorating or selling tickets for various class activities.

Naturally, we can't forget to mention our class actors, Sam Iorio, who played Alice in Wonderland on the Homecoming Float, Denny LaHiff, in charge of entertainment for the Athletic Smoker and Santa Claus at the Orphans Party, and Conal and Bill Byrne, active members of the University's theater group, Belle Masque.

The literary talents of our class must not be overlooked either, for the paper you hold in your hand was arranged and coordinated by Junior Tom Bruderle next year's Villanovan editor-in-chief, and the Class of '65 yearbook will be edited by Bob Williams, the Divisions Editor of the present Belle Air.

Al Starr, chairman and designer of the Homecoming Float, Paul Varillo, chairman of the decorations committee for the Charity Ball, and Ken Cronin, chief sign builder and painter, have lent their artistic talents to many class endeavors. And since we have mentioned literature and art we cannot forget music. This brings to mind such people as Eddie Bride, chairman of the Junior Week Concert and the Villanova Intercollegiate Jazz Festival, and Rich Pease and John Calabria, co-chairmen of the entertainment for the Junior Dinner Dance.

Last but certainly not least, for they have worked so hard for the success of all class functions, we must mention our unsung heroines. Two of the most active are Justine Nebus and Mimi Fierro. Both the girls are members of the Steering Committee and served as co-chairwomen of the program committee for the Sophomore Cotillion. Mimi was a member of the Freshman Orientation Committee, and Justine now serves as co-chairwoman of the publicity committee for Junior Class activities.

Certainly we have mentioned but a few of the people who have served the Class of '65 so diligently for the past three years. We thank them and all of the other members of the class who have helped to make its activities successful and worthwhile.

Steering Committee Handles Activities

When this year's Junior Steering Committee assumed the responsibilities of guiding the Junior Class activities, it consisted of 30 members who had been selected by the class officers last spring. However, because of the unusual interest which the committee generated, it was decided to open membership to anyone who attended three consecutive meetings. Consequently, the membership has increased to 53 members who have since taken an active interest and participation in all of our class activities. Selling tickets, making posters, and executing the various events were only a part of their work.

Throughout the year committee members have worked on numerous activities. In October, juniors decorated the Homecoming Float under the chairmanship of Al Starr. The Ring Mass and Communion Breakfast, under the co-chairmanship of Denis Driscoll and Tony Pennacchia, took place in November. A generous scholarship check from the Junior Class was presented to St. John's Orphanage because of the success of Charity Weekend in December.

Since last spring the class officers and members of the Committee have been formulating plans for the final activity of the class—Junior Week. It is hoped that the activities of Junior Week—Mother's Day, Muff Day, the Athletic Smoker, the Concert, and the Dinner Dance—will be enjoyable and successful for all those who attend.

President Jack Emery, Chairman of the Steering Committee, has said that his duty as a class officer has been greatly lightened because of the help committee members have given him. He feels that the foundations for the major decisions made by the officers originated within the committee. He also has stated that he is grateful for the willingness of the members to help in any way and at all times.

Ernest Abate, A&S; Vincent Arpa, Eng.; John Barrow, Eng.; Mary Jane Bradley, Nurs.; James Brant, A&S; Edward Bride, A&S; John Calabria, C&F; John Casey, A&S; Judith Colla, Nurs.; Faith Connor, Nurs.; Kenneth Cronin, A&S.

Dear Mother,

Mother's Day at Villanova has become a cherished tradition of the Junior Class of Villanova University. It is more than just a day set aside for you to see the campus and participate in the various planned activities. This is the day on which we honor you for the love and guidance you have extended and for the countless sacrifices you have made on our behalf.

It is seldom that we tell you exactly how much you really mean to us, but I can sincerely say that you are aware of our feelings. When we have achieved a particular success, you are the first to know about and understand our happiness. You are the one in whom we seek solace and advice and in whom we confide our secrets. For us men you are the pattern of the woman which we hope to find in our future wives.

You have known by our acts of every day life what we feel towards you. Unfortunately there are times when we have undoubtedly hurt you unintentionally; these are numbered among the many sacrifices for which only God can reward you.

Therefore, Mother, today is your day, a day when we are thankful that He has graced our lives with one such as you. For this we will be forever grateful and shall forever be indebted to you for the love you have bestowed on us.

Sincerely yours,

John W. Emery

Junior Smoker Features Football And Baseball

by Don Leber

A flickering movie film, a low filmy cloud of cigarette and haze, and the bantering, lighthearted comments of the May evening arm-chair quarterbacks will constitute the atmosphere of the annual Junior Smoker this Wednesday evening in the Day-Hop Cafeteria in Dougherty Hall. The Smoker is scheduled to begin at 7:30 p.m.

Tri-Chairmanship

This year's Smoker is under the tri-chairmanship of juniors Bob Spellmeyer, Dennis LaHiff and Jack Sargeant, and it promises to be better than all the previous Smokers of past Junior Weeks.

This year's program will be headlined by two sports films including the 1963 N.F.L. Championship game between the Chicago Bears and New York Giants held on the frigid turf of Wrigley Field in Chicago.

The other film will be the championship game of the Holiday Festival which saw Villanova defeat a determined band of Minnesota Gophers by a 77-73 score.

Bragg To Speak

The main speaker of the evening will be former Olympic and world pole-vault record holder Don Bragg, certainly one of the finest athletes that Villanova has produced in the sports world.

An award will be given to the most valuable junior athlete. Fifty "good guy" awards will also be given out at the same time.

As an added inducement for attendance as if the films were not enough, free hoagies and soda will be served. Only juniors will be admitted upon presentation of their matriculation card.

This solemn looking but privately "devil-may-care" collection of individuals are members of the Junior Class who will sit on next year's SGA.

Junior Class Contributes Greatly To SGA's Accomplishments And Activities

by John Roberts

Perhaps the most prominent and influential student organization on the Villanova campus is the Student Council, or as it has been renamed this year, the Student Government Association.

This past year's Student Council developed into a mature and influential student governing body and its fine record speaks for itself.

The achievements of this past year's SGA have been many and varied and the success of the organization is due in no small part to the many active junior representatives to this student government body.

The nineteen juniors on the Student Council were responsible for implementing a large amount of important legislation and effectively contributed to the smooth and efficient functioning of the organization. These men performed many drab and thankless but necessary jobs and they deserve our thanks and appreciation for their diligence and hard work.

Now that we have recognized these Juniors collectively, let us look at them individually.

Tom Furst, who combined dynamic personality and effective leadership in serving as this year's Vice-Chairman, is probably the most outstanding personality from the Junior class to this past year's Student Council, and this view was recently reflected by SGA when they elected him to the highest position on the Council, that of president of the organization.

Tom, who is an economics major, hails from Glen Cove, Long Island and attended Chaminade high school. He has been a boarder for three years and was twice re-elected since his freshman year to represent the Commerce and Finance boarders on the SGA. Besides serving on the SGA, Tom was also a member of the Junior Steering Committee, and has been selected for membership in the Blue Key.

On the SGA, Tom initiated and was personally in charge of Student Council Day. He was also responsible for implementing legislation calling for new sound equipment for the Field House.

After graduation next year, Tom plans to attend graduate business school at the University of Pennsylvania.

Ernie Abate is another prominent member of the SGA. Ernie who was recently elected to the presidency of the class of 1965 for his Senior year has served on the SGA this year in the capacity of Arts and Sciences representative. Ernie also distinguished himself this year by taking over the job of Secretary of SGA when the reigning Secretary was forced to resign because of academic difficulties. Ernie, by the way, is the proud holder of a fine dean's list cumulative average.

Jack Emery, the president of this year's Junior Class is another prominent member of SGA. Besides his many responsibilities as class president, and his active participation on the SGA, especially the Spirit Committee, Jack is also a member of the varsity baseball team.

Bob Cowan, the quiet man on SGA, is the representative of the Chemistry club and this year was elected to the position of Treasurer for the 1964-65 SGA.

Dick McCormick, the resident engineering representative to this years SGA, is also the co-chairman of the Publicity Committee of the Student Council and also serves on the Spirit Committee.

Jack Ryan, representing DPE fraternity on the SGA this year, is co-chairman of the Social Affairs Committee of the Student Council and in this capacity served as chairman of this past year's concert series. Jack so ably distinguished himself this year that he was appointed to an Executive Vice-Presidency for next year.

John Roberts, the Turf 'n Tinsel club representative to the Student Council, is the co-chairman of the Social Affairs Committee of the SGA and in this capacity he served as chairman of the Student Council Dance this past year. Besides his numerous activities on the SGA, he is also Feature editor of the school newspaper, the Villanovan.

Dave Moore, the Commerce and Finance representative for the Day-hops of that division, is a hard working member of both the Social Affairs and the Ways and Means Committee. Dave has also been chosen as one of next years Executive Vice-Presidents.

Bill Manfred is another hard working member of SGA. Bill, the Arts Day-hop representative to SGA is a member of the Student Activities Committee and is looked to for extensive leadership in next year's SGA.

Dennis Addonizio, the co-chairman of the Student Union and Special Problems Committee, did an outstanding job this year, especially at the helm of the Movie Committee and is looked to next year for a repeat performance.

Additional active Junior members of SGA are Pete Mangan and Frank Matricardi of the Religious Affairs Committee: Joe Heffernan and Frank Escobar of the Cultural Affairs Committee; Joe Corradino, a member of the Senate and Spirit Committee; Bill Blauvelt of the Student Activities and Social Affairs Committees, Harold Daniels of the Publicity Committee; and last but not least, Ken Algazy of the Biology Club, George Esser of the Villanova Singers, and Dennis McNenny of the Spanish Club.

Writer Sean O'Faolain To Lecture On Fiction

Sean O'Faolain, famous Irish short story writer, will speak on the "Essential Pleasures of Fiction" on Tuesday at 8:00 p.m. in the University Field House. His talk, a highlight of Junior Week, will be given in conjunction with the Villanova Student Government Association Forum.

Besides this talk, O'Faolain will give two day lectures, sponsored by the English Department. He will discuss the short story and read some excerpts from his own works at 1:30 p.m. in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

The Erin-born writer will also speak on a recent phase of Irish literature in a talk to be given at 10:30 a.m.

O'Faolain, born in Cork, Ireland in 1900, took an active part in the Irish Rebellion before earning his degree from the National University, Dublin.

The holder of a Master's degree from Harvard, O'Faolain considers this degree the result of an ability to converse on any subject at any time. He is also a member of the Irish Royal Academy of Letters.

In 1929, O'Faolain was a lecturer in English at Boston College and also spent four years at St. Mary's College, Strawberry Hill from 1929 to 1933. He has been the Director of the Arts Council of Ireland since 1957.

One of the most popular lecturers in America today, the Irish wit was writer-in-residence at Princeton University between 1959 and 1961. He is presently on his second tour as a Phi Beta Kappa "visiting scholar" at numerous colleges across the country.

Recapitulation Of Undergraduate Days Elicits Feelings Of Sorrow And Ecstasy

By Judy Colla and Alan Sallee

It was with shy confidence, unquenchable anxiety and mass confusion that we approached the Villanova campus in September 1961. And there, before our eyes, were the same awe-inspiring Twin Spires of the Chapel, the magnificent beauty of the campus green and the majestic serenity of it all.

But wait! What is this madness we gazed upon? Pants cuffed six inches above the ankle? Blue and white bowties? And those finky-looking beanies! They must be kidding, we thought privately to ourselves. This absolutely cannot, by any stretch of anyone's imagination, be college . . . can it?

Our question was answered about a minute after registration. Not only did we have to spend an hour signing our names a hundred times or more and posing for mug shots with our student numbers, but we also were forcibly introduced to those wise upperclassmen called "White Hats." And so, before too much time passed, we reached the inevitable conclusion that—yes, this definitely was college and—no, they weren't kidding us at all.

It was, in fact, with reluctant humility that we swallowed our pride, rolled up the cuffs of our pants, adjusted our bargain-basement blue and white ties, and donned those loathesome objects of familiarity—and you know what familiarity breeds—called "dinks."

After a week of marching en masse and waiting in that unfathomable line to the Book Store, we began to feel more and more like persecuted Pie-Shoppers than frazzled frosh.

The first social event of the year was the football game against West Chester. We sat in a bloc at the stadium and sang "V" for Villanova till our voices cracked. We won the game but we received from that victory something greater than the laurels of winning. We took with us something that was to build and perfect itself in the next four years — our class unity and the Villanova spirit.

Following the game, we found our way back to the dorm without getting more than two fines from the O. C. Whoever thinks about the second line of the third stanza of the Alma Mater after such a smashing football victory except the White Hats? Having spent five whole days on a big college campus, we thought we should assume the cool, sophisticated role of b.m.o.c. However, it was Saturday night and we had very little to do (but unpack our trunk) so we prepared ourselves for the enigma of every college man—the blind date.

The weeks quickly slipped by and before we knew it Muff Day had hit the Villanova campus. Our class showed its unity even in those early days in our life at V. U. for we fought the sophomores tooth and nail to abandon our "Stetsons" forever. But by some miscarriage of justice (and miscalculation on the scorekeeper's part) we were forced to concede the honors of the day to the sophomores.

After mid-terms were over, we thought ourselves deserving of a pat or two on the back, and so with our feet pointing eastward we found our way to that "haven for the homeless" on the Pike—Kelly's.

Before the first semester was over, that most unpleasant of Villanova traditions had to be fulfilled—exams. During that week, no one became more familiar with coffee, No-Doz and drug hangover than us. But we managed to pass our courses and get an A in attendance to boot—which really is quite a feat, when one subtracts the actual number of classes attended from the number of classes held.

Second semester brought our class leaders to the political foreground. So clearly can we remember the Pie Shoppe Campaigns at 10:30 a.m. on Thursday. Our class was well-represented in the coming year by the officers we elected that day: President John Clancy; Vice-President Charlie Zaccaria; Secretary Dianne Naples; and Treasurer Greg Shorten.

Then suddenly the season of spring was upon us, the season in which a young man's fancy turns to thought of picnics and Valley Forge, et cetera, et cetera. The skies couldn't have been bluer nor our English classes more conducive to picnic-planning.

Before too long, though, that distasteful tradition of our Alma Mater was back for its semi-annual visit. Suffice it to say that our left-over No-Doz from last semester was not wasted after all.

Our parting goodbyes were sentimental and memorable. With glasses raised on high, we toasted our champagne punch to ourselves, to our classmates, to friendship forever, and to Villanova. And with our trunks on our backs, we headed homeward for the summer.

By the time we reached sophomore year we considered ourselves pretty much settled into the role of a Villanovan. We had successfully escaped the grim reaper who weeds out freshmen who don't study or who haven't earned sufficient brownie points to enable them to continue on to sophomore year.

THE PHOENIX SINGERS

This year Orientation week was marked by the purposeful pursuit of incoming freshmen. The purpose: to turn a motley mob of post-highschoolers into a vague semblance of polished Villanovans. Charlie Zaccaria was honored as "outstanding O. C." by his peers and cohorts.

"Mardi Gras," our Soph Cotillion, opened the fall festivities of the class. Don Pellecchia as chairman of the affair, was largely responsible for its success. The Saturday morning of this our "Sophomore Weekend" class members attended Mass in the University Chapel before embarking for Delaware and the football game between the Villanova Wildcats and the Blue Hens of the University of Delaware.

We returned to Pennsylvania and Villanova in enough time to get home and rested up for the invasion on the Moose Hall in Norristown and an evening of heavenly havoc—the Class Party.

The winter passed fleetingly. We survived our "finals" once more and left V. U. for the semester break feeling ever proud of the showing of our classmates on the basketball court.

With the start of the second semester spring had sprung. And with spring came picnics, parties at the barn, and politics. Our class chose Jack Emery for president and Charlie Zaccaria for vice-president respectively. With these leaders we knew our Junior year would be the best ever.

At last . . . our rings arrive! truly signifying our status as Juniors and upperclassmen. Under the direction of Jack Emery we planned and executed a memorable Charity Weekend. The Charity Ball had as its theme "'Twas the Night Before Christmas" and was appropriately seasonal. Keeping with the season, the spirit of giving was manifest when Villanova students and their dates went to St. John's Orphanage and claimed their "Johnnie" for a day of shopping, movies and just plain fun.

As you might expect, our sports program in Freshman year started as a disaster. On a rather warm, sultry fall afternoon our class did manage to win the tug-o-war. Aside from this minor feather in our caps we were soundly whipped 90-75. From this point till the present time, our sports program has ever moved forward.

Football under Alex Bell has been a real pleasure from the opening game with West Chester in 1961 to the Quantico game in 1963. In between, we find such highlights as the Homecoming victories: 1961, V.M.I. 22-0, the 1962 14-0 win over Detroit. In addition, the team made two bowl appearances, the Sun Bowl in 1961 and the Liberty Bowl in 1962. The men in our class who made great contributions to make these seasons successful include: Greg Fay, Ed Stranix, Mike Manger, Dick Sernyak, Tom O'Connor, Chappy Moore, Mike Strofolino, Jack McDonald, Mike Buono, Tom Smith, Bill Quigley, Emmet Michaels and next fall's Co-Captains John McDonnell and Al Atkinson.

Next comes the Jack Kraft Era with junior class men like Jim Washington, George Leftwich, Eric Erickson, Alan Sallee, Ben Kenny and Sam Iorio. In our Freshman year, the team won the Quaker City Big Five Championship and went on to finish second in the Eastern Regionals of the NCAA.

The season of 1962-63 saw Jim Washington do a fine job and lead the team to a 19-10 record. They were again Co-Champions of the Big Five. The biggest thrill of the season was the upset victory over Wichita which put the 'Cats into the semi-finals of the N.I.T. All in all, this team lived up to its reputation. The 1963-64 season record was 24-4, one of the best in the history of Villanova. The squad won the ECAC Holiday Festival with victories over Dayton, Utah and Minnesota. By beating Providence in the NCAA Eastern Regional Quarter-Finals the 'Cats won the Lambert trophy as the best team in the East. Next was a trip to Raleigh, North Carolina, where we lost to Duke in the Eastern Regionals Semi-Finals. And Villanova went on to be voted seventh in the nation—the best a Villanova team has done in the last 25 years.

But now the week of weeks is here—JUNIOR WEEK. It is like no other event in our two and a half years at Villanova. It is something which we viewed as unreal when first we arrived as freshmen. In our sophomore year it was still difficult to comprehend yet, we anxiously made plans for it. As juniors it seemed as if the memorable week would never arrive, but now it has. As seniors and later Villanova graduates, names and faces and, yes, even marks of our junior year may fade into the misty haze of yester-year, yet one thing will be fresh in our minds and hearts — JUNIOR WEEK 1964.

Mothers Honored Guests In Junior Week Activities

Tradition will be upheld today as we of the Class of 1965 pay a small but sincere tribute to our honored guests—our mothers. It seems fitting that we begin our Junior Week activities by honoring those to whom we owe so much, but can repay so little. So it is with great pride that we, on this twenty-sixth anniversary of Mother's Day, say 'Thank you, Mothers, and welcome to Villanova."

Through the diligent efforts of co-chairmen Vince Arpa and John Barrow, we have prepared a day which we think you will cherish fondly and recall often. Your day on campus will begin with a 9 a.m. registration in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall. At this time, you will be given corsages, and will have a chance to view the Diaper Dan entries.

After this, a full schedule of events has been planned. At 10:30 a.m the Rev. James T. Ryan OSA, will celebrate Mass at the Shrine of Our Lady of Good Counsel. The Mass will be sung by the Villanova Singers. In the event of inclement weather, the Mass will be celebrated in the University Chapel.

Immediately following the Mass, in accordance with the traditional aspects of Junior Week, Class President John W. Emery will make the presentation of the Class Memorial, the Class tree, to the University. At 12:45 p.m., all will gather in the Field House for a luncheon prepared by Smythe Caterers.

Following the luncheon, the class of 1965's Diaper Dan, selected by a prominent mother, will be announced. The Villanova Singers, who recently returned from their mid-western tour, and the Nurses Glee Club will entertain.

1984 Convention Unites Familiar Faces To Accomplish Nothing But Jocularity

By Al Verdi, Bill Manfred and Jack Fitzpatrick

It was a nice convention and if you really want to know about it, I suppose I'll have to tell you. As you know it was the Beatle-Whig Party Convention held annually to prevent apathy from overtaking the world. This year, 1984, was a special year because our party was finally going to nominate a candidate for the Grand Exalted Ruler of the Government of the Great Earth, at least that was what had been hinted at by the one, vague letter received by everyone from our public relations department.

Having enjoyed a most pleasant plane trip from northern New York to Miami, I took a cab from the airport to the HEINZ FRANZ Hotel where all the delegates were to stay. During the ride I thought of how nice it was to be on my annual five day vacation away from my wife and twelve children. I had just stepped from my cab when a familiar voice caught my attention. "BILL MANFRED, how the hell are you?" At first I didn't recognize the voice but when I saw AL VERDI, a little chubbier now because, as I found out later, he had married a Polish girl who was a very good cook.

We both registered at the hotel and we saw that FRANCIS ZARYCH had been the first delegate to arrive. Before we could pick up our suitcases a small group of bell-boys wearing blue blazers and with large keys hung around their necks surrounded us. My largest suitcase was taken by JOHN SMOCK while KEN CURTIN took the one with the bottles in it. JACK RYAN informed us of a concert that night by some fellow named Leopold Somethingorother. As we were walking up to the room, another one of those key toting bell-boys, only this one was a female, MEG SULLIVAN, obviously there to show that there was no discrimination against females, was helping BOB SPELLMEYER up the stairs, as he had his leg in a cast.

After dressing for dinner we were led into the dining area by PAUL SHEA and were instantly asked by ED KLINE what kind of drinks we desired. While waiting, we glanced around and saw DAVE TRUE and JOE ANNUNZIATA and their wives at another table being entertained by DICK PEASE who had his set of drums right next to their table. It was easy to tell by their expressions that they were enjoying it. Finally our drinks were brought to us by BILL BELFI who placed the multi-colored vertical lined glasses on the table with great dexterity. The menu was given to us and naving read it we decided to get the next cab to Howard Johnson's. We paid for our drinks and were carefully given our change by HOWIE ULEP. As we crossed the lobby three other delegates, GEORGE STANOJEV, JERRY DECKER, and TOM CORBETT, looked up from their card game and said hello.

Luck was with us because, as we walked through the door (it was only cheap glass), a cab pulled up and CHARLIE ZACCARIA and ERNIE ABATE stepped out talking, looked up, smiled and said hello and then continued their conversation. We jumped in the cab and told the driver, MIKE THESIS, to take us to the nearest Howard Johnson's. Riding down the main street we noticed several familiar names on business establishments. BILL BLAUVELT'S Law Firm was located next to the office of RICH DUFFY, a psychiatrist who had a couch hanging in front of his office. We also noticed that TED BRAUN was singing at TOM FITZGERALD'S night club.

After dinner it was decided that a tour of the city might be worthwhile so we went to EDDIE BRIDE'S Jazz Palace. The special attraction was the JOE SCHUCK and DAVE BRENNAN band. The Palace was quite large and of course had a beautiful bar, which at the moment was being held up by GREG SHORTEN, MIKE STROFOLINO, and DICK SERNYAK. The bartender was ARNOLD ZICCARDI, who was kept busy by BOB ZIMMER, TONY ZINNI, and RICH ZOLKO, all drinking zombies.

Leaving the Palace for some fresh air, we walked down the street looking for a mixer or something. However, our quiet walk was disturbed by TOM GAVIN, in a T-Bird, and DICK MULLIGAN, in a Corvette, who were dragging in the main street. They had no sooner gone by when DAVE McCAHILL and DON FOX, two motorcycle cops, whizzed by, followed by TOM BRUDERLE, reporting for the newspaper and PETE MANGAN carrying a microphone attached to an endless amount of wire. Immediately following were BOB STRONG and MIKE DiBENEDETTO balancing all sorts of electrical equipmentt on a ping-pong table. Not to be outdone by anyone, RICH DUNNE and JOHN HENNESSEY were capturing all the action on film.

With all the excitement over we stopped at JACK KELLY'S Saloon where he had a quiet drink until BOB ROSCOE and his floating card game wandered in. JIM MURPHY followed the game but couldn't play because he had a bowling ball stuck on his hand. Just wandering around was ED RYAN looking for something to happen under the Miami moon.

Due to the noise and smog which seemed to seek us out, we took a cab to the beach or, if you prefer, the shore. The air was better but to our dismay PHIL GALLAGHER, VINCE COONAHAN, FRANK MAHER and JOHN FLANAGAN were testing the salt water, which they claimed had been contaminated by one of the cooks at the Dougherty Hotel. However, we were cordially greeted by another group of fellows seeming to have a good time. While GERRY TRIPPITELLI, MATT WALSH, and BILL McGOVERN were handing us our beer mugs, we could hear someone singing in a tear-choked voice, If I can't go to the Forrest, I'll go to the shore."

Just a few feet down the beach LOUIS BEAMAN, ED DUFFY, ED MANCINELLI, JOHN COMPAGNA and JOE O'BRIEN were arguing about something until the group was broken up by AL HANDY, BERT LOMBINO, and AL GIORDANO as they chased several females down the beach. Soon the beach party had become quite mobile and we were left alone to hear the waning yells of pursuit. Returning to the hotel, we saw JOE LAMBERTA being carried upstairs by MARY CSERE and HELEN BURKE. The lobby was quiet except for BOB DELFOE and GEORGE PASQUARELLA, who were watching the 25 showing of the movie Tulips in the Quad, which was being shown by none other than DENNIS ADDONIZIO who was also making public announcements during intermissions.

GEORGE CANNON was playing pool and was constantly disturbing JON DUBS who was reading Aristotle's Poetics in the original. In the small library in the lobby we found JOHN FITZPATRICK and his wife scanning Latin poetry. As we were about to retire we saw part of the delegation from northern New York. FRED BRAUN and JACK HURLEY were brushing the snow from their coats while JOE HEFFERNAN took their sled-dogs outside. After greeting them along with two other new arrivals, VINCE ARPA and FRANK MATRICARDI, we returned to our room and fell asleep to the soothing sounds of the LIZ KOVACH Show.

The next day was beautiful and because it was the last day before the convention was to begin we decided to do some sight-seeing. After we had breakfast, which was served to us by BOB KEATING and MIKE KAZIMIR who looked extremely sharp in their white waiter uniforms, we bought a paper from TONY TRAMONTOZZI and left the hotel. JOE DELVECCHIO joined the group as we started on our tour of the city.

The first place we visited was the Mendel Fountain, which unexpectedly was working, spraying water all over NICK CICCARELLI as he was eating his mid-morning snack of green bananas and peanut butter and tomato sandwiches. DAVE GALLAGHER and MARGE McCLAIN were throwing coins in the fountain. Taking advantage of the water were CHRIS FISHER, RICK GIRDLER, and DOUG REBAK, but they found it difficult to swim, since SUE RANDOUR was sunbathing not far away. Also enjoying the sun were CARL CUMMINGS and MIKE FOSTER, both reading the New York Times.

Our next stop was at the library where we found JOHN PHILLIPS reading comic books and mumbling something about "they never have what I want." Outside the library we were asked by JOHN HARRINGTON if we would like to bet on the horse race, join a baseball pool, or get into a crap game but, not being gamblers, we refused. However, our interest was excited so we decided to go to the ball game. When we arrived, there were no tickets available. Consequently, we were forced to go to a bar to see the game on T.V.

The game started and SAM IORIO who pitched to DON PELLECHIA who caught the ball in his lacrosse stick and threw it to MIKE MANGER. He was tackled by ART MAHAN and the ball was stolen by NOEL CARROLL and was passed on to LARRY LIVERS who was called out on strikes. The ball was then taken by BOB HALL who fell asleep with it. However, he was awakened when CHAPPY MOORE stole the ball and passed it off to JIM WASHINGTON who immediately kicked the ball to DENNY LAHIFF. After a tackle by AL ATKINSON, the ball was ruled out of bounds and had to be re-inflated.

MIKE ZAIA brought the ball back into play with a pass to ERIC ERICKSON who hit the ball directly to MARSHALL UZZLE. He dribbled the ball until it was stolen by EMMETT MICHAELS who kicked it to GEORGE LEFTWICH. The play then centered around ANDY CAMELIO and TONY CANDELMO who somehow had acquired another ball and were playing catch. JOHN McDONNELL complained to the tall thin ref who blew his nose and thus stopped all activity. An argument ensued and JIM ORR ran off with the ball as everyone else engaged in a free-for-all. The sponsor, GEORGE ESSER Brewery, then flashed a commercial which showed BILL BYRNE, a famous actor, drinking a glass of beer and then passing out. With everything in such a chaos, we decided to return to the hotel and cancel our tour.

As we passed through the lobby we saw KEN CRONIN and CARL DOLENTE painting some campaign signs. They were being watched by CHARLES BRENNAN who was having his daily cup of tea.

Since it was close to dinner time we went into the lounge for a cocktail. BOB CATIZONE was there trying to make conversation with a girl at the bar. The head waiter, DAVE HUGHES, dressed in a tux, escorted us to a table but DENNY DRISCOLL came up and said that the table was reserved for TOM FURST. As he walked away he mumbled "darn-tables" and just barely missed AL CAPONITI who was balancing four trays in one hand. While we were enjoying our dinner FAITH CONNOR, dressed in a rabbit outfit, tried to sell us cigars and cigarettes.

Following an after dinner drink, w strolled out to the swimming pool wher BILL SCHLOSS and CHARLES CHELE DEN were racing their minature P- boats. Cheering them on were AUSTI BOWLES and DAN CAPADONNO wh were also playing cards. Leaving thos fellows with their folly we went back t the lobby where the political machine were beginning to form. PETE EFRO was talking to everyone trying to bu votes for his favorite candidate CHARLES HUGUES and a few other were in a corner re-writing the constitu tion while JIM MITCHELL was jus laughing at everything that was goin on. In another corner of the lobby DIC McCORMACK, DAVE MOORE, an JACK EMERY were discussing somi thing which seemed to be very secre and the rumors were that they wante to nominate ZACHARY FINK for pres dent.

JOHN ROBERTS and RUSTY MI LER were planning a large trip to kidna some females from a nearby women school but were discouraged when MIK NEUMAN informed them that all th girls were in New York for their Sprin vacation. Being a little weary of politi we wandered back into the bar where w found AL DeCOTIIS, JOHN CASEY, A PARONE and BOB STOUT discussin the ways in which a house fly lands o the ceiling. At a small table in the corne of the bar we were joined by MAURIC WEEKS and EUGENE WICKS wh within four minutes, had us enrolled the Society to Build More Ponds fo Migraaing Water Fowl. Right there sign us up was BOB WILLIAMS who ha the necessary papers and a pencil behin his ear. Anticipating the convention start on the next day we retired earl

The next day the convention bega and, as you already know, the only thin we decided to do was to meet aga next year.

An Editorial

It was conceived, written and pu together with the sole intention o giving the members of the Junio Class and their parents somethin tangible through which to recall ma of the most memorable events t their college careers, Junior Week.

In this issue we have attempted capture, in print, some of the spir which enables a group of 900 st dents to create the best Junior We the campus has ever had.

Juniors Among VU's Top Athletes

by Rusty Miller and Al Verdi

This year Villanova can be justly proud of its athletic achievements which have brought both pride and prestige to the Main Line campus. The 'Cats have shown their prowess and sportsmanship both on and off the field. Playing an integral part in these achievements were the members of the Junior class who formed the nucleus of many of the teams.

Leading the array of fine junior athletes are the members of the highly successful basketball team which posted a 24-4 record while on their way to the NCAA regionals. One of the mainstays of the team was big 6'7" Jim Washington who controlled the boards for the Wildcats. Jim was a standout both offensively and defensively sweeping the boards and blocking shots.

He received help from 6'3" forward Eric Erickson who worked off the boards, in the tough zone press and at both forward and guard positions and 6'0" George "Honeybear" Leftwich who possesses one of the best drives on the team in addition to a deadly outside shot.

Al Sallee was used chiefly for rebound strength against some of the big teams, while Sam Iorio and Ben Kenny performed well though used only sparingly.

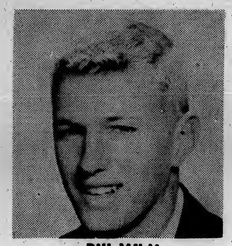
While posting a 5-4 record on the gridiron, the 'Cats performed well in this, a rebuilding year, for Coach Alex Bell. Two of Bell's pillars around which to build were 6'1" tackle Al Atkinson, Villanova's candidate for All-American who is the backbone of the Wildcat front wall and 6'0" John McDonnell who served well as a defensive specialist. End Emmett Michaels was one of the reasons for Wildcat power this season with his rugged offensive-defensive play.

Tom Smith played at the opposite tackle adding power and weight to the 'Cats line while Chappy Moore held the center position. Ably holding down the guard positions were Bill Quigley, a solid performer, Jack McDonald a 5'11" terror, and Mike Strofolino a 6'1" fighting lineman. (Strofolino was also elected Villanova's Missing Link for this year, a very distinguished honor.

In the backfield, we find junior Dick Sernyak a 5'10" speedy halfback of whom much is expected next year and Mike Manger our number one fullback who has improved greatly and looks very promising for next season. Ready and able to fill in when needed is Ed Stranix, a halfback. With these returning lettermen, the Wildcat eleven look to be tough opponents next season.

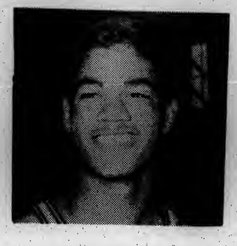
Shining on the baseball diamond this year are juniors Bob Hall a very good long ball hitter who plays a flawless third base and Art Mahan Jr. the starting second baseman who swings a consistent bat. Art is doing especially well this year in his hitting. Providing a good one-two punch are southpaw pitcher Tony Candelmo, the number two pitcher on the squad and Andy Camelio the starting catcher who is also a fair hitter.

The 'Cats strength in the outfield is due to strong hitting Jack Emery and Mike Zaia, a slick gloveman. Vic Majewski, a right hander, is the number three pitcher on the team who adds pitching strength to the squad. With this fine array of juniors, the Wildcats appear to be in strong contention for the NCAA title.



The perennial power of the Villanova track team is no different this year. Leading a very talented team that has copped almost every trophy in sight is Noel Carroll an exceptional 440 and 880 yard man who is also a part of the relay teams. Tom Sullivan who had a slow start as a sophomore began to come into his own this year in the distance races, particularly in the mile run.

Among the other distance runners, Dave Hyland, a consistent runner and Marty Ferko prove to be valuable assets to the team. One of the reasons for the exceptional success of Wildcat relay teams this year is Jim Orr who, incidentally is a member of the record breaking two mile relay team. Doing an excellent job filling in for the famous duo of Budd and Drayton are two juniors, Marshall Uzzle and Larry Livers who produce valuable points for the 'Cats in the 100 and 220 yard dashes. Rounding out a fine group of junior trackmen is relay man Stan Kozlowski.



The relatively young but famous Villanova swimming team is led by next year's Captain, Rick Girdler, who is an All-American medley swimmer. Another standout is Chris Fisher who swims well in the indivdual medley. Lending able assistance to the mermen cause are Doug Rebak, a consistent performer, and Paul Winn, a fine freestyle swimmer. Closing out the juniors on the swimming team is Ed Sperr who is expected to give valuable support to next year's team.

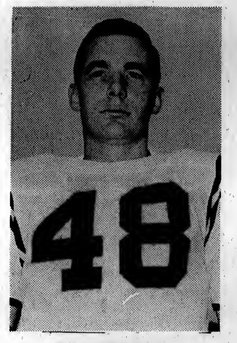
And then there's the rugby boys. Our rugby team is bolstered by a rugged pack of juniors who mix it up in this fast growing English sport. Noted for his meanness and ability to be tough is fullback Jim Campbell while other stalwarts in the line who enjoy the rough contact are Denny "Hooper" LaHiff, Dick Gove, George Tongring and Al Doody. One of the fastest men on this team of ruffians is Ed "Duck" Kursk.

Bill Zlauvelt, a tough newcomer, plays well at prop position as does his counterpart Jim Seaborg. Known for his kicking ability is shifty Jim Brant, while break-away runner Bert Lambino is a backfield flash. Closing out the 14 juniors on the rugby squad are Leaping Leo Campbell, Bill Green the Marine, Bob Dowling and Bill Glenn.

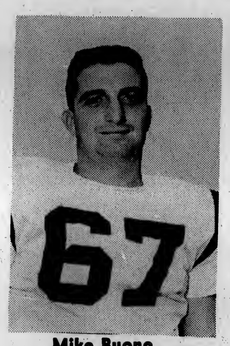
Juniors hold the majority of members in the newly formed lacrosse club under coach Jack Smythe. Heading the roster is captain Bill White who is among the top scorers. In the stick handling department are found the quick stick of "Hill" Russel and the shooting accuracy of Herb Fixler. Attackman John McFadden keeps the ball in the offensive zone while Greg Shortin has mastered the job of scooping ground balls and starting the offensive.

Midfielder Don Pellecchia has shown his endurance by moving quickly as the ball changes hands. Defensively, the opposition is stalled by the bruising body checks of Jim Rantanen and the smashing stickchecks of "Chub" Connor. Dan "Okie" O'Connel is the anchorman for the defensive unit while sub Joe Smith performs well when called upon. Lastly is goalie Jack Wherum whose spectacular saves and cool play carried the team to its 6-5 record last year.

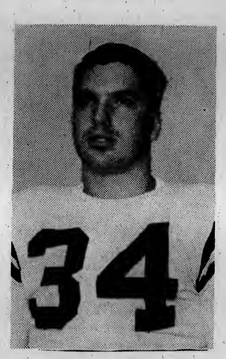
The rifle team, always a favorite for gun-happy Villanovans, was led this year by Joe Smith a consistent shooter who has been voted next year's captain and Ed Millison, the big gun for the Navy team. An improved shooter, Dick McCormack and consistent Roger Wellbrook round out the rifle team. Closely akin to the rifle team is Villanova's pistol team which boasts Bud Brennan a big gun who was elected next year's cocaptain. An erratic but beneficial shooter this year was Richard Hunter who is expected to greatly help next year's team.



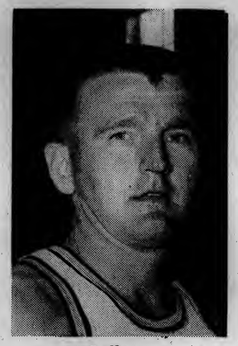
Since its inception, the Golf Club has played out of Aronimink Country Club. One of the two junior members is Ben Kenny a southpaw who shoots well. Mike Shea, the other junior, is a consistent shooter who relaxes by golfing at home.



Though relatively unknown, the tennis team can brag of having the alternate Chuck McKinly in Chuck Stearle, a fine shooting junior. Bob Patchen is the holder of a very good serve and John McCormick is the stylish member of the team. Dave Jacobs and Joe Walsh are darkhorses of the team who are expected to lend more support next year.



Among the smaller teams on campus, the bowling team has been very successful this year. The two juniors on the team, Don Logan and John Brennan who are both good bowlers, helped the team win the Delaware Valley Championship in Intercollegiate competition.



There are many other Junior athletes who have played well this year for their respective teams, but because of limited space, it is impossible to acknowledge them all individually. To these and to those already mentioned in this article, Villanova and the Class of 1965 offer congratulations for their effort and achievement.

Annual Senior's Fathers Day Slates Variegated Program For Saturday

By Tom Dabney

The Senior Class of 1964 will sponsor the annual Seniors' Fathers Day on Saturday, May 9. Co-chairmen James McErlane and George McKeon have termed the affair the "biggest and best ever." It is also tne longest day of activities ever planned for such an event.

The day will begin for the seniors and tneir fatners with registration in front of Bartley Hall at 10:30 a.m. Following registration, the Rev. Michael Gallagher, OSA, moderator of the Class of 1964, will celebrate Mass in the University Chapel at 11:00 a.m. to officially open Fathers Day.

The Rev. George Lawless, OSA, will give the sermon. He will also recite the memorable poem written by the late General Douglas MacArthur, "A Father's Prayer". Everyone will convene after Mass for a buffet luncheon, smorgasbord style at noon.

Afternon Activities

During the afternoon, there will be a great deal of activities. On the baseball diamond, Villanova will play Seton Hall University in a game sure to be hotly contested. In the Stadium, the seniors and their fathers will be able to watch the annual Quantico track meet, pitting our track team against the Marine speedsters.

Also of note are the lacrosse and rugby games which will be played Saturday afternoon. If rain forces a cancellation of these games, a movie will be shown.

Cocktail Hour

All participants will meet at Kugler's Restaurant at Broad and Chestnut Sts. in Philadelphia at 4:30 p.m. and cocktails will be distributed at 5:00 p.m. A sirloin steak dinner will be served at 6:00 p.m. Seniors will also receive a delightful favor at the dinner.

Following dinner there will be two speakers. Mr. James Whalen, associate professor of philosophy at Villanova will speak on the topic "The Idea of a University". Mr. John Burns director of development at Villanova, will speak of "Villanova, Progress and Prospects."

McErlane, in commenting on Seniors' Fathers Day, said, "The length and number of the day's activities are true to the Class of '64. We have expanded the activities to such a degree that the class treasury has been depleted considerably."

Two Meals

He also reminded the seniors that all the afternoon's activities will be free of charge. McKeon added, "Where else can one enjoy two delectable meals and a vitreous favor in one day?" (The favor will be a special mixing glass designed for diverse refreshments).

Novel Attendance Proposal Goes Into Effect Next Year

by Tom Krause

The Student Government Association meeting on April 29 was the occasion for the announcement of a new Villanova attendance system. The SGA that night consisted of both incoming and outgoing members of the Student Congress.

Marty McGuinn, president of SGA, presiding over his last Congress meeting, handed over the gavel to Tom Furst, the newly-elected president. Also at this meeting, elections were held for the Student Senate for the classes of 1965, 1966, and 1967.

Tom Furst

Concerning the attendance proposal, Marty stated that after a discussion with Father President and the Rev. Joseph A. Flaherty, OSA, vice-president for academic affairs, it was decided to release through the SGA the new attendance system which will be enacted in the fall semester.

New Attendance System

The new system is:

1. Attendance at all classes and laboratory sessions is compulsory.
2. Attendance will no longer be graded.
3. Attendance will no longer be computed in the Quality Point Average.
4. The total number of absences in each course will be listed on the student's grade report next to the course and grade.
5. A student will fail a course because of unexcused absences with a grade of XF, whenever he has been absent unexcused once more than double the number of credits for the course; e.g., for a three (3) credit course, seven (7) unexcused absences equal XF.
6. Excuses for absence will be granted for approved athletic participation, approved field trips, certified serious illness, death in the immediate family, selective service, military examinations, or approved placement.
7. Excused absences allow a student to make up any test missed, and do not court toward a failure in a course, but do count in the total number of absences listed on

Tom Wicker Of N.Y. Times Analyzes New Administration

Mr. Thomas Wicker, White House Correspondent for the New York Times, spoke at Villanova Monday night. His topic was "A Critical Analysis of the New Administration."

Wicker, an associate of the Times since June 1961 said thus far the administration of President Lyndon Baines Johnson has been "one of the most remarkable periods in American Political History". He added that he thought Mr. Johnson's performance in office has been excellent. But this opinion is not shared by everyone.

One of the biggest difficulties facing Johnson, according to Wicker, is his homey style. Wicker noted that President Johnson followed a man into office noted for his eloquence, extraordinary charm, and impeccable taste. He said that he did not think it unfair that President Johnson should be compared to the late President Kennedy.

Highlighting the Wicker address was his thesis of five major achievements credited to President Johnson since late Friday afternoon November 22, 1963. The first achievement Wicker stated was President Johnson's equanimity in maintaining the continuity of government. It was pointed out the United States received no challenges from any foreign power during this transition period.

Secondly, the President has reinvigorated the executive-congressional relatishop. Wicker said, in his opinion, congress was becoming a "moribund" institution under Kennedy.

Next, according to Wiker, is the skillful and decisive manner in which the President has effected the Kennedy domestic program and approach to foreign affairs.

In his next to last point Wicker commented on the remarkable political control Johnson has exercised. He illustrated how Johnson has employed with immeasurable success men sworn to another leader. He also said that this has been almost unprecedented in the history of vice-Presidential succession.

Marciarose Given Augustine Award At Villanovan-WWVU Dinner Dance

by Tom Krause

Marciarose (Shestack), noted producer-moderator of Station WRCV-TV's Speak Up and Concept programs, was awarded the Villanova St. Augustine Award for 1964 on April 25 at the annual Villanovan-WWVU Dinner Dance, held at the Warwick Hotel in Philadelphia. The Rev. Louis A. Rongione, OSA, moderator of the newspaper and chairman of the Selection Committee, presented the award to Marciarose.

A striking personality, rather tall, Marciarose, wife of Philadelphia lawyer Jerome Shestack, manifested quite a contrast to that of toastmaster Fr. Rongione, who is of short stature. The prize which she received is given to an outstanding journalist each year for "Distinguished Service in the Field of Communications Journalism."

John Smock, winner of the Diaper Dan contest held during Junior Week is talking to his mother and Mrs. James Tate wife of the mayor of Philadelphia.

Experiences

She spoke briefly about her worthwhile experiences in the broadcasting field and hoped that those at the Dinner Dance would consider television as a career. Also noteworthy is the fact that Marciarose is the first woman and non-Catholic to receive the St. Augustine award.

Senior Service Awards were also presented at the affair to senior members of both staffs in recognition to their contributions to the college communications field. These awards were made by the Rev. Joseph Kemme, OSA, vice-president for student affairs.

New Appointments

At the Dinner Dance, staff appointees were announced by Tom Bruderle, new editor-in-chief of the Villanovan and Bob Strong, WWVU station manager, who is now in his second year at that post.

For the Villanovan, the following editors were named: Executive Editor, Jim Brennan; Associate Editor, Tom Krause; News Editor, Bob Fennel; and Asst. News Editor, Bob Elschner. Named as sports editor was Steve Freind and as copy editor Matt Roche. John Roberts remains in his position as feature editor.

Father Appicci

Circulation manager will be Cornelius Murphy. Other editors will be named at a later date. The Rev. Richard Appicci, OSA, dean of student activities representing Father President, also gave a short talk and received a hearty welcome.

Strong announced that the WWVU staff will consist of the following: Mike DiBenedetto, program director; Ed Bride, music director; Jack Bancer, business manager; Bill McCloskey, news director and Tom Dabney, campus news co-ordinator.

In the engineering division, Jack Wilkinson was appointed chief engineer. Under him are Dave Buscher, production engineer, and Jim Briggman, chief technical engineer.

The remaining positions announced were: Peter McCarthy, promotion co-ordinator; Larry Krupa, traffic manager; and Gene Kearney and John Podgursky, sale directors. Mary Jane Bradley is now the chief librarian.

Barbara Ward Gives Lecture To A Group Of 1800 Students

by Matt Roche

Barbara Ward, famed British economist, was the third guest in the current Student Council sponsored Villanova Forum. An estimated student attendance of over 1800 listened avidly to her interesting lecture in the Field House on April 23.

After an introduction by Martin McGuinn, president of the SGA, Miss Ward began her talk. She remarked on the shrinking of the modern world; "We are now in the most startling period through which the human being has ever lived. The world today, is a village which is being pulled together by the transportation and communications system of modern science."

This point led to her next question "What is the politics of survival, civil peace and civil order?" The establishment of an organization of international peace is not without models, but without practice." Today's situation caused food for thought about the past. She stated that our past history in international diplomacy has been one of containment, and that "Russia has forced us into formulating definite foreign policies."

Praises America

She congratulated the United States for its excellent Marshall Plan which she said coerced Europe to unite. America did not just hand over the money, or even engage in land-lease, but instead forced Europe to formulate certain plans for its disposal. This she called the "Collective Resurrection of Europe." In this, 26 nations united for the first time in an absolute factor.

Lady Jackson said that this resulted in the continued unity of Europe. She continued saying that the East-West split had now developed into a North-South split. The speaker discussed the existence of world economy. The individual nations can no longer set economic policy without consideration of effect upon the world economy.

Poor Nations

She commented upon the stagnant economy of poor nations and said that it is a case of "aspiration versus reality." She went on to say, "there is a vast penumbra of semi-modernized nations emerging today."

She raised what she called the trade-aid problem in economics today. In the underdeveloped nations the affluent countries rush in with aid while the rich companies withdraw trade. The economist stated that the age of the independent national state is over and now the nations are building blocks and patterns. She stated, "Europe must return to the plan of continental unity."

Miss Ward recommended higher wages which would result in higher consumption. She also advised a progressive income tax on a world scale using world agencies of proven efficiency. She concluded by saying, "I am confident that solutions will be found since the Judaeo-Christian tradition is haunted by a vision of justice or injustice."

The Rev. George Lawless, OSA, concluded the evening by complimenting Miss Ward as having "The shrewdness of Portia, the charm of Rosalina, and the wit of Beatrice."

Annual NROTC Spring Review Sees Middies March In Style

By Tom Dabney

The Villanova University NROTC unit last weekend initiated its first annual Spring Weekend. Several of the activities were a review of the battalion, a formal dinner dance, and a Sunday brunch. Also scheduled, but later canceled due to inclement weather, was the Greater Philadelphia Drill Meet, which will not be held this year at all.

The Navy Weekend is an innovation here at Villanova. Previously it had been a series of events scheduled for the second semester each year. The idea of having one weekend that incorporated all these events, the review, the spring formal, and others were prompted to make it an enjoyable as well, as memorable occasion for the middies, their dates, parents, and guests. It is also the close of the naval science scholastic year.

Other events of the review included the presentation of Miss Charlotte LaSpina, as the Color Girl, to the battalion. Miss LaSpina of Cabrini College, was the date of Midshipman Lieutenant Charles Day. She presented the Honor Guidon to Bravo Company, this year's honor company, which Day commands.

The highlight of the review proceedings was the presentation of some 16 awards to various members of the battalion. The awards are presented by various civil, military, fraternal, and industrial organizations. The awards consisted of medals, transistor radios, and swords. Among these were two made to Midshipmen First Class James K. Croney and Robert M. Gallen.

Midn. Croney, E.E., this year's Midshipman Battalion Commander, received a gold medal presented by the Society of American Military Engineers in recognition of his academic and extracurricular excellence. Croney is one of 15 collegians across the country to receive this award.

Midn. Gallen, C. E., received the Captain Theodore H. White Award for displaying the most officer-like qualities tending to bring credit to the Naval service and Villanova University. This award is made annually here and at the U.S. Naval Academy by Captain White in honor of his son, Lieutenant White, USN who was killed in the crash of his jet plane. The review was followed by a cocktail party given by the Drill Team in Bartley Hall.

John Barry Hall was opened for the midshipmen and their guests to tour during Saturday afternoon.

Spring Formal

The weekend was climaxed by the spring formal at the Green Briar Country Club from 9-1 a.m. during the dance, Miss Catherine Prezzano date of Midn. Arthur Gebrowski was crowned Queen of the NROTC Spring Formal, 1964.

Senator Hugh Scott To Address Villanova Political Union Debate

Senator Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania will be the lead-off speaker when the Villanova Political Union debates the complicated "Two China" question on Monday evening May 11 at 7 p.m. in 110 Bartley Hall.

The text of the resolution before Union members is: Resolved that this house opposes a Two China policy in the United Nations. After Senator Scott's speech members of the Conservative, Liberal, and Moderate parties will join in the debate.

Prominent Speaker

Senator Scott is one of the most prominent speakers to appear before Villanova's young but active political debating society. Elected to the Senate in 1958, Scott had previously served 16 years as congressman from Philadelphia Sixth District. He has had a long record of public and party service including a brief term as National Chairman of the Republican Party in 1948-49.

The China question has received increasing attention since France decided to recognize the Peking Government in January of this year. Political analysts see this as foreshadowing an attempt to install a Communist delegation in the United Nations.

Fulbright

Some analysts, including Senator Fulbright appear to believe that the best the the United States can salvage from the dispute is an agreement that Formosa will be admitted as a member of the United Nations before, or simultaneously with, the seating of the Peking regime. Such a "two China" agreement can only be made while Peking remains out of the UN. For once the mainland is seated it appears certain that Peking or the Soviet Union would use it a veto to prevent the admission of Formosa. The question is further complicated by the fact that in their public positions both the Nationalists and Communists have denounced the "two China" solution.

Foreign Relations

While not a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, Senator Scott has a keen interest in foreign policy questions. He is a veteran of World War II and is a Captain in the Naval Reserve. An alumnus of the University of Pennsylvania, he took his LLB degree at the University of Virginia in 1922. He has honorary degrees from eleven colleges and universities including a Doctorate of Humane Letters from LaSalle. He is a member of the Senate Republican Policy Committee and is the author of several publications including a book "How to Go into Politics" which was published in 1949.

Grad Theatre Dept. Presently Producing Final Play Of Year

The Graduate Theatre Department of Villanova University is presently producing its last production of the current academic year. The play will conclude its run on May 7-9.

Entitled A Tale For Would-Be Kings, the play was written by William Long, a student in the graduate theatre department of Villanova. Thomas Nevins is the director.

Depicting a small European country, the play tells of a revolt against the present government of that country. The plot is filled with intrigue, adventure, and violent conflict.

The leading parts are played by Yolanda Brutten, who is making her first appearance in the Playbox, and Jack Black, a graduate student in the theatre department. Also featured in the play will be Jim Mason and Peter Mocco, seniors at Villanova, Paul Buckley, a graduate of Villanova, and Eileen Shea, who has previously appeared in the Playbox.

The performances will begin at 8:30 p.m. Tickets may be obtained at the theatre box office, in the classroom annex, or by calling LA 5-4600 Ext. 454 for reservations.

Dr. Fred Schwartz Will Discuss Topic: Conquest Of America

Dr. Fred Schwartz, noted anti-communist, will speak on Tuesday, May 12 in Vasey Hall Auditorium at 8 p.m. in conjunction with the SGA lecture series. He will speak on "The Present Strategy for the Conquest of the USA."

Dr. Schwartz was born in Brisbane, Australia. He graduated from the University of Queensland, where he also received a medical degree in 1941.

Dr. Schwartz taught at Queensland Teachers' College where he debated Max Julius, an Australian communist in 1940. This was his first contact with communism, against which he now conducts a world-wide crusade.

Before forming his Christian Anti-Communism Crusade in 1953, he made an in-depth study of communism, its tenets and aims. He came to America, on a lecture tour in 1950. He later continued this tour into Europe.

The Crusade itself is actively engaged in a struggle against communism. In many countries by utilizing "the weapons of truth and knowledge," the Crusade conducts lectures and anti-communist schools.

Congressman John Anderson Speaks On Campaign Issues

John B. Anderson, Representative to the Congress of the United States, will speak on the subject "The Campaign Issues of 1964" on Friday, May 8 at 3:30 p.m. in Bartley Hall.

Jack Ames, president of the Conservative Club, has announced Congressman Anderson's inaugural lecture on the Villanova campus.

The now prominent congressman attended the University of Illinois where he received an A.B. degree. He was also awarded a J.D. degree from the University of Illinois Law School. He subsequently attended Harvard Law School on a fellowship and received a Master of Laws Degree.

While at Harvard he also served on the faculty of Northeastern University School of Law in Boston, Massachusetts. He was admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois in 1946.

Military Accomplishments

Congressman Anderson enlisted in the U.S. Army during World War II and served for thirty months in the U.S. Army Field Artillery. He spent ten months of the service abroad in France and Germany and received four battle stars for participationtion in four major campaigns in the European theater of operations.

In 1952, Mr. Anderson became a member of the U.S. State Department's Career Diplomatic Service and was subsequently sent abroad and stationed in West Berlin for 2½ years as an advisor on the staff of the U.S. High Commissioner for Germany.

Winnebago

In 1955, he engaged in the practice of law in Rockford, Illinois — his birthplace. He was elected to the office of State's Attorney of Winnebago County in November of 1956 and served four years in that position.

Elected to the Congress of the United States in 1960, Congressman Anderson succeeded the Honorable Lee E. Allen in the state's sixteenth district.

In Reply

By now the student body is well aware of the article about Villanova which appeared in the April 27 issue of the Daily Pennsylvanian, written by Barry Lesch, an undergraduate at the University of Pennsylvania.

The author—who, it should be recognized in no way speaks for the University's student body—began the story by misquoting the Student Handbook. He went to criticize the 'gray,' 'ominously oppresive' appearance of the campus, the extreme 'disgruntledness' of a few anonymous faculty members, the constant 'fear of alienation' under which the intellectually inclined Villanovan must live, and much more. He concludes by asserting that faith is nothing more than a 'crutch for a cripple' and, as such, Villanova itself is a cripple and a "seemingly incurable case."

He did, on the other hand, bring out a few very good points about problems within the school—points which, as he found, most persons at Villanova are, in honest self-analysis, almost too willing to admit; points which are also, in many cases, common to most if not all colleges and universities today.

There is always room for criticism — and improvement — in any organization or institution.

We feel Lesch knew what he would write before he came to Villanova, and that it is only the foolish man who tries to argue with a prejudiced child. Thus there is no answer to a wrongly posed question — There is no response to a pointless accusation.

No Comment Is Needed!

Will The Spirit End?

The outcome of the Blatt-Musmanno contest for the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate has yet to be decided. The general voting supplied Miss Blatt with a small lead of 6300, but absentee ballots stilll must be tallied, and there may be a recount since the result is sure to be close. However no matter which candidate is the ultimate victor in the primary, it is possible that the Democratic party will be the ultimate loser.

The task before the party is enormous. Numerous fences need to be repaired if the party nominee is to have a chance of defeating the incumbnt Senator Hugh Scott in the November election.

It is unfortunate that personalities were involved and partty skeletons rattled. As always, the victorious faction can afford to be generous but the losers must be courageous enough to bow eo the popular will.

Moreover, far more than a senatorial contest will be at stake in November. This year is a presidential election year, a time when a pronounced split in the party machinery in such a key state as Pennsylvania could lead to the national level.

In 1962 elections the Democrats received a severe setback in Philadelphia when the city organization, discredited by City Hall scandals, provided its gubernatorial candidate, Richardson Dilworth with a meager 100,000 plurality.

In addition to the scandals, candidate Dilworth and the late party chieftain in Philadelphia, Bill Green, had a private feud which must have contributed to Dilworth's poor showing.

Compared with John F. Kennedy's 1960 plurality of 326,000 in Philadelphia, 1962 was a disaster. This year, a party feud could cause Democrats in general and President Johnson in particular significant trouble in Philadelphia, ballot splitting not withstanding.

As soon as the victor emerges from the primary, both elements of the party must make a supreme effort to regain the party unity and spirit necessary to avert political defeat in November.

A Sagging Economy

America's economy is in the worst position that it has ever been. We are tottering precariously on the brink of another fall that will carry us lower than the depths of 1929 and its aftermath.

There are a number of unavoidable and disturbing signs of our economic malady. Our national debt is at an all-time high. Security is not built on a foundation of wanton domestic spending, and Johnson's saving sops will not ameliorate the situation.

Add to this the consideration that if all foreign creditors of the United States would demand payment, we would default. Recently the dollar was saved from collapsing on the international market by the prompt and merciful action of our European allies.

Finally, there is not enough specie current in America to meet our economic demands. Such currency that is available has been debased to the extent that our silver dollar is worth more in bullion than as specie.

These many factors add up to more than a mere warning of impending economic crisis, they are the stormy petrels of disaster. Our economy must be ministered to, as to a sick man. It must be revitalized, and, if necessary, rebuilt if we are to survive.

Letter To The Editor

To the Editor:

By now, most students and faculty members at Villanova are familiar with the violently unfavorable article in the Daily Pennsylvanian of April 27. This article was an obvious exaggeration and misrepresentation of a few facts and a lot of unsupported opinion. It would seem to place the author of this article in good candidacy for any sensationalist newspaper or magazine in the country.

I hope, first of all, that most Villanovans realize that the Daily Pennsylvanian is no more an official organ of the University of Pennsylvania than the Villanovan is of Villanova. This is a student paper; it does not necessarily represent the feeling of the University itself.

Also, just as the Villanovan has staff members who may disagree with the general policy of the paper, so too does the Daily Pennsylvanian. The author of this article, in effect, is giving his own opinion — and I emphasize that word opinion.

It would be very pleasant to say that the entire three page spread was a complete lie, but this is not the case. Wading through the mud, one can find some grains of truth which may not do credit to Villanova . . .

How many students here are really interested in anything, including what they claim to be majoring in? Ask this question of the Belle Masque, "Concept," or "Lynx," or the officers of most extracurricular activities. Even those claiming to be actively interested in athletics seem to be a minority, as witnessed by the constant cries against the lack of spirit here.

How many students here actually do regard courses as something to be swallowed whole, rather than digested to get at the heart of the material? How many students moan and complain when a teacher demands that they think? How many feel that the least amount of work done is the best amount?

I am not saying that the academic atmosphere at Villanova is poor for this just is not true. Expansion is just what I have already mentioned, "Concept," "Lynx," dramatics, and other activities, expansion which has been going on continuously during my three years here, would contradict Mr. Lesch's statements that thinking, serious, students are a castigated minority . . .

Perhaps the most obnoxious element of Mr. Lesch's article, in fact, that element which was his actual thesis, was his insistance that religion and thought are incompatable. This statement itself is a contradiction. True religion requires serious extensive thought, or the religion is a farce, shallow and degrading. Whether this point is emphasized as much as it should be is another question, but, contrary to Mr. Lesch, there is improvement along just these lines.

There is room for improvement at Villanova, just as there is anywhere. Mr. Lesch chose not to attempt improvement just to expose and shock. Our reaction should not be to substantiate his yellow journalism.

If he starts many previously apathetic Villanovans into considering just why the University exists, then there was indeed some gold among the mud.

EDITOR:

Many letters have been received by the VILLANOVAN on this subject. In the interest of dignity, good manners, space, but most important, responsible journalism, we have chosen to print the letter by Mr. Leitz which is considered by the editors to be the most appropriate. While the VILLANOVAN does not represent the views of the university administration it does feel an obligation to protect the good name of the university.

Villanova Philosophy. . .?

by Jeff Radowich

Not too long ago, Hank Schultz, the writer-artist responsible for the cartoon "Peanuts", composed and illustrated an engaging little book entitled "Happiness is a Warm Puppy."

Mr. Schultz presented moments of happiness peculiar to childhood, such as having an entire quarter to spend for candy. This publication evoked pleasant memories for the many adults who purchased it.

Ostensibly for amusement only, the format can be used, however, as a relatively innocuous method of pinpointing various discomforts that may be existent in a particular area. Of necessity this type of humor-criticism is limited in audience appeal.

For example, the quip that "Status is an invitation to a Pearl Mesta party", is much more meaningful for Washington, D.C., socialities than for anyone else.

Philosophers

The Day-Hop, Bartley and Mendel cafeteria philosophers have been using these definitions to express their likes and dislikes for a long time. The following are a few of the better one-liners.

For all students: Disgust is having five 8:30 classes.

For Tolstoy fans: Relief in finishing "War and Peace" — on time.

For Debaters: Debating is horn-rimmed eloquence in a dictionary of gelatin.

For residents: Futility is the carrying power of WWVU.

For Philosophy majors: The message of civilization is that materialism helps build strong bodies twelve ways.

For nonchalant shoppers: Extortion is the prices in the University Shop.

For successful campus crusaders: Academic freedom is the intent rovings of stray dogs.

For unsuccessful campus crusaders: The Administration is rigidity in the ivory tower of academic aloofness.

Menus

For residents: Satire is the menus for the downstairs cafeteria.

For homeward-bound Villanovans: Frustration is just missing the 3:26 on a three day weekend.

For incurable romantics in Mr. Mitchell's English classes: Life is a progression of reciprocal manifestations of dislike, boredom and irritation.

For "Concept" readers: Satisfaction is being able to understand any of the articles.

For library users: Discomfort is a coat and tie, and a paper on Sales Forecasting.

For campus intellectuals: Truth is unity with my opinion.

For Freshmen nurses: Despair is a 10:30 curfew.

For lonesome residents: Disappointment is the latest edition of "America" in your mail box.

Blue Key

For Blue Key members: The light of popularity is shiny spheres of shallow friendships.

For Student Congress members: Parliamentary procedure is a babbling brook of vigorous verbosity.

For bankrupt students: Ecstasy is successfully bolting a phone bill.

For those eating in the day-hop cafeteria: distress is the watery mustard and/or catsup.

For successful candidates for class office: Political friendships are vested echoes in an empty room.

For defeated candidates for class office: Factions are the petrified prejudice of unthinking unreliables.

Nurses

For residents: Enjoyment is using the University recreational facilities, especially the pool tables.

For anybody: Apprehension is a date with a nurse.

For any Villanovan: Introspection is a proper reading of the Daily Pennsylvanian.

And as a tribute to all nurses everywhere, from a sympathizer who wonders how they stand it: Sarcasm is a male attitude.

Defense Spending Going Down?

by Tom Bruderle

Within the next few years, the budget for the nation's defense should begin to decline. Immediately a din and a dither will be raised by many who will believe that the United States is leaving herself unprotected. And, strange as it may seem, those making the most noise are the very same ones who decry the huge Federal budget and the current but not mortally sinful policy of deficit spending. During the past three years, defense spending rose by 17 billion dollars and a 4 billion dollar cut, which appears in the offing, can safely be made.

The problem now seems to be to re-adjust the American economy which now receives $50 billion in defense contracts which eventually accounts for 10% of the gross national product and 9% of all jobs in the nation. This will be the problem facing the United States in the future. What is to be done when the ratio for plant jobs in missiles is 82, 72 and 53 per cent for San Diego, Wichita, and Seattle, respectively, and there is a cutback? These and the cities will have to change their emphasis, but the question is how a San Diego layed-off missile technician is just as unemployed as a bituminious coal-miner in Hazleton, Pennsylvania?

Solutions

There are three possible solutions to this seemingly hopeless problem. One is to provide a certain amount of federal support to projects and tasks which America will face in the future and which private enterprise may not be able to handle because of sheer expense.

Funds could go for research and development in such projects as salt water conversion systems to compensate for our shrinking supply of fresh water. To safeguard our present supply, a strict water pollution control system.

Allocations could also be made for a modern, high-speed, up-to-date mass transit system, as well as for new forms of land, sea (possibly under the sea?) and air transportation facilities.

Second

Secondly, financial resources could be kept in the military by providing for newer and more powerful conventional or non-atomic, non-nuclear weapons.

The army would probably agree that a newer and faster firing rifle could be found and adequately distributed to all troops. The navy could possibly follow the lead of the British Royal Navy by adopting a fleet of carrier-based helicopters with marines, special forces or counter-insurgency forces on board to handle any isolated flare-up. The air force now has in operation faster transport planes for the rapid movement of men and material, yet, research could still be done in this field.

Third

A third solution could be the appropriation of federal monies for the conquest of disease and alleviation of poverty.

The defense budget and "overkill", i.e. possession of more than enough weapons to destroy the enemy, will probably both be reached in the coming years to a lower level. The remaining budget will be for the present U.S. armed forces and the improvement of weapons and weapons systems. Nevertheless, the administration should begin giving serious thought to ways in which the economy will be able to absorb this cutback in money circulation, resulting from a decrease in the federal defense budget.

Caught In Passing

Parting Comments

by Jan Dyroff

This is the next to the last in a series of columns begun over two years ago. Some of the topics were frivolous, some were serious, and some were just to offer information. This one, if it be classified, should fall under the heading of reaction.

The reaction is to, not against, the Augustinian training of the University. A trained mind and a critical judgement, tempered by a sense of morality, form the basis of the school's philosophy of education.

As a result one is likely to emerge with one's diploma and be in a better position to face the world than one's contemporary from a secular university. While our compeers may deal exclusively with their fields, we are given an added edge.

Our slight advantage is the inclusion of a great deal of philosophy in our curriculum to enable us to deal critically with the stuff of our specialty, and to be in a position of making statements of value judgement rather than of data repetition.

From our training in a basically Christian society, we are able to make judgement, form ideas, or express opinions and be relatively secure that whatever we do will be tinged with an awareness of moral responsibility.

In our dealings with others this moral awareness, or sense of religion, cannot help but increase our responsiveness so that we treat them as persons, not as objects. The absence of this sense is a lack for which no amount of book-learning can compensate.

While the secular and the spiritual may seem irreconcilable, there is no better background than the Augustinian against which one may attempt a synthesis. Again and again in the writings of St. Augustine one finds the presentation of immiscable opposites.

But what Augustine does is to attempt an understanding of the whole of the problem and a recognition of both sides of the arguments. If no solution results, at least some sort of awareness does. This underlies the spirit at Villanova. If serious problems arise and there appears to be no way out, one is at least prepared to accept the problematic.

Augustine once offered a prayer, "Lord, . . . let me know you." When one enters Villanova he commits himself to try to know God, and, in a sense, joins in the discipline of the Augustinian Rule.

Perhaps some of the internal conflicts that present themselves to some of the students stem from a refusal to admit or recognize the extent to which the Augustinian discipline plays in their academic life. But this is a part of maturity.

The other part of the prayer is, "Lord, let me know myself . . ." Knowledge of self is the reaction to the philosophy of education here, anything else is a reaction against it. If the latter, the reaction against, results in a unsatisfactory education, the fault lies not in the system but in the individual.

Preliminary Survey Indicates Large Number Of Grad Awards

A preliminary survey, by no means complete, indicates that Villanova seniors are doing well in the annual quest for graduate assistantships, fellowships, and scholar-hips. It appears that most major graduate schools in the country have given a grant of some kind to a Villanova student.

Following is a list of our students and the awards they have received (I repeat that the list is not exhaustive):

Joseph Baron, Arts, a University Fellowship at the Graduate School of Business, the University of Pittsburgh.

Richard Bertozzi, Chemistry, Graduate Assistantship at the University of Pittsburgh and Purdue University.

Robert J. Burke, Engineering, received and will accept a Hertz Foundation Fellowship, stipend first year $5000, plus expenses and books. He will study Applied Science at the University of California (Davis), probably under Edward Teller. He also received a National Science Traineeship, stipend $2400, from California Institute of Technology. He was also awarded the Atomic Energy Commission Fellowship from the Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies. He was also named honorable mention in both the Woodrow Wilson Fellowship and National Science Foundation competitions.

Jeremiah Cardamone, English, received an $1800 Fellowship from the University of Rochester for study in the Graduate School of Business. He also received a fellowship for study at the University of Pittsburgh, Graduate School of Business. In addition he received a scholarship to attend the law school of the University of Syracuse.

Now five kinds of Chevrolets for all kinds of people!

Stereotype Menance

by Paul Norton

The Lynx is out. It slithered into the hands of the Villanova stereotype with all the stereotyping and wiles of any cat. It has the divers personality of a feline and the polish of Villanova's "sophisticates."

Lynx is not a mediocre magazine. Relative to other Catholic colleges' publications, it is excellent; on the level of American universities in general, velocity fair. Like the proverbial miss — "When she good, she was very good; when she was bad . . ." forget it. It is mostly black and white; there is very little gray.

This issue brings much more variety than any previous effort. The material ranges from the classics to coal country lore with a generous dose of personality introspection to feed the cat. This is most noticeable in the poetry and is a familiar genre for college students.

Poetry

The poetry is good and as usual out balances the prose. Outstanding is John Brown's "Variations of a Theme of Saint-John Perse." It shows much intelligence and a great deal of depth, much of which is easily missed. Don Brophy's "Fragments" and Ed Wilkinson's "Impressions of an Electric Accordian . . ." are also both fine works. The former is an emotional exercise in mood, the latter an intellectual reaction.

Garret Smith's "A Child" is a moving piece as is the strangely titled "Einander Kosovo" by Jan Dyroff. Less effective but worth mentioning is the quiet pathos of "Pace", (Ronald Javers,, the pretty "Haiku on Wisteria" (JJG Petraitis), and the intense and unrealistic "Shadows" (Thomas Corbett).

New animals in the Lynx's claw are the translations from foreign works. Both Garret Smith's "Translation from Becquer" and David Brennan's "An English Rendering of Catullus" lend tremendous breadth to the accept stereotype.

Prose

Another scratch at the classics is Robert Murray's "Euripides and Ring Lardner." This is a clever examination of "Hippolytus" and very well handled. Of the same prose quality is Joe Petraitis' short story, "The Night of the Wolves," and adventure with a colorful background.

John Brown's "The Diction of Unknowing" is very weighty and requires a second reading, but it is nevertheless a searching, almost probing, reminiscence well worth the trouble. The story by Dennis O'Hara, "Somewhere Above" is somewhat vague and confused in style. Cou are never quite sure of the point and it could lead the reader to an easy misinterpretation.

Denis Lucy's "A Change in the Weather" outweights all the other prose. The story has insight, warmth, and a healthy sense of both realism and the dramatic.

Of the two prose poems in this issue, "The Widow" (Denis Lucey) is the more effective. "Twilight" (Stephen McNamara) is a sophomoric attempt to reproduce color impressions of which the end result becomes almost garish.

A one act play "The Actress" by Elizabeth Kovach comes across less strongly than a noonday soap opera and with far less dramatic impact. It is poorly written, with lumpy dialogoe and weak common characterizations almost impossible to imagine on a stage. The plot is so trite it approaches the corny and ridiculous.

Lay-Out

On the other end of the spectrum is the jewel of the magazine — "Art at Villanova." This well layed-out section discusses the works of art on campus, their origins, artists, styles, and how they arrived at V. U. It is both interestiny and informative.

Student Body President's Final Report

SGA's Three-Fold Responsibility

by Martin McGuinn

At the inception of the current academic year, I attempted to define the role of student government at Villanova and to chart our direction within that framework. Now at the completion of the duties of the present Congress, a frank appraisal of our achievements and failures, our assets and liabilities is in order.

Such an evaluation can be purposeful only if it acknowledges the progress made and provides the foundation for continued advancement.

Within the realm of student government, we are beginning to realize the entry into the complex area of a student judiciary. Rather recent decisions concerning election irregularities and organization infractions have only scratched the surface. The establishment of judgement by peers — the basic for student courts — is necessarily a deliberate and dilatory process and will be extended only as the decisions and precedents prove the student leaders to be responsible and mature. It is extremely important that every student and organization comprehend and accept the principle of central authority in the form of a student government.

Services

The Student Government Association provides certain services to her student constituents. When we consider the sundry aspects of these service commitments, there are two obvious distinctions. First, are those cocurricular functions reflected in the concert and lecture series which met with tremendous success in this year of debut.

Second, are the mixers, movies, rallies and other activities which furnish a portion of a student's social experience. All of these services offer an essential supplement to academic life and should be continued and improved. There is an inherent danger, however, in the expansion and multiplication of extracurricular activities.

In their supervision of the classes and organizations, the Dean of Student Activities and the SGA should be aware of a massive and crowded social calendar, and insist on greater preparation and foresight to ensure quality presentations rather than a quantity of events.

Communication

In the area of communication between administration and student body which I, consider to be of primary importance, and in which the present student government has had it greatest successes. Serving as a liason organization representative of student opinion, we have increasingly dedicated ourselves to greater concern in academic affairs.

Although we encountered criticism from certain conservatives, we have achieved results beneficial to the University community. A re-alignment of the semesters, a change in the attendance regulations, and an investigation of the present academic grading system are a few salient examples of the advantages attained through the combined efforts and discussions of students, administration, and faculty.

Although there are no University policies which are above questioning, students must be always diligent in their positions of delegated authority and proceed with intelligent preparation and respect.

Villanova is a university everchanging and undergoing an evolution that can be seen only by casually observing the physical plant or by reflecting on its enhanced academic status and accomplishments. We are important because, as students, we are Villanova. And the progress that is made now, or even over the next twenty years, will directly affect us as students and Villanova graduates.

Reflecting this idea of sensibility and maturity, the relationship with the faculty and administration can truly be a mutually beneficial one.

Awareness

I have spoken of a three-fold responsibility — government, service, and liason, but underlying this delineation of responsibility is the pervading issue of legislative awareness which must be foremost in the actions of congress members at all times.

And now, to Tom Furst, I can only bequeath much to do and only very little time.

Perhaps the least cumbersome task for the President is serving as chairman of the congress and senate. His most difficulty problem, however, stems from his complex responsibility as student body President, requiring his constant attention to University problems. In this phase of his dual executive position, he stands more alone, for here he must recognize that while he may and should delegate authority, he can never delegate responsibility.

Cognizant of these responsibilities, the President must, above all else, adhere to those convictions which he holds to be true, even at the risk of unpopular opinion. In retrospect, while I will admit to occasions when another method or approach might have been more prudent, I can sincerely say that I acted at all times in a manner in which I believed to be the best interests of Villanova.

Perhaps the biggest disappointment this year has been the inability of each congress member to do his share of the work. The solution to this question rests with the caliber of the representatives themselves, who must not be satisfied with popular election but must be willing to accept the corresponding responsibilities and duties.

Moderator

To our moderator, Father Appicci, and to the active members of the old congress, may I extend my personal gratitude and congratulations for their accomplishments.

Working in student government has been an exciting and rewarding experience, not only because of the important task in which we are involved, but also because of the outstanding officers, committee chairmen, and others with whom it has been my good fortune to serve.

Much has been begun — but there is a great deal more. I respectfully submit the results of the efforts of the Student Government Association, 1963-1964 — and extend to the new Congress my best wishes in the year ahead.

Crime Researcher Ian Lennox Discusses Philadelphia Crime

Mr. Ian Lennox, director of research for the Philadelphia Crime Commission, addressed the Villanova Sociological Society on April 23. His topic was "Crime in Philadelphia".

Mr. Lennox presented a brief historical sketch of the commission's role with regard to both crime and the treatment of criminals. He then outlined several aims of the Crime Commission, such as its objective approach to law enforcement and crime prevention and its desire to ascertain public participation.

Finally, he discussed the nature of crime data and its shortcomings with regard to crime prevention and law enforcement and summarized recent trends in major crimes in Philadelphia for the years 1954-64.

There was a question and answer period at the end of the lecture. Among the various topics raised were: problems in categorizing different crimes; some of the social causes of criminal behavior; crime in specific communities in Philadelphia; and crime as it is related to race relations.

Mr. Francis Bonner, member of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania's Human Relations Committee spoke on "Government Responsibility in the Area of Civil Rights" last Thursday during the activities period. The Sociology Club presented a symposium that same evening moderated by Mr. James Mitchell of the Villanova English Department. The symposium was on J. D. Salinger's "Catcher in the Rye".

Lou Petrillo. club president, announced that the final meeting will take place on May 7. Plans for next year will be discussed at this time.

class hours on a single day. No student should be scheduled for consecutive hours over lunch period unless the student gives his consent in writing.

Minor

The minor field of study is offered to the Class of 1966. In this study, the minor discipline should be coordinated as closely as possible with the major field. Therefore, no major areas of specialization in the College of Engineering and only economics in the College of Commerce and Finance will be acceptable as minor disciplines in the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences.

In the minor field, the student is required to complete twelve semester hours of credit, one course during each of the last four semesters. These courses must be "200" courses unless a "100" course is required as a prerequisite for an advanced course.

Let's say for a minute, this is you.

Once you wear the gold bars of a second lieutenant in the United States Air Force, what's in store for you?

Well, you may fly an aircraft entrusted with a vital defense mission. Or you may lead a research team tackling problems on the frontier of knowledge. You'll be helping to run an organization that's essential to the safety of the free world.

Sounds like you'll be called on to shoulder a good deal of responsibility, doesn't it?

But when you come right down to it, that's what your college years have been preparing you for. You've got ability and a good education. Now's the time to put them to work!

You'll have every opportunity to prove your talents in the Air Force. By doing so, you can put yourself and your country ahead.

If you're not already enrolled in ROTC, you can earn your commission at Air Force Officer Training School—a three-month course that's open to both men and women college graduates. To apply, you must be within 210 days of graduation.

Ring Orders For The Class Of 1966 Will Be Taken In Dougherty Hall

by Dan Ding

Ring orders for the class of 1966 will be taken in the center lounge of Dougherty Hall, May 12, 13, and 14. These orders will be filled by late October, 1964. Also, orders for members of classes other than 1966 may be placed anytime in the University Shop allowing from 8 to 12 weeks to make a delivery.

All students desiring to purchase a ring must file the following information when making their order: the year of their graduation and the degree with which they will graduate. Likewise, they should decide, in advance, on which hand they intend to wear their ring since the left hand differs from the right hand in ring sizes. The student should also consider the wide range of weights in which his ring may be made. Regardless of the weight, however, all rings will look the same on a person's hand.

More Information

The most pertinent information involves — the color, gold, which is preferred, green, yellow, or white; the stone of their preference — ranging from Amethyst to the white Sapphire; and the three initials which he will want engraved on his ring. Complete information, regarding all types of rings and stones which may be procured, can be obtained in the University Shop.

All orders must be accompanied by a minimum deposit of $10. The balance is due when the ring is delivered. Rings will be held by the University Shop for a period of sixty days after they are received. If not picked up in this time, the rings will be returned to the manufacturer and deposit will be forfeited to the manufacturer. Likewise, since all rings are made to an individual's personal specifications, orders cancelled after May 15, 1964, will also result in forfeit of the $10 deposit.

Dr. Alexander Rudhart Speaks On The Post-War Situation

The Villanova History Club will present its second lecture of the semester on Wednesday, May 13, in 209 Bartley Hall. The guest lecturer will be Dr. Alexander Rudhart, associate professor of history at Villanova. His topic will be "The Dilemma of German Liberalism".

Considering the overall post-war situation in the Western World this topic should prove to be an informative one.

Dr. Rudhart is known by many Villanovans to be erudite as well as a comprehensive class lecturer.

Dr. Rudhart arrived at Villanova in 1954. He received a Doctorate in Political Science from the University of Vienna in 1952 and received his Ph.D. from the same institution in 1962.

On the following day, Thursday, May 14, in 209 Bartley Hall the moderator of History Club will discuss one of the primary purposes of the club which is to prepare interested students for graduate school. With this unique purpose it is hoped that the club will become a clearing house for the latest information on such topics.

Members and all those contemplating graduate school or professional school such as law, would be the prime benefactors of such a program and should show by their presence the interest they have. Election of officers for the fall semester will follow.

Senate Elections

In the Senate elections, which McGuinn called "very close", the following SGA members garnered enough votes to win and will serve on the Senate, along with the six SGA officers and the three class presidents.

From the class of 1965, John Smock, Charlie Zaccaria, and Bill Manfred were elected. Selected from the class of 1966 were Bob Dean and Dave Banmiller. The new members of the Senate from the class of 1967 are Ward Williams and Ken Hedges.

President-elect Furst appointed the three executive vice-presidents at the meeting. They are: Dave Moore, student affairs vice-president; Jack Ryan, student government vice-president; and Rusty Miller, educational affairs vice-president. Bob Dean was selected as Parliamentarian and, by virtue of this office, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

The departing president presented a stereo record player to the Rev. Richard Appicci, OSA, moderator of SGA, in cognizance of his great contribution to the organization's achievements.

Old Shea House Renamed In Honor Of Fr. Moriarity

The Shea house located across Lancaster Pike was blessed last Friday, May 1, by the Rev. John A. Klekotka, Assisting Father Klekotka were the Rev. Joseph W. Kemme, OSA, vice-president for student affairs and the Rev. Marshall Halphen, prefect of the new freshmen dormitory.

The building was named in honor of Father Patrick Moriarity, OSA, who purchased the site upon which Villanova now exists for the price of $18,000.

In addressing the students living in the hall, Father Klekotka stated that Father Moriarity's purpose in buying the property was for the "most important job of preparing men for the order". When Father Moriarity decided to make Villanova a general school he was considered foolhardy because of its location.

"The physical value of the plant has increased tremendously," Father stated. "The total value today is over twenty million dollars." "Today," Father Klekotka continued, "you couldn't find a better campus in the country."

He said the change was "indicative for two reasons. We owe a great deal to former Augustinians who made great sacrifices to support the institution and secondly to God's providence." He quoted Father as saying, "Nobody could stop the growth of Villanova."

Father exhorted the students living there to prepare themselves not only for a career at Villanova but to adhere to the principles of the Christian life. He asked them to always remember the great sacrifices that have been made for them and requested the students to live up to them.

Mike Rosani Of ICG Developes New Plans For Coming Semester

Newly elected President Mike Rosani presented his tentative slate of projects for next year's program to the Intercollegiate Conference on Government's campus chapter last Thursday.

Rosani was elected at the meeting previous to last Thursday's session. He replaces Jerry Cardamone — graduating senior and president of the organization during the current year.

Also elected to office in the group were: Jim Rafi — vice-president, Matt Roche — treasurer, Larry Reiter — secretary, and Bob Dean — student council representative. Frank Burke was appointed parliamentarian of the club which specializes in parliamentary procedural ability.

Quarterback Dave Connell prepares to get off a pass despite the efforts of an unidentified defender during the football team's annual Blue and White Scrimmage last Saturday.

'Cats End Spring Practice; Injuries Key To Success

By Bob McIntyre

Saturday afternoon, Villanova's spring football practice drew closer to an end as the annual Blue and White inter-squad scrimmage took place at the Villanova Stadium. The weather was sunny for a change and both teams acknowledged by trying to put everything they had into the gruelling three hour make-believe contest.

Connell Directs Attack

Coach Bell gave the blue squad the ball first and they quickly showed why they are probably the key to next years hopes for a successful campaign. Under the control of Quarterback Dave Connell, the Blues within ten plays moved in to score. The key play was a handoff to Dick Sernyak who cut sharply around the left side and then headed for the middle of the field and was gone, as the blues hit hard with some key blocks.

The White team with Number 2 Quarterback Don Koshlap, just couldn't get the ball moving so the Blues again took over. This time the Blues used last years famed roll-out patterns to gain large yardage. Then Connell faded back into the pocket and spotted John McDonnell cutting into the center and hit him for the score. Again the Whites couldn't score and so it went all afternoon as the Blues kept pouring it on through recovered fumbles an dinterceptions.

Big Play for Fry

The prettiest play of the afternoon came when freshman lineman, John Fry, of the White squad, pulled down an intercepted pass thrown by Gerry Bellotti and as he was being tackled he tipped the ball to Tom O'Connor who went the rest of the rout untouched.

However, most of the key plays during the game concerned themselves with the Blue squad. Right halfback Joe Santomauro, took off around the right end and burned up the slightly wet field as he went about 85 yards to score on just pure speed. Dick Sernyak again scored as he plunged over from the 1. Emmett Michaels, who played well throughout the entire scrimmage, scored the extra point and shortly thereafter intercepted a pass from Don Koshlap.

The final tally of the afternoon came when fullback Tom Brown took a handoff from Bellotti and bulled his way in for the score.

All in all the scrimmage was very revealing in some respects. If the team expects more than just a running game, something must be done about the passing situation. It leaves much to be desired. Again as last year, the end sweeps look very strong and the running of fullback Tom Brown up the middle should provide much needed yardage. The lines of both teams looked very strong at, but on the whole performed erratically.

Health is a?

The big question in the minds of many is how the 'Cats going to be next year? Coach Bell put it this way, "This team could go all the way if stay healthy."

A WORD FROM DIEGES AND CLUST

Gold in its pure form is designated as 24K, and as such has a fineness or purity of at least 99. 98%. However, because of its high value, and also because in its unalloyed state it is too soft for general commercial use, gold is mixed (alloyed) with other metals. Generally speaking, these are copper, silver, nickle, and zinc.

The proportion by weight of gold in a specific alloy or melt in comparison to the total weight of all other base metals determines its karat. For example, 18 karat gold is 18 parts by weight of pure gold and 6 parts by weight of copper, silver, nickle, and zinc in varying proportions. The same is true with respect to 14K and 10K.

In the United States, as well as in most other parts of the world, it is permissible to designate as karat gold any alloy which contains less than 10 part by weight of pure gold. The general consensus of opinion is that a metal with less than 10 parts of gold is no longer basically a gold alloy, and, if it is called, then there is a tendency to deceive or mislead the buying public.

The 10K alloy from which common jewelry products are manufactured is in fact the lowest grade gold alloy in everyday use. Any given quantity of 10 K gold contains less than 50% by weight of pure gold.

For years many manufacturers were forced, both because of high cost factors and inherent production limitations, to restrict themselves to the use of 10K gold. However, there has been a growing demand for karat gold with a higher quality . . . a higher intrisic value. It is for this season that Dieges & Clust has made 14K gold available to some of its customers. As explained above, the 14K gold being offered by Dieges & Clust has a minimum of 14 parts by weight of fine gold in each article which bears our 14K stamp. This means that more than 50% by weight of a 14K ring is in fact pure gold.

However, before 14K gold could be offered in class rings to selected customers, it was necessary that Dieges & Clust first assure itself of the durability of the specific alloy that would be used. A series of tests were conductd over an extended period

Mermen Schedule Workouts; Anticipates Olympic Trials

by Buzz Langan

Villanova's swimming team will be honored tonight at the First Annual Swimming Dinner held at Schrafft's Country Restaurant in Eastchester, New York. The affair, sponsored by the Villanova Alumni Club of Westchester County, will be the climax of the team's most successful season. During the campaign, the 'Cats posted an 8-2 log, finished fourth in the ECAC Championships and placed eighth in the NCAA Championships.

In the eleven years since the revival of the sport, Villanova teams coached by Ed Geisz, with the assistance of Jack Lumsden, have won eighty-two while losing only forty-one meets.

Club President Edward H. Mergens has announced that the guest speaker for the evening will be the renowned Robert H. Kiphuth, former coach of Yale University. Kiphuth will also receive an award in recognition of his many contributions to swimming.

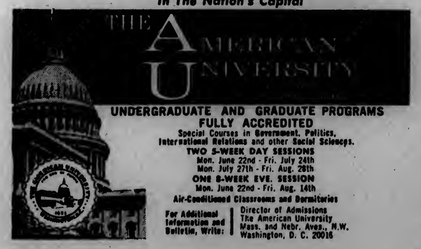
Awards

Among other awards to be given will be the Diamond State Club of Delaware Seniors Awards and the General Alumni Outstanding Swimmer Award. The latter will be presented by Alumni President William E. Schubert. There will also be several scholastic swimming awards given for outstanding swimmers in the public, private and parochial school ranks.

Members of the team will spend the summer preparing themselves for various swim meets in their own localities. The majority, including Co-captains Dick McDonough and Jack Geoghegan and Paul Winn will work out under the guidance of Alexander, coach of the North Jersey Swim Club. Bill Livingood and Pat Sullivan will spend the summer under the direction of Lumsden. Coach Geisz will coach the Whitemarsh Country Club's swimming team, Ray Donnelly and John O'Brien will work out in their home towns during the summer.

Summer Meets

Some of the outstanding meets of the summer season are the Tri-City Meet in early July at Kelly Pool, Philadelphia, and the AAU Individual District Meet and the Eastern Championship, also held at Kelly Pool. The big event occurs in late August when the Olympic tryouts will be held at the New York World's Fairgrounds.



Despite the graduation of All-Americans McDonough and Geoghegan, the team retains All-Americans Rick Girdler, Donnelly and Winn. Varsity record holders Livingood and Ken Herr will also bolster the squad. As of yet, no definite schedule for next year has been announced.

Jones Drafted By Detroit Pistons All-American Picked In Third Round

by Steve Freind

Climaxing a fantastic career at Villanova, Wally Jones was drafted on Monday by the Detroit Pistons. The All-American back court ace was taken in the third round, ahead of such notable stars as Fred Crawford of St. Bonaventure, Kansas State's Willie Murrell, Vic Rouse and Ron Miller of Loyola and LaSalle great Frank Corace. Oh yes, and Steve Courtin.

The Pistons' move was a surprise, as Jones was expected to be picked up by either the Boston Celtics, Baltimore Bullets or the Philadelphia 76ers. Celtic coach Red Auerbach had expressed a particular interest in Jones, traveling to New York to watch him in the Holiday Festival. Never one to disappoint a fan, Wally responded with a 31 point performance to cop the Festival's Most Valuable Player Award and lead the 'Cats to the championship.

Pleased With Pick

Jones was pleased at being drafted by the Pistons. "I've played in Detroit several times," he said, "and I like the town very much. I'm looking forward to trying out with the Pistons." When Jones joins the Pistons he will see a familiar face in Ray 'Chink" Scott, former West Philadelphia High star. Scott and Jones spend the summer playing ball at Philadelphia courts.

Questioned on how he thought he would fare in the NBA, Jones replied, "I really can't say, but I'm willing to put all my effort into making the team." Former Villanova coach Al Severance was less reserved. "I think Wally has a great future in the pros," said the Squire. 'The fact that he was chosen in such an early round is proof of the regard he is held in. He's a great eam ball player, and I think he can be the modus operandi of the Pistons."

Severance is right that Jones early draft is a tribute to his ability. It also proves another point. Villanova fans are not the only ones to recognize greatness.

Tennis Returns To Villanova; St. Joe's Defeated In Opener

It took twenty-two years and a lot of organization, but intercollegiate competition in the sport of tennis has returned to the Villanova campus. After a tough spring filled with rain, little practice and canceled matches, Villanova's netmen came home with a 5½-3½ win over a tough St. Joseph's squad.

St. Joseph's

The late April match, squeezed in between rain clouds and cold weather, saw the Wildcat team seize five of the six singles matches. Steve Carney bested St. Joe's number one man, 6-2, 2-6, 6-3. John McCormick fought back in the number three slot 4-6, 6-3, 6-0. Jerry Green, Bill Nook and Dave Jacobs took their opposition in straight sets. Bob Patchen lost the lone singles match in a long three set marathon.

With victory in the Villanova camp, coach Bob Mulligan mixed some of the other boys who remained on the squad into the doubles matches. The Blue and White split the first doubles, while losing the other two for the final score.

Although this was the first intercollegiate competition and victory in tennis for Villanova since World War II, the 'Cats can look forward to a bright future. Coach Mulligan carries only one senior on a squad of ten and it is believed that much more latent talent exists in the student body. Dick Zeron, a junior, and senior Don Nudham work with Mulligan as team managers and assistant coaches.

Organization

With Father Richard Appicci, OSA, as moderator and the small financial aid supplied by the Student Government Association, Villanova has been able to put itself into a sport that demands its presence. All the schools on the tennis teams schedule this year and those schools whose games were canceled due to rain were more than anxious to see Villanova participating in tennis once again.

Coach Mulligan stated that he is quite pleased with the talent and enthusiasm of his players and also with the cooperation of the local colleges in trying to fit Villanova into their schedules. Mulligan is satisfied that the team was able to "get off the ground" this year in spite of last minute arrangements and mid-winter complications.

He hopes that the interest in the sport and its success this year on a limited, student-organized basis will carry it over with the University's Athletic Department and Administrative Board. The establishment of tennis depends upon the approval of the Administration.

The team has six remaining matches. The 'Cats face Haverford, West Chester, Temple and Ursinus away while hosting Penn and LaSalle.

Rugby Team Trounces Temple Seeks League Championship

by Al Lupcho

The Villanova Rugby Club continued its winning ways by trouncing Temple by 21-0. The Wildcats ran, passed, and kicked to an easy victory while completely outclassing the Owls.

Jim Brandt, a junior playing wing three-quarters, started the scoring parade with a 20 yard run. The score was increased to 6-0 by Bill Glenn, a junior playing breakaway. Bill fell on a loose ball in the Owl end zone for a score. Tom James, a junior playing fly-half, kicked the conversion to increase the lead to 8-0 at halftime.

Second Half

The second half was a repeat of the first. Larry Rosintoski, a senior playing scrumhalf, scored on a 10 yard run and then kicked his own conversion for a 13-0 score.

Vic Sarkissian, a freshman playing inside three-quarters, was next to score. Vic scored on a 20 yard run thus continuing his excellent play since being inserted into the starting line-up two weeks ago.

Tom James then kicked his second conversion for a 18-0 lead.

The most sensational run of the whole game was made by Burt Lombino, a junior playing three-quarters, when he broke loose for a 30 yard run. Burt weaved and faked his way through numerous Owls on his touchdown jaunt.

Good Record

The 'Cats now own a record, of 4 wins, 2 loses, and 1 tie. In league play the Cats sport a 3-0-1 record with three big games left on the schedule.

Captain Ed Wilkinson and Coach Coghlan are eagerly awaiting this Saturday's game with the league's top team, the First Troop Philadelphia City Calvery. The game will be played at Villanova on the field across from the field house. It could decide the league title.

Specific formulae were developed under which the 14K gold alloy is furnace-hardened in order to make its qualitities of durability and wearability comparable to those of any similarly furnace hardened 10 K alloy. The results have been excellent, and for some years Dieges & Clust has been able to offer a 14K alloy, WHICH IS HIGH IN INTRINSIC VALUE, AND WHICH HAS AT LEAST THE SAME STRENGTH AND RRESISTANCE TO WEAR AS ANY 10K ALLOR.

John Brennan Takes Eastern Bowling Title In Stunning Upset

by Spence Jones

John Brennan, a Villanova junior, won the Eastern Intercollegiate Match Game Championship held May 2-3 at the Bowlmor Lanes, New York City.

His scores ranged from a low of 234 to a 262 high for sixteen games, far outdistancing his nearest rival.

Large Margin

Brennan won by seventy points and one pin under the Peterson point system. Under this system, a bowler gets one point for every fifty pins he knocks down and one point for every game he wins.

Throughout the entire twenty week winter bowling season, Brennan was the key to the Wildcat team. His 188 average was second only to a 190 mark by freshman Bruce Thomas.

Brennan has been bowling for the Main Liners for the last three years. He was the main reason the 'Cats became the 'Cats became the Delaware Valley Champs and the second best collegiate bowling team in the east this year.

Brennan's fantastic scores bettered anything ever achieved by a Wildcat Kegler. Throughout his sixteen games, Brennan never had less than six out of a possible twelve strikes.

By his stunning victory in New York, Brennan must now be considered the best collegiate bowler in the east and possibly in the nation.

Freindly Foolishness

Villanova Relays?

by Steve Freind

There is an old theory which states that form always prevail. In other words, those people with the inborn class of champions always dominate the scene, despite frantic efforts from lesser individuals to change the script. A quick glance at past events will prove the point.

Nixon flinged mud but JFK took the country. In their personal duel, Jimmy Hoffa ran second to Bobbie Kennedy. Public opinion was against her. but Liz finally led Dickie to the altar and if that's not form, nothing is. The theory works particularly well in the world of sports. In fact, there are even set dates during the year when the great ones assert themselves.

In September, it's the New York Yankees making their patented stretch run for the American League Pennant. April finds the Boston Celtics winning NBA championships, every even year Arnold Palmer dons the green blazer of the Masters Champion — and in the spring Villanova dominates the Penn Relays.

Underdog

The plot was the same for the Wildcats this year. Popular opinion ruled them out of contention and the papers stamped them with the official seal of doom. There were no Budds, Draytons or Delanys this time to spin the annual Villanova magic. The 'Cats had their stars, but none was in top form. Noel Carroll was still nursing a season long muscle pull. Tom Sullivan's brutal class schedule would hurt his performance and Vic Zwolak was having nightmares of last year's relays, when a spiked foot during warmup shattered his day.

Attention shifted to other entries. Names like Georgetown, Morgan State and Seton Hall stole the headlines. Speculation was that Villanova would be lucky to break into the winners circle even once. Wildcat Coach Jumbo Elliot added to the bleak outlook, expressing doubt about his squad's chances. This reaction was not unexpected, for Jumbo rivals Frank Leahy for the pessimism prize. Leahy, though, he always manages to surprise himself.

This year was no exception. Track buffs bocked to Franklin Field expecting to see Villanova crushed. They left mumbling strange words like Kozlowski, Uzzle, Orr and Adams. Carroll's leg suddenly felt fine, Zwolak forgot his bad dreams and Sullivan managed to tear himself away from his books for the afternoon. The 'Cats four victories equaled the Carnival record, a feat accomplished only three times in the history of the Relays. Jumbo simply smiled and acted surprised, just as the script called for.

In the wake of another Villanova domination, such personalities as Jack Kelly, Jr. and Larry Merchant have expressed the opinion that the name of the Carnival be changed to the Villanova Relays.

Barry Lesch would be mortified.

Track Team Wins Four Events In The Penn, Quantico Relays

by Steve Freind

Villanova's high flying track team retained its title as king of the cinders with two brilliant performances in as many weeks. After tying a Penn Relays record with four team victories on April 24 and 25, the 'Cats shined in their encore at the Quantico Relays last weekend.

Penn Relays

Despite advanced predictions of a weak Villanova showing, the 'Cats continued their domination of the Franklin Field Carnival. Their quadruple victory was only the third time in the history of the Relays that the feat has been accomplished.

As expected Vic Zwolak was the workhorse for the Wildcats. The rugged senior, sidelined for last year's Relays with a spiked foot, figured in three of the four Villanova triumphs. Zwolak's first call of duty was Friday's four-mile relay, where he anchored the team of Dave Hyland, Jim Orr and Tommy Sullivan to an upset over Seton Hall. The 'Cats were timed in 16:50.7.

Two hours later, Zwolak ran the final leg of the distance medley, teaming with Sullivan, Al Adams and Noel Carroll to defeat highly touted Georgetown with a 9:55.8 clocking.

The 'Cats other two victories came the next day in the sprint medley and the two-mile relay. Stan Kozlowski, Earl Horner, Marshall Uzzle and Carroll teamed up in the former event to defeat St. John's in 3:23.4. Sullivan's sizzling anchor leg in the two-mile relay provided the 'Cats with the margin of vitory over Michigan. Sullivan recorded a brilliant 1:50.1 as the 'Cats took the event in 7:31.7.

In individual events, Rolando Cruz took fourth place in the pole vault managing only 15-6 in a sub-par performance. Soph Rich Kurnik surprised with a fourth place in the shot put, with a 55-4. Villanova graduate Pat Traynor took the Olympic Development 3000 meter steeplechase with a record shattering time of 8:50.5.

Quantico Relays

After a slow start, Jumbo Elliot got his stable back into form, as the 'Cats rallied on the second day to notch four triumphs. Upset Friday in the sprint and distance medley relays, Villanova stormed back to take the steeplechase, pole vault, two-mile and 880 relays.

Rolando Cruz was back in form, shattering the Relay record with a vault of 15-11½. Cruz's pole had been split two weeks earlier in Baltimore, but the Puerto Rican easily outdistanced Dave Tork and John Uelses, who tied for second at 15.6. Zwolak breezed in the 3000 meter steeplechase with a fine 8:52.8 clocking.

Larry Livers, Earle Horner, Marshall Uzzle and Stan Kozlowski recorded a 1:25.7 timing enroute to their victory in the 880 relay. The 'Cats final victory came in the two-mile relay as the quartet of Al Adams, Jim Orr, Tom Sullivan and Noel Carroll turned the race into a rout. The 'Cats burned the eight laps in 7:36.4.

Rich Kurnik continued his promising performance, taking third place in the shot put. Ken Coniglio gave the 'Cats another third place in the 120 high hurdles.

Wildcats Break Even In Two Games Rip St. Joe's, Yield To Seton Hall

The 'Cats, in their eighth game of the season, beat the St. Joe Hawks by 13-3. The game was played at the losers home field and was the 'Cats fourth win against four losses.

Led by the strong pitching of senior Captain Bill Smith and the hard hitting of Art Mahan Jr., the 'Cats took a 1-0 lead early in the game and never relinquished their advantage.

Bill Smith, in winning his third game of the year, pitched his best game of the year. Against the weak St. Joe nine he allowed only six hits while his teammates collected their highest total of runs thus far this season.

Contributing very heavily to the thirteen run total was Mahan who had three R.B.I.'s Mahan the leading hitter of the day went four for five with two doubles and two singles. Not content with just getting on base he stole four more, twice stealing third due to good leads on the pitcher.

The longest single hit of the day was by outfielder Mike Zaia who slamed a three run homer over the left field fence to make the score 4-0.

The Seton Hall game, however, served to lower the 'Cats record to four and five.

On the day following the defeat of the Hawk's, the nine from Seton Hall, led by their pitcher Jim Watson, toppled the 'Cats 1-0.

Tony Candelmo, the pitcher credited with the loss, pitched the best game of his Villanova career. Tony, a junior, held the Pirates to five hits and only one of these was a respectable shot. As fate might have it, though this one hit turned into the only run of the game.

Following this hit another one of the Pirates slapped a soft hit double to right, their only back to back hits of the day, and drove in the tie breaking and game winning run.

This game, which ran the 'Cats road record to 1-2, was both Villanova's and Seton Hall's best defensive game of the year and truely could be called a pitcher's duel.

The victory over St. Joe's kept the 'Cats in first place in Big Five competition. With only two games remaining with Big Five teams, one with St. Joe on the 11th of May and the other with LaSalle on the 14th of May, the 'Cats have an excellent chance of carrying off the league crown.

With their record against Big Five now at 3-0 they will have to count on heads up ball to finish with a perfect league record.

Pitcher Bill Smith follows through on his delivery during the St. Joe's game. The 'Cats posted 13-3 victory behind Smith's pitching and the hitting of Art Mahan, Jr. to even their log at 4-4. The next day Seton Hall edged 'Cats 1-0.

Chappel Selected To Give Commencement Address

Arthur Chappel, a sociology major, has been selected as student commencement speaker for the Class of 1964. Art will receive a B.S. degree in Sociology.

Art Chappel

Art has been an active participator and leader during his four years here at Villanova. He recently relinquished the Presidential reins of the marching and concert bands, in which he has been a four year member; as a junior he was its Secretary-Treasurer.

He is an avid music enthusiast. Besides playing in the band, he dee-jayed on WWVU Radio for some time. This year, he served as WWVU's Program Director.

Art has not however limited his interests to the music field alone. During his sophomore year he was a member of the Publicity and Religious Affairs committee. As a junior he was a member of the Junior Steering and Mothers' Day committee. He has been a member of the Tutoring Program for three years and the Sanctuary Society for four years.

Art is enrolled in Delta Epsilon Sigma, the honorary Arts fraternity, with a 3.7 cumulative average. This year he was selected for Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities. Just recently he was awarded a fellowship in Sociology at Boston University to study psychiatric case work with children.

He said, "I was very happy to have been selected as commencement speaker. This is something we should all strive for and that we should attempt to return something to Villanova for what we have taken."

Art was selected from a group of six seniors on the basis of his speech and delivery.

WWVU Radio Station Makes Intercollegiate First Place

by Tom Dabney

WWVU was named an All American station among national ratings of collegiate members of the Intercollegiate Broadcasting System on May 5. WWVU was rated number one in its Class III as a station with a listener population of under 2000. The number one rating earned them recognition as the third best in the nation.

In the number one position as an All Amerian was the University of Maryland as the best station in Class I broadcasting to an audience of over 5000. In Class II is the University of Mississippi which broadcasts to between 2000 and 5000 listeners.

Awards

The awards were made on the basis of questionaire sent to each of the member stations of IBS, earlier in the broadcast year. They were also judged in five other categories.

First was the number of listeners reached by the station. Second was the type of programming, the use of networks and contributions to IBS programming. Third was the size of the staff proportional to the school's enrollment. Fourth was school appropriations, and the amount of national local commercial advertising. The size of facilities and the amount of equipment owned by the station was last.

Quote

According to College Radio magazine, a publication of IBS, WWVU excelled in all of these areas. It said that WWVU'S "national participation is quite high . . . the programming is excellent, but public relations is even better, for this small station. A weekly newspaper Monitor, highlights the active department's Publication's list."

National Coverage

The mention to its national participation is in reference to station's coverage of national figures of interest whether in the realm of politics, music, news, or sports. WWVU has developed a reputation for keeping national and local publications and communications media informed of the latest happenings in these areas. Of recent note was its coverage of the Mayor Daley lecture which was played back to WGN radio of Chicago. and in the music field, the interview with Slide Hampton of national musical fame.

Over 1350 To Receive Degrees At June 1 Commencement

Approximately 1375 Villanova students will receive degrees in the annual commencement exercises on June 1. This number has steadily increased over the years and this year's is the largest ever.

Commencement exercises will be held in the stadium, except in the event of inclement weather, when they will be held in the Field House. A crowd of approximately 13 thousand is expected to jam the stadium.

Featured Speaker

The Rev. Gerald B. McDevitt, auxillary bishop of Philadelphia, will address the graduates. Bishop McDevitt recently addressed a session of the Vatican Council.

Bishop McDevitt will later receive an honorary degree which will be presented by the Rev. John A. Klekotka, president of the University.

Other Degrees

Three other honorary degrees will be conferred. The recipients include: Rear Admiral Martin T. Macklin, commanding officer of the U.S. naval hospital in Portsmouth, Va.; Mr. Albert J. Nesbitt, chairman of the board of John T. Nesbitt Inc.; Mr. James A. Trainor, executive vice-president of Friden Inc.

An Academic procession will precede the commencement, beginning at 10 a.m. from Dougherty Hall.

The Rev. James A. Donnellon, chairman of the Board of Trustees will preside at the ceremonies which will begin at 11:00 a.m.

Statistics

According to figures received from the recorder's office, approximately 1050 of the prospective graduates will receive Bachelor Degrees. This includes about 93 students who will graduate from the University's part-time evening program. Of these about 373 will have completed courses in the field of Arts and Science, 294 in Commerce and Finance, 200 in Engineering and about 43 in Nursing.

In addition to this, about 225 students will receive Masters Degrees, while 47 are expected to graduate from the University's Law School.

Teaching Award

The Lindback Teaching Awards will also be presented this year to two members of the faculty who are selected as outstanding in their field by fellow professors and certain prominent members of the student body. The award is presented annually and carries a stipend of $500.

Shortly after the exercises, 46 of the new graduates, who have completed four years of courses in the NROTC, will be commissioned as Naval or Marine Corps Officers.

Senior Nurses To Receive Pins In Annual Ceremony

The fourth annual Pinning ceremony for graduating seniors of the University's College of Nursing will be held on Sunday, May 17. The ceremony will be held at 2:30 p.m. in the University Chapel. Thirty-four seniors will be receiving pins.

The pinning activities, initiated in 1961 by Dean Marion Schrum of the College of Nursing, will have the very Rev. John A. Klekotka, OSA, University President, conferring the honors and addressing the group.

Rev. Michael Gallagher, OSA. will celebrate solemn benedition and Rev. Louis Rongione, OSA. and Rev. William Hopkins, OSA. will serve as deacon and subdeacon.

This year's graduating class is the first class to complete four years under the tutelage of Dean Schrum. The ceremony represents the completion of the program as a student of professional nursing and takes the place of the capping ceremony of the three-year program.

Following the ceremony, a reception will be held in Dougherty Hall for the graduates and their families or friends. The ceremony in the Chapel is open to all students in the College of Nursing.

Annual Senior Blast Slated For May 23 At Fisher's Pools

The final social function of the year for the class of '64, Senior Parting Festival, will be held on Saturday, May 23 at Fisher's Pools near Norristown.

Tickets for the affair are now on sale in the Pie Shoppe at $6.50 a couple. The festival will begin at 2 p.m. and continue until 8 p.m. Fisher's Pools is equipped with basketball courts, a baseball field, ping pong tables, and a swimming pool. The affair is planned to be more formal than previous years.

The main entertainment for the day will be Gary "U.S." Bonds. Also featured are the Defenders.

Co-chairmen for the affair, Philip Keegan and Jack Geoghegan are looking forward to enthusiastic participation by the class in this final affair.

Students March To Tolentine For Commencement Protest

About a half an hour before noon last Wednesday morning students began to gather in the warm sunshine in front of the Pie Shoppe entrance to Dougherty Hall.

A spirit of levity ran through the air but they were gathering for what they considered a more serious purpose, a march of protest to Tolentine Hall.

By a quarter to the hour the group had grown to about two hundred milling, sitting students. They were waiting for the word to march. Ranged around the sidelines were reporters from the metropolitan dailies.

The word came and the group moved out in orderly fashion. When they reached Austin Hall small segments of the marchers broke out in songs, the Villanova marching song, "My Country 'tis of Thee", and "We Shall Overcome".

Respectful Silence

Passing the University Chapel, the marchers maintained a respectful silence and as they wound their way to the main doors of Tolentine, their presence was marked by the subdued rumble of voices in conversant tones.

Progress of the march was halted at the closed portals of the building. The march itself was more or less spontaneous and unexpected.

Student Petition

It resulted from a petition circulated among the undergraduate student body on the previous day which called for a rescheduling of the commencement ceremony.

The request for the rescheduling resulted from a misunderstanding as to who and what the speaker was. Students pointed to other Catholic schools getting figures of international import, such as President Johnson at Holy Cross or Douglas Home at Boston College. There was a fear

Senator Hugh Scott Tells VUPU Of His Opposition To Two Chinas

by Bob Healy

Hugh Scott, junior Senator from Pennsylvania, debated the Villanova Political Union on the resolution that this House opposes a two China policy in the United Nations.

Scott, in his main presentation, was opposed to a two China policy because he thought it would give implicit approval to a war-like and non-peace loving nation. He said that too often today realists tend to overlook the facts that China caused Korean bloodshed and has a reputation of being war mongering.

According to the Senator, Communist China is not a "paper-tiger but a fire-breathing dragon."

Conquerors

China has a long history of conquering their conquerors. Once Red China troops enter a country such as North Vietnam they are no longer Red Chinese but Vietnamese nationalists.

Technically, the United Nations is still at war with Red China, for no peace treaty concerning North Korea was ever signed. He said that recognition of Red China.

Final Comments

The final comments of the Senator's main speech were directed towards the future of the Communist China. He said, "When China is ready to renounce subversion and violence, then it will be welcomed into the family of nations."

Following Scott's argument, members of the union took the floor to either argue pro or con to the resolution.

Sophomores Entertain Orphans In Annual Spring Project

The Sophomore Class sponsored an orphan's outing on Saturday, May 9 as part of their annual Spring Project. The outing was held at Villanova from 10:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Approximately 114 orphans from St. John's Orphanage were entertained.

Under the direction of Frank Eck, general chairman, the outing included activities ranging from science exhibits to stagecoach rides. The orphans and student 'hosts' were divided into groups of four.

Under sunny skies, the morning began with a tour of the campus and various buildings, such as John Barry Hall. The orphans then viewed exhibits and demonstrations in Mendel Hall.

The exhibits prepared by the undergraduate students and a few faculty members embraced the fields of chemistry, physics, and astronomy. They were geared to the understanding of the young. A special movie was also shown in the Planetarium.

Lunch was served in the dayhop cafeteria. There was ample food for the participants. Immediately following lunch, the groups enjoyed stagecoach rides around the campus and attended the Villanova-Quantico track meet, the varsity baseball game with Senton Hall, and the Villanova-Hartwick College lacrosse contest.

In the afternoon's finale, the youngsters were given toys and said their good-byes. The buses then took them back to St. John's Orphanage. The project was described by the class officers as the most successful orphans outing ever.

The programming was given its rating on the basis of the numerous and varied types of shows that is produced throughout the boradcast year. Of significance in music shows were the month-long Festivals of Music each semester which ran the gamut from classical through folk, to the off-beat contemporary jazz. In public affairs, the programs were on current topics of national, local, and campus prominence. Among them were included programs which featured such people as Congressman-elect William Green, Jr., democratic-Senatorial candidate Genevieve Blatt, and former mayor of Philadelphia, Richardson Dilworth.

As College Radio stated each of the stations selected as an All American "was top in its class."

Blue Key Society Elects New Officers

Villanova's Blue Key organization has announced its new officers for next year. John Smock will assume the reign of presidency; Jack Ryan — Vice-president; Leo Carroll — Secretary, and Paul Dixon will be Treasurer.

Under the auspices of President Smock, plans are currently being drawn up concerning next September's orientation week for the class of '68. In addition, for the second consecutive year, Blue Key members will contact incoming frosh during the summer months with the hope of instilling in them the true Villanova spirit.

Also, fifteen new members from the current Junior, Sophomore, and Freshman classes have been admitted to the organization.

Resolution Passed By Knights To Assist VAMP Summer Project

Kevin Shea, outgoing Grand Knight, has announced that a resolution has been passed by the Knights of Columbus to donate $800 from their treasury to assist the Volunteer to Mexico Program. VAMP (Villanova Aid to Mexico Program) is a summer project which will involve 15 Villanova students who will devote this summer's vacation to work among the people in Mexico and to aid them both spiritually and materially.

The offering has also been endorsed by the newly elected Grand Knight, Chris Fisher. VAMP is in need of funds to cover the travel expenses as well as living costs for the students while they are in Mexico.

Father George Lawless, OSA, moderator, expressed the hope that other organizations on campus might deem it proper to contribute to the project financially.

For further information concerning VAMP contact Father Michael Gallagher, OSA, or Father John O'Rourke, OSA.

Steering Committees Accept Applications For Next Year

The Steering Committee plays a large part in the various activities of the classes. The Steering Committees of the Junior and Senior Classes were no exception to this policy.

The Steering Committee of the Senior Class consisted of 40 members who were divided into three groups. Although each group has a specific purpose, they function as a unit throughout the year.

The social group was responsible for the Class party in December, the successful Homecoming Weekend on October 5, and the various committees for senior weekend.

The educational group has promoted job interviews and met with John A. Moritz of the university's Placement to stimulate interest in job opportunities for the Senior Class. This group also wrote to various colleges to gain information on an honor code.

The investigation group functioned to promote new activities in the Senior Class. They tried to plan a musical play with the theater group, but there were no available dates.

According to Senior Class President, Jim Murphy, the Committee was proportioned with the interests from different colleges. This was done to maintain the group as a functional group, not a status group.

Frank Eck, president of the Junior Class for the 1964-65 school year, has announced that the application period for the Junior Class Steering Committee will end tomorrow at 2:30 p.m. Applications are available in the Student Council Office on the second floor of Dougherty Hall. These must be answered and returned by the stipulated time.

Eck also announced the procedure for the selection of the committee. Tomorrow, a list of the applicants will be posted on the Sophomore bulletin board for purposes of identification. From this posted list, the four officers of the class plus the representatives to the Student Government Association from the various divisions will separately select approximately 30 students for the committee. On Saturday, this twelve member body will meet and by process of elimination, select the committee totaling approximately 30.

Announcement of the Steering Committee will be made some time during the week of May 17.

It is requested that each applicant see as many of the selecting body to voice personal opinions concerning certain issues of class concern. The applicant is asked to give constructive criticism of plans for next year, how he could expound upon them as well as what policies the Steering Committee should pursue for next year.

Eck has also announced that there are two suggestion boxes available to the students who may have any suggestion for the class. For off-campus students, suggestions can be mailed to the Junior Class Suggestion Box; PO Box 971, Villanova University, Villanova, Pa.; and for those resident students who do not wish to mail a letter, suggestions can be placed in the class box in the Student Council Office. It is requested that those who have worthy suggestions or constructive criticisms for the class use these available means to voice their opinions.

Singers Close Busy Season With Mother's Day Concert

The Villanova Singers officially closed their concert year on Monday, May 4 at Mothers' Day, 1964. This was also the close of their most successful and expanded concert year. Next year Father Doherty, moderator for the club, forecast an even bigger and more expanded concert and tour program.

This year the Singers sang as usual at the local women's colleges: Cabrini, Rosemont, Holy Family, Chestnut Hill and Immaculata. During their main concert tour they visited Dunbarton College in Washington, D.C.; Georgian Court in Lakewood, N.J.; Newton College of the Sacred Heart, Newton, Mass.; and St. Elizabeth's, College, Convent Station, N.J.

In March they opened their second annual Midwest tour. They sang at Mount Saint Mary's of the Spring, Columbus, Ohio and at Mary Manse College in Toledo, Ohio. In Illinois they stopped at Barat College in Lake Forest. The Singers closed out the tour in Detroit, Michigan where they appeared at Mary Grove College. As of last year this had been the full extent of the Singers' tour program.

This season under the moderation of Father Doherty and with Mr. Herbert Fiss as music director, the Singers added a series of special programs and appearances to their concert program, they performed with Georgian Court Glee Club in a special Christmas concert.

On Easter, under the auspices of WPEN Radio in Philadelphia, the Singers recorded a special selection of Easter music for the Mutual Broadcasting Network. This special half hour was presented on Easter Sunday evening coast-to-coast on the Mutual radio network and its affiliated stations.

Recently in the Field House they sang with the Immaculata Glee Club with the accompaniment of the Curtis Symphony Orchestra under the conduction of Mr. William Smith.

They performed their last on-the-road concert at Mount Saint Mary's High School in Plainfield, N.J. This was a special benefit performance, the proceeds going to the high school's scholarship fund.

At all the concerts the Spires, under the direction of John Sperger, sang a format of folk songs. Lou Perstillio, the Singers' soloist, also performed his own special rendition of both classical and popular songs during the concerts.

The Singers recently held an election for new officers for the coming year. Elected were: President, Mike Neuman; Vice-president, George Esser; Secretary, Tom Westhoff, Treasurer, Frank Romano; Student Council Representative John Somers.

The forecast for the coming year calls for one of even greater expansion. According to Father Doherty the concert program tour will be extended to cover over twelve states up and down the eastern seaboard. As yet not all the schools have been chosen for on-the-road tour.

This increased schedule of singing commitments points up one thing if nothing else: that the Singers are rapidly becoming a nationally recognized group. In comparison to its format of several years ago there is a greater degree of difference.

Theatre Department Receives Fellowship From Shubert Group

Mr. Richard Duprey, Chairman of Villanova's Graduate Theatre Department, has announced that Villanova University has been selected as one of the thirteen universities in the country to receive a newly established Shubert Foundation Fellowship for playwriting.

Notification of Villanova's selection was made by Lawrence Shubert Lawrence, Jr., Chief Executive of the Sam Shubert Foundation in New York.

Fellowship up to $3,000 will go to the thirteen institutions for the aademic year beginning in the fall of 1964. Others to receive grants were Yale, barnegie Tech, Northwestern, Michigan, Iowa, Catholic University, North Carolina, Pittsburgh, Washington, Illinois.

Mr. Lawrence said that the "sole interest in the foundation is to help young people in the early difficult days of what we earnestly hope will be their profession."

Mikusa Gets Award For Outstanding Work On SAM's Newspaper

The members of Villanova's chapter of the Society for Advancement of Management elected the officers for the coming school year at a meeting held on April 23.

Come September, the new office-holders will be: James Whalen, president; Eugene Bove, vice-president; Edward Christe, secretary; Robert Williams, treasurer; Andrew Donahue, student council representative; and Cornelius Murphy, publicity director.

Award

Also, at this meeting, John Mikusa was voted to receive the annual Mr. SAM Award, which is presented to the society's most active member, officers excluded. John's outstanding work on the Leader, SAM's newspaper, made him an overwhelming choice for this award.

Upon acceptance of the office of president, Whalen congratulated this year's officers, led by Jim Buckley, president, and Ray Ritter, vice-president, for their remarkable job. The new officers were acquainted with their future duties as they organized and successfully conducted picnic last Sunday to close SAM's social season.

The present officers will bid farewell to their duties at the final meeting of the society to be held May 14, and to be featured by a guest speaker.

After a short pause, the doors were opened and the crowd of marchers, now swelled to about five hundred, poured in. At the urging of those at the head of the procession silence was maintained.

An announcement was made from the office of Rev. John A. Klekotka, OSA, President of the University, that no changes were going to be made in the ceremony's schedule.

At that time Father President held an interview with WWVU and members of the press in an attempt to clear up the misunderstanding. During the interview the protestors filed out of the building singing "V for Villanova."

Senator Hugh Scott Tells VUPU Of His Opposition To Two Chinas

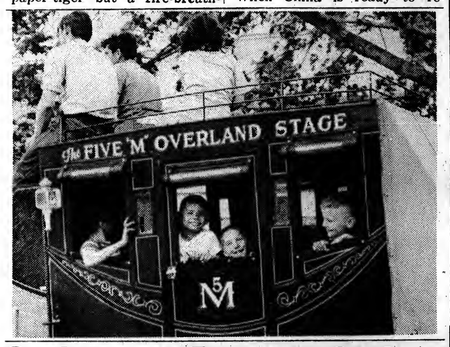
by Bob Healy

Hugh Scott, junior Senator from Pennsylvania, debated the Villanova Political Union on the resolution that this House opposes a two China policy in the United Nations.

Scott, in his main presentation, was opposed to a two China policy because he thought it would give implicit approval to a war-like and non-peace loving nation. He said that too often today realists tend to overlook the facts that China caused Korean bloodshed and has a reputation of being war mongering.

According to the Senator, Communist China is not a "paper-tiger but a fire-breathing dragon."

Conquerors



China has a long history of conquering their conquerors. Once Red China troops enter a country such as North Vietnam they are no longer Red Chinese but Vietnamese nationalists.

Technically, the United Nations is still at war with Red China, for no peace treaty concerning North Korea was ever signed. He said that recognition of Red China.

Final Comments

The final comments of the Senator's main speech were directed towards the future of the Communist China. He said, "When China is ready to renounce subversion and violence, then it will be welcomed into the family of nations."

Following Scott's argument, members of the union took the floor to either argue pro or con to the resolution.

Jack Ames Questions Cong. Anderson

Congressman John B. Anderson Addresses Conservative Club

John B. Anderson, Representative to the Congress of the United States from Illinois, spoke to the Conservative Club last Friday on 'The Campaign Issues of 1964".

Mr. Anderson opened the lesture by stating that now is the time for all Conservatives to unite and that the ideas of conservatism should be offered on an intellectual basis.

Issues

In the body o this lecture, Mr. Anderson divided the campaign issues of the coming election into the two broad categories of foreign and domestic issues.

Under the heading of foreign issues Anderson noted the positions of the national parties with respect to threat to the world of the Communist ideology, Russian and American trade relations, the Cuban situation with respect to inter-American security.

With regard to the domestic issues, the discussion centered on the cause and effects of the recent income tax legislation, the methods used by the current administration in their efforts to cut the budget deficit in half, and the use of President Johnson's 'War on Poverty" as a "Campaign gimmick."

Completed Tour

Congressman Anderson has recently completed a panel tour of New Mexico and California.

Mr. Anderson attended the University of Illinois where he received an A.B. degree and later graduated from the University of Illinois Law School. He then attended Harvard Law School on a fellowship and was awarded a Master of Law Degree.

Elected to the Congress in 1960, he is currently serving on the Operations Government Committee, the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy and the Select Committee to Research and Development Programs in the Government.

Theatre Department Receives Fellowship From Shubert Group

Mr. Richard Duprey, Chairman of Villanova's Graduate Theatre Department, has announced that Villanova University has been selected as one of the thirteen universities in the country to receive a newly established Shubert Foundation Fellowship for playwriting.

Notification of Villanova's selection was made by Lawrence Shubert Lawrence, Jr., Chief Executive of the Sam Shubert Foundation in New York.

Fellowship up to $3,000 will go to the thirteen institutions for the aademic year beginning in the fall of 1964. Others to receive grants were Yale, barnegie Tech, Northwestern, Michigan, Iowa, Catholic University, North Carolina, Pittsburgh, Washington, Illinois.

Mr. Lawrence said that the "sole interest in the foundation is to help young people in the early difficult days of what we earnestly hope will be their profession."

Mikusa Gets Award For Outstanding Work On SAM's Newspaper

The members of Villanova's chapter of the Society for Advancement of Management elected the officers for the coming school year at a meeting held on April 23.

Come September, the new office-holders will be: James Whalen, president; Eugene Bove, vice-president; Edward Christe, secretary; Robert Williams, treasurer; Andrew Donahue, student council representative; and Cornelius Murphy, publicity director.

Award

Also, at this meeting, John Mikusa was voted to receive the annual Mr. SAM Award, which is presented to the society's most active member, officers excluded. John's outstanding work on the Leader, SAM's newspaper, made him an overwhelming choice for this award.

Upon acceptance of the office of president, Whalen congratulated this year's officers, led by Jim Buckley, president, and Ray Ritter, vice-president, for their remarkable job. The new officers were acquainted with their future duties as they organized and successfully conducted picnic last Sunday to close SAM's social season.

The present officers will bid farewell to their duties at the final meeting of the society to be held May 14, and to be featured by a guest speaker.

After a short pause, the doors were opened and the crowd of marchers, now swelled to about five hundred, poured in. At the urging of those at the head of the procession silence was maintained.

An announcement was made from the office of Rev. John A. Klekotka, OSA, President of the University, that no changes were going to be made in the ceremony's schedule.

At that time Father President held an interview with WWVU and members of the press in an attempt to clear up the misunderstanding. During the interview the protestors filed out of the building singing "V for Villanova."

Counterpoint

The Modern Tragedy . . .

by Frank Sauers

Recent controversy concerning academic freedom, free expression, and dogmatism in higher education is symptomatic of one of the persistent maladies of humanity. It is a disease, not confined to Catholic education, or secular education, or education in general, but one that strikes at the very core of the spirit in man to be free.

Tyranny over the mind is not a peculiarly modern dilemma, manifestations of it sprinkle the chronicle of man. Yet never before has the condition of man's liberty come so much into question or been so vulnerable to assault.

I am not speaking of Communism solely. That is just one form of tyranny. Likewise, I do not refer to the freedom espoused by Goldwater or Buckley or Kirk. The liberty for which they are fighting is the right to go into business or that of a corporation to make a profit, and that is not a valueless, but rather a sham liberty. Eric Severeid recently referred to it as "our chamber of commerce ideology." It frees the wallet. I speak of a more pervasive tyranny and a more essential freedom — the cherished right of the human mind to unfettered freedom of thought and expression. The monstrous and universally expanding totalitarianism that threatens it is the modern tragedy.

The machine, again, I would suggest, is but a symptom of the and and not the determinant of it. Man's function, presumably, is to find his right place in his particular cog of the great "World-Wheel" of interplanetary dust that goes spinning through space with a dreadful unity. Totalitarian mechanism affects not only our dress (and that is relatively unimportant), but is becoming more and more absorbed in our most basic modes of thought and attitudes. Conformity to the norm is the prime virtue — divergence of any sort is a criminality that is frowned upon and persecuted.

The totalitarianism blurs the whole complexion of civilization. It is an immense "leveling process" that permeates art, education, scholarship, politics — the whole range of human experience, dulling the intellect and stifling human feeling and sensibility. Its norm is bland, the atmosphere it creates — unfeeling.

It is always difficult to argue empirically the value of intellectual freedom. Surrounding the arguments of those who oppose it is a core of darkness that often renders their motives suspect. It has to be discussed with a great deal of faith in the inherent value and integrity of the human mind's capabilities.

With freedom of thought goes creativity, feeling, color, spontaneity, color, depth; in its void there is blandness, coldness and restraint. Where the traffic of ideas is allowed free flow there is some hope, where it is obstructed there is a sort of communal despair. No props are necessary to guide the growth of a tree. No apparatus is needed to maintain balance in the universe. Neither is there any necessity for artificially controlling the development of the human mind. Challenge the young mind with ideas and moral guidelines, but also provide him with the freedom to wander and investigate, and disover all of knowledge, and adapt from that his own individuality.

To narrow the confines of thought is to lasso the intellect, bind it to a post, and enslave it to a preordained circumference, beyond which it cannot venture. The restriction is an unnecessary one. If thoughts occupied space in the brain, the limitation might be justifiable on the ground of the health of the cranium. But the potentialities of the mind are as expansive as the universe. To ensure the independence of the intellect is to insure the preservation of individuality.

In education lies our greatest hope. Education is the nursemaid of the free mind. No amount of oppression after the formative years can extinguish the glimmer of freedom in a man's mind. But if during the formative years of education the mind is thwarted by limitations on its freedom to develop it absorbs a dogmatism that is virtually impossible to wither detect or shirk. If dogmatism is difficult to detect in itself it seems even more difficult to detect in the philosophy of those who propound it.

William Buckley, for instance, calls for educational indoctrination and an established university intellectual policy to which all professors would have to adhere, and is cheered wildly here by the Field House audience. The university that demands intellectual allegiance from either its faculty or student body is not a university at all. It is nothing but an incubator for the nourishment of infantile minds. There will soon have to be a reversal in the current educational attitude of "stamping" knowledge onto the mind of the student and a more pronounced effort to unleash that passionate response, latent in every mind, and the best preservative of individualism.

The winds are shifting, and the tides of discontent will have to eventually be abated. It is time for a new emancipation of the intellect. Thinking that is not free is not thinking at all, but parody. The mind of man is a restive thing. It seeks freedom instinctively and is little content with the yoke of its enslavement.

A good friend once cautioned of the danger inherent in the creative mind; that with the pregnant mind there is always the possibility of miscarriage. Better to run the risk of a miscarriage than be content with a senseless abortion.

We inhabit an exciting age. The call to do battle against those who would sound the death-knell of freedom is unequalled. The battle must eventually be fought within each and every one of us. The impulse toward a new and vibrant individualism must come from the individual himself.

Without freedom of the mind there is no disturbance, failing, doubts or disaster, but neither is there triumph.

The Great March

The recent demonstrations in front of and within Father President's office cannot, of themselves, accomplish any goal for the class of 1964. Father Klekotka correctly and forcefully stated that Bishop McDevitt will be the commencement speaker.

Despite this probably expected reaction, it should not be assumed that the demonstration was in defiance of the administration or the university. There were several contributing factors to the demonstration, including the warm weather, the lateness of the scholastic year, the recent criticism from the newspaper of a local university, not to mention the chief concern of the marchers as misguidely being the "reputation of Villanova."

The original purpose of the demonstration was to register student discontent and dissatisfaction over the apparant lack of communication between the senior class and the administration. It was not intended to be, in any way, an insult to Bishop McDevitt.

It is indeed unfortunate that people in general and Villanovans in particular judge the reputation of a university by the "name" and background of a speaker. It should be remembered that a "name" commencement speaker can, just as easily, give a poor talk as it is for a "non-name" speaker to give a good address. What is the purpose of inviting an individual to speak to a class; to see a reputation sit on a platform or to hear a well-prepared, well-thought-out, interesting address?

The feelings of today were caused by the mistakes, by both sides, of yesterday. Graduation is supposed to be a time of pride and happiness mixed with a tinge of sadness. To all sides in the controversy make Graduation Day, 1964, such a day.

Nixon

Despite recent gains in the primaries, it is still rather difficult to comprehend the Arizona Senator as the GOP's presidential standard bearer.

Governor Scranton is honestly waiting for a draft while Ambassador Lodge represents more of a protest movement against Goldwater than anything else.

The spotlight then falls on that politically mysterious soft-drink salesman, Richard Milhous Nixon. If he runs, what type of candidate would he make? What will be his tactics? What will be the difference between the candidate Nixon of 1960 and the candidate Nixon 1964?

During the 1960 presidential campaign, the former vice-president found himself on the defensive as he maintained, supported and defended the policies of the dying Eisenhower Administraton.

Unfortunately and unavoidably Nixon was placed on the defensive before the 60 million viewers of the TV debates. The then Senator Kennedy took advantage of this by keeping himself constantly on the offensive making Nixon defend himself, rarely giving him a chance to mount his own attack. Nixon was only occasionally able to seize the initiative.

This constant prying and pushing by Kennedy enabled the viewer to correctly envision him as a dynamic, forceful, vital and energetic candidate, the kind of candidate the voter doesn't easily forget.

In 1964, the situation could be different. If he runs, Nixon should take the lead by constantly forcing President Johnson to defend himself. Nixon must have the talent to exploit this opening, for he could not have gotten where he was and is without it. Whereas Kennedy won by two-tenths of a percentage point by attacking the incumbent party of eight years, Nixon will be attacking a regime that has been in office but a year.

LEO GOODREAU

Caught in Passing

Thus Ends Pernicious Verbiage

by Jan Dyroff

What better way is there to finish, than to go back to where it all began? Night time is the time for a newspaper, it's conceived, bred, and born at night. And it needs a city for a midwife.

Night in Philadelphia begins with the sun going down, which is pretty much how it does everywhere. The best place for viewing the sunset is from the elevated on Market Street. All around the skyline is unobstructed, and if you get off the lights along the tracks look like pearls stretching to the west.

Wander East

Then wander east with the growing shadows, you'll come to center city. Rittenhouse square with its trees and tall buildings is always good for a character or two . . . whatever remnants there are around of the Great Unwashed can be found there.

So much of what makes the cultural heart of the city is within ten blocks or so of the square, the clubs, the galleries, the museums, the parks and libraries. And Long Publishing Company.

Long's

In the midst of such a welter of glory there exists such an insitution as Long's which spews forth from its subterranean maw the Villanovan. Two points for Thirteenth and Cherry Streets, it makes up for what the Square misses.

But this doesn't contribute much. Things go on, as does the night. Around nine the first sets will begin at Pep's or the Showboat, and two hours later the first shows will be over. The night is young yet.

Late Clubs

The late, late supper clubs are in action right up until closing time, or if all else fails there is the H&H. Two hours after midnight the friendly local pubberies close, and the last stragglers hurry out.

Early morning Mass at the Catheral is at 2.15 and it's a nice way to tie up an evening that wasn't meant to be early anyway. The fountains and the statues in front of the Youth Study Center make the whole scene come off a little unreal.

By the time Mass be done, everything is nailed down tight. It's so tight that the cops travel in threes. The only thing left is to keep going.

Plane Noise

Overhead airplanes are moving; for some reason an Electra comes through a lot louder early in the morning. The airport is really beautiful, but did you ever try the bit with customs? For the fun for the feebleminded course (advanced), import some records from Brazil and wait for them to get past.

Enough of that, just ride. The docks are something to be passed through. They smell. There are more railroad tracks than streets, and the traffic lights take an award for the most uncooperative in the world; but the whole scene makes it in Walt Whitman style.

River Hopscotch

Follow the river hopscotch out along the expressway. If you travel it at the right time, there's no sweat about the bumper-to-bumper routine since you're the only one on the road.

On the right there is the art museum. It looks like a magnificant temple to the great god, Philadelphia Electric. Yeah, and the little buildings out back are not really the aquarium but a Phonecian settlement along the Schuylkill fonded in 247 B.C.

'Round Midnight

A predecessor of mine said that things get started around midnight, and he wasn't very wrong. After sundown, the world begins. People are what they are then. They've laid off the masks of the day and they've left the stage behind.

In the blue dark of the night, people come out from under whatever rocks they've been hiding. You can't hide too much in a pair of bermudas, and nothing's more telling than being caught with your hair up in curlers.

Night People

All this happens between dusk and midnight. They get ready for the joust tomorrow. But by twelve, everybody but the night people are secure under the rocks again, which is good.

If everybody dug the indigo glow coming up behind Dougherty Hall, a great thing would be ruined. So, 'til this time next life, stay loose and whatever you don't dig, don't knock.

Something Different For Next Semester With "Campus East"

by John Riggs

For a long time now the students of Villanova have been aware of the great need for a campus week-end activity. I believe that this problem may very well be solved for good. Four members of the Freshman class, being spurred on by the enthusiasm of both the administration and the general student body, have planned something new for next semester.

There will be initiated an organization called "Campus East." It will be independent of any other student activity or organization with William May, Richard Malizia, Mark Curley, and myself, along with volunteer committee members as the ones responsible for the planning and the functioning of "Campus East."

"Campus East"

"Campus East" will be organized on the mode of a night club (minus alcoholic beverages, of course). It will take place in Bartley Hall Cafeteria whereever there is a deficiency of a campus activity. There will be two floor-shows per night featuring guest artists of a variety of talents. Refreshments will be served and included in the price of the admission.

Speaking of admission, this is one of the best factors of "Campus East" as it will be kept at the absolute minimal rate possible. If there is any profit it will be nominal and reinvested in the project.

Opportunity

Anyone wishing to work with or to perform at "Campus East" is requested to contact either Richard Malizia or William May for further details. They need both workers and performers. This project is entirely for the students' benefit; they should take part and profit from it.

More information will be published in September.

In conclusion I would like to extend thanks to Fr. Hopkins and Fr. Appicci for all their help in the conception of "Campus East."

'Expanding With The Times' Is VU's Theme At Industrial Fair

Villanova will be represented in the Greater Philadelphia Industrial Trade Fair which has been going on since May 9 and will continue until May 16. The University has a huge exhibit in the Trade Fair which is being held at the Trade and Convention Center, 34th and Convention Avenue in Philadelphia.

Students interested in purchasing tickets for the Trade Fair may stop in at the Development and Public Information Office in Austin Hall. These specially priced tickets are 50 cents.

Utilizing the theme, "Expanding with the Times", Villanova's exhibit will center on a twenty foot long mural of its 200 acre campus.

The eleven foot high display with Villanova University in letters two feet high across the top of the mural will be visible from anywhere in the hall. It will be the highest exhibit in the Trade Fair.

The words, "Expanding with the Times", also atop the huge panoramic view of the campus will be illuminated with sequence flashing lights. This portion of the unit will be visible down an aisle from one side of the hall to the other.

Individual viewing tables will be located beneath the mural giving visitors a more detailed look at the work being done at the largest catholic university in the State of Pennsylvania.

Light panels built into the tables will illuminate beautiful color transparencies of University activities. Photos will show students in laboratories, and classrooms at all levels of training. The College of Engineering, The College of Arts & Sciences, The College of Commerce & Finance and The College of Nursing will illustrate undergraduate training.

Other color transparencies will capture activities in The Villanova School of Law, The School of Graduate Studies, and the University College (Part-Time Undergraduate Division)

Large panels to either side of the giant mural will bear replicas of the Villanova University official seal (coat of arms) inscribed with the Latin words. Veritas, Unitas, Caritas meaning, Truth, Unity and Charity.

Excellent Jazz Piano In Columbia's "Cathexis"

by Ed Bride

Back in October, I received an invitation by John Hammond to hear the "best piano player in the country." Having seen Thelonius Monk the night before and seeing as how Monk is one of Hammond's favorite musicians, I naturally thought it might be Monk.

However, this new piano player was a college student, attending Johns Hopkins, who will graduate this June and then go into his internship to study psychiatry.

Is this last note important? I would think so, because Denny Zeitlin uses his probinf mind to create some excellent jazz on his debut alubum for Columbia — "Cathexis."

Producer Hammond was a little generous in his compliment, but is was no gross axaggeration. Zeitlin has new ideas and an astounding manner of putting them into musical communication.

"Repeat"

The album opens with a Zeitlin original, "Repeat," and there was never more enjoyable repetition. His solo intro is ever so interesting, laying down a theme and tempo that grow with the entrance of drummer Fred Waite and bassist Cecil McBee.

The first impression is that it is an easy-going piece, but as do most of the selections, it becomes excitingly deep with each chorus.

The title tune is the shortest on the LP, opening the second side with great intensity. "Cathexis" refers to a Freudian phrase whichis defined as the amount of psychic energy needed to porrtray a person or a thing. The tune is typical, in that it shows Zeitlin's deep and perhaps philosophical approach to all his music.

It must be short, because a long tune could never sustain all the excitement generated in two-and-a-half-minutes.

On hearing "Nica's Tempo," a composition by Gigi Gryce, I first thought of George Russell's rhythm section (Russell specializes in the "New Thing," or in his terminology, "Stratospheric Jazz.").

This is unfortunate, for on consulting the liner notes, I found that Zeitlin studied with Russell. However, the similarity is not crucil; it is not a matter of copying, but rather similar interests.

The similarity to Russell remains thorughout, but tthe piano is much stronger and more inter-

Second Thought

by Eugene Fitzmaurice

Not all of us are intellectuals. Not all of us are aware that many of our actions are directed by a dictatorial political power.

Michael Hammond is one such as this. Unaware that his every act was being perverted to some dark tyrannical end, he enlisted in the United States Army three years ago.

After his officer's orientation courses, he attended "Jump School" in Georgia and went on to train with the Army Rangers.

When he had completed these courses, he volunteered for service with the Special Force, still unaware that he was engaged in a conspiracy against the freedom of man.

When he completed his training and became fully qualified, he was assigned, at his request, as an advisor in Viet Nam.

His village was Ap Bak Din, the site of the four bloodiest battles in the "Advisory Campaign".

Silver Star

While there, he so distinguished himself in action against the true friend of the natives, the Viet Cong, that he was awarded the Silver Star for bravery in combatting the movement to bring freedom to the people of South Viet Nam,

Two weeks after his arrival he made his first trip to the Mekong River Delta. His predecessor at the Village, who had returned to America to complete his schooling, had succeeded in winning the trust and confidence of the unsuspecting villagers. One of the ways in which he did this was to spend weeks trying to convince the native children that the candy which he brought them was not poison, as they had been told by their friends in the North.

Michael Hammond was forced to repeat this lengthy process to win the people to his side. He and his men spent their days instructing the people in hygeine, dietetics, language, simple economics and many other aspects of life which most aggressors do not concern themselves with during a campaign.

Ap Bak Din

After five months at Ap Bak Din as a cholera epidemic raced through the Delta area Lieutenant Hammond stayed on, giving what aid he and his men could.

On the morning of July 14 of last year, 30 Viet Cong came down to liberate the village. He and his men proceeded to establish the village's defences and aid in evacuating the sick by helicopter.

Then after all had been removed, he stayed on to direct the fighting and the safe withdrawal of all of his men, both American and Vietnamese.

When he finally did make his desperate dash for the last helicopter, 17 Chinese slugs tore into him. Two of his fellow aggressors ran to him and carried his body to the waiting craft.

Michael Hammond, Jr. is four years old and beginning now to learn to read. Like many youngsters he has a scrapbook.

On the first page is a picture of his father, in a uniform, with his Divisional motto pinned to his beret: De Oppresso Liber, to Liberate from Oppression. On the next page is his citation for the Distinguished Service Cross. On the following pages are the letters of thanks which have been sent to his father by people who never understood why he had come to their land, who never knew that he, and the 15,000 other men who have asked to be sent to their land where military aggressors in the employ of a dictatorial power.

No intellectuals have written to tell him of his father's evil motive. No Haverford students need bother.

The Collegiate World Of Commerce And Finance

Dr. Walter H. Klein, Assistant Dean of the College of Commerce and Finance, represented the University at the 46th annual meeting of the American Association of Collegiate Schools of Business. The meeting was held in Chicago's Pick-Congress Hotel from April 29 to May 1. The conference theme was "What Should Be the Basic Subjects in Collegiate Education for Business?"

The general consensus of the meeting was that the period of criticism of collegiate education for business is over. This period began with the publication of the Ford Foundation and Carnegie Foundation reports of 1959.

The "soul-searching" of this period has led to such an upgraning and revitalizing of business curricula and standards of performance that collegiate schools of business are now believed to be on their way toward becoming highly respectable, as well as highly respected members of the university community. Much remains to be done, but as one observer stated, "the corner has been turned."

This change is evidenced by several happenings. While the United States pioneered collegiate education in business beginning with the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School of Finance and Commerce in 1881, other countries are just beginning to emulate this development.

For example, the University of Dublin will start collegiate education for business next Fall. During the current academic year, several scholars from famed Oxford University visited a number of American campuses for the purpose of studying the operations of collegiate schools of business.

These visits were no doubt related to the recent Robbin's Report which recommended that England should develop two collegiate schools of business.

Further, the question of whether one can be considered liberally educated today unless he has some knowledge and understanding of business and its role in our society is being asked with increased poignancy by business scholars. Clarence Walton, Associate Dean of Columbia University's Graduate School of Business would enlarge this question to include a knowledge and understanding of unions.

Consequently, there is a need to develop for non-business students courses which will convey a broad understanding of business in as efficient and effective a manner as possible.

As change occurs in the prestige of and attitude toward collegiate education for business, it can be expected that schools of business will make increased requests upon the rest of the university to teach the kinds of courses and subject matter that will better assist them in providing a broad, professional education for business.

As an indication of this trend, Professor Samuel Goldberg, a member of Oberlin College's Department of Mathematics, reported on a tentative recommendation for the under-graduate mathematics program of students in the biological, management and social sciences (BMSS). The recommendations were those of the Committee on Undergraduate Program of Mathematics of the Mathematical Association of America.

The report states: "It is therefore, important to recognize that they (BMSS students) need mathematics primarily as a language for scientific reasoning and that they do not need as much training in detailed techniques as mathematics and physical science students. Nor is it reasonable to expend as much time on rigorous proofs for BMSS students as for mathematics majors. Also, more stress should be placed on applications which are of special interest in the biological and social sciences."

These along with other reasons convinced the Committee that special courses must be developed for students in the biological, management and social sciences.

Dean Floyd Bond reported on a joint study conducted by the University of Michigan's Graduate School of Business and Survey Research Center and the Committee for Economic Development. The CED is composed of 20 businessmen and educators and the statements on national policy issued by its Research and Policy Committee are both scholarly and highly influenced.

The study utilized a twenty-page, pre-tested interview schedule consisting of open-end questions. The sample consisted of 100 "top executives." The average length for an interview was two hours. The interviews were conducted by personnel trained by the Survey Research Center.

The findings show that these "top executives" favor a broad, professional education for business with competence in one of the functional fields, such as accounting, finance, marketing, production, etc. They feel that neither a strict liberal arts nor narrow business education is adequate. Likewise, they believe that no one can be considered well-educated today unless he has some knowledge of the role of business in society.

They strongly emphasize the point that courses should be taught in a rigorous and demanding fashion so that students developed self-dicipline as well as disciplined minds and the habit of thought and action. With regard to the future, they feel that increased emphas's needs to be given to the rapidly increasing pace of technological and scientific know-how, the various aspects of international business, and the expanding interrelationships between business and government.

Two presumptive conclusions of the study are of interest. A "significant percentage" of the "top executives" interviewed having liberal arts educations rose to the top in family-owned businesses; whereas, none of the "top executives" interviewed with collegiate educations in business was managing family-owned businesses. Further, graduates of collegiate schools of business displayed greater mobility in their careers than did their counterparts from the liberal arts.

That is, they showed greater mobility in moving from one functional area of business to another, as well as greater mobility in moving from one industry to another.

Dean Bond used the results of this joint study to help substantiate his prediction that within the next ten years collegiate schools of business will come into their own.

Evidence that schools of business are improving their standard was given in the form of statistics which clearly numbers the schools which are meeting the standards established by the American Association of Collegiate Schools of Business. As an example, during 1958-59 only five schools requested visitations for accreditation by the AACSB; whereas, the figure for the current academic years was twenty-three.

In addition, the deliberations of the AACSB during the Chicago meeting clearly indicated that the movement toward an upward revision of its standards is gaining impetus. This would mean that a number of strictly qualitative standards would be added to the present standards which are essentially quantitative.

Some of the current standards are: that at least fifty percent of the teaching credit hours on either the Junior-Senior level or on an over-all basis be taught by full-time faculty members having terminal degrees; teaching schedules calling for a max.mum of twelve semester hours with two preparations per semester considered desirable; the 40-40 rule, namely, that at least forty percent of the total hours required for the bachelor's degree must be taken in subjects other than business and economics, and at least forty per cent be in business and economics; and the faculty must give evidence of faculty productivity.

In fact, one of the important reasons behind the selection of this year's conference theme was to assist the Association in finding bases for formulating qualitative standards.

"I think the business school is one of the really exciting places to be on the campus today." This statement by Dr. William C. Frederick, Dean of the University of Pittsburgh's Graduate School of Business, best summarizes the attitude of the meeting. Dean Frederick recently gave this comment as an important reason why he — an economist — decided to concentrate on educating tomorrow's businessmen.

New Concept Has Much To Offer "Existentialism Is" Main Theme

by Matt Roche

This edition of Concept, Villanova's Journal of Fact and Opinion, offered the reader everything from A to Z, from Aeneas to a reference to Zarathustra. The reader received a potpourri of poetry, analysis of poetry, philosophy and its relations to man and science and poetry.

The readers were given "Two Views of Aeneas," one, "The Loneliest God" by Frank Jost, Jr., made a good point that Aeneas's solitude is a divine one, but did not remember that his very personal existence, his "alone-ness", but subordinate to his mission, his goal in life, the founding of a haven for his son.

Mr. Raoul Weigand, O.S.A. gave us "An Existential Protrait" of Aeneas. This reader believes that passions are a weak argument when considering Aeneas's departure from Carthage. Reason and submission seem to be the guiding, motivating forces. The author's logic within a multiple-reference framework was convincing.

Camus

James Powell's essay, "Albert Camus and Existentialism" is an example of strict organization. Of particular interest to the reader is section two in which he poses the necessary but impossible question "What is Existentialism?". His penetrating solution reveals his awareness and understanding of contemporary philosophy, while he also included a worthwhile exploration of the essence-existence quandry of the moderns. His defensive quotes earn him a well done!

Tactile

In his "Approaching Vision in Philosophy and Poetry" John Brown brought together these two areas; he discussed their common ground, their aims, and their differences. He has combined the two elements in his extremely well-formed essay. While he sought philosophy, he did it through poetry. Imagination abounds throughout his tactile essay.

In "Weather Forecasts, Bees, and Vergil" Mr. John T. Photo, O.S.A. confronts us with the Georgics in which we have the situation of mind over matter: the great Latin mind over the matter of the everyday, the normal, the trite. Unlike Vergil, Mr. Photo's interpretation does not rise above the literal.

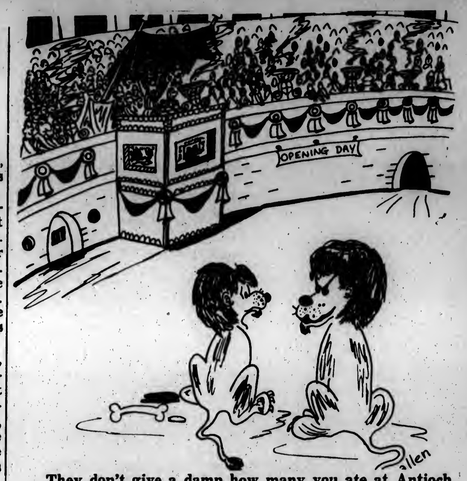
The "Poems" of Charles Di-Domenico have as their subject the oneness and unity of time. Perhaps unconciously his meter seemed to show influences of T. S. Eliot, while here and there sprung echoes of Gray and E. E. Cummings in his phrasing. The resolution of his second poem is surprising and satisfying.

Reverand George P. Lawless, O.S.A. gave us a literary examination of conscience in "What Kind of Fool Am I". A contemporary lesson in today's world, the essay was highly appropriate for this "Age of The Shrug". He used the literary device of lyrics to illustrate an introspection.

Victorians

"Eminent Victorians; Their Concepts of Happiness" by Richard Sane examined Carlyle, Mill, Ruskin, and Arnold. He wrote that happiness was blessedness for Carlyle, rather than materialism; Ruskin saw it as freedom; Mill's insight was one of unconscious experience, and utilitarian service; and Richard thought of Arnold's theory as a striving towards "sweetness and light" through criticism.

Barry Thornton wrote a combination review and analysis in his "Strindberg and Edward Albee". He analyzed the basic themes underlying "The Dance of Death" and "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf". His included dialogue penetrated into the love-hate relationships.



John Mylotte reflected on the political implications of characters and how the novel became a fountainhead for Nihilism in his "Turgenev's Fathers and Sons: A Reflection of Its Time". By examining the author's life John found keys both to his thought and to his opposition.

Exchange Corner

College Conflict

by Cornelius Murphy

There appears to be some friction between students and faculty at Spring Hill College in Mobile Alabama. It seems that a student center has been planned for the campus, but during construction the administration changed its plans.

The administration feels that a new Jesuit residence is needed more at the present time. Consequently, the incompleted student center will become a residence for the Jesuit faculty. To the dismay of the outraged students, the administration officials have avoided any comment on the change in plans.

A recent threat to burn the present residence, and Jesuits, was quickly dissuaded when an official pointed out that such an action would only increase the need for a new building to house the Jesuit fathers.

The University of New Hampshire and stogies is developing a new fad. Many of the coeds there have taken up the stogie habit. The men on campus don't appreciate the idea. As one senior put it, "It makes me feel insecure."

The trend has upset some of the busboys at local restaurants. "It gets pretty depressing picking up dead cigar butts with lipstick on them from the ashtrays" said one busboy. The habit has become popular for many reasons.

One girl said, "It takes the beer smell off my breath when I come in at night". A freshman coed stated: "A ten cent cigar is much cheaper than a bottle of perfume. It gives me that masculine smell." Another girl said she smokes cigars because "I like to chew on the ends." Let's hope the trend doesn't spread.

The Student Council at Franklin and Marshall College has sent a letter to Governor Scranton asking him to remove the five percent tax on school supplies.

Under the present legislation the governor has the power to remove this tax, but he is under pressure by bookstores in college towns to keep the tax in effect. If pressure is put on the governor from both sides, maybe this Pennsylvania tax burden would be removed.

Temple and Barnett

In reference to Ross Barnett's invitation to visit Temple University, the faculty has taken a stand on their views. The faculty realizes the right of the Student Council to extend the invitation regardless of the divergence of points of view between the faculty and the invited guest.

However, they "wish to make it quite clear that the support of the student government's right to extend such an invitation in no way indicates approval of Mr. Barnett's views. Indeed, we find them deeply repugnant. They are antithetical to the values in which the faculty and the University believe."

Since this statement was made, the invitation has been withdrawn.

Remember: you're "expected home" at 10

Home by phone, that is. When you set a regular day and time to call your parents, you're sure of reaching them. Why not make a definite arrangement next time you phone home—like tonight.

Thoughts On Concept

by Eugene Fitzmaurice

The Concept of Villanova University, when viewed through the eyes of that publication's contributors, is indeed quite limited.

Concerning themselves with questions of a moot nature, the contributors have once again concentrated on a variety of academic questions which man has yet to answer (because he prefers to argue them), or which are not usually considered sufficiently important to be discussed.

The main theme seemed to be that the Existential mind holds many of the answers to man's most pressing problems. In an issue which seemed to be most concerned with reviving interest in this philosophical form of left wing fatalism, a variety of interesting and collegiate questions were advanced. While Existentialism is dead as a cocktail party bon mot, to be thrown out between rounds, the Concept of the contributors was that it should be a paramount interest to readers.

Personal Views

In other articles, we were asked to consider the recently discovered hypotheses that man ought to look outside himself for fulfillment, and a variety of literary questions which were posed only to provide the author with an outlet for his personal views (which, most probably, he was not permitted to air in class).

It is our belief that a magazine which seeks to establish itself as an arbiter of intellectual position on campus ought to concern itself with more important issues.

All too often, the complacency of sectarian education permits us to disregard essential questions of the day. Quite frequently, questions which are important today are part of larger questions, seeking resolution through the ages.

Convinced

Inasmuch as each of Concept's contributors obviously is convinced of his position, that conviction might be better put to use in consideration of problems which are important today, and which stand outside of our classrooms crying for answers.

The attitude that intellectual efforts ought to be concentrated on bringing coffee table discussions into print, and not tainted with constructive effort at resolving the truly essential problems which face the Catholic college student today is one which is at once self defeating and self perpetuating. The great effort which went into Concept could have been better spent in greater effort aimed at greater questions.

Quest

The search for knowledge for its own sake is commendable, but when the quest for knowledge can lead to an application of that knowledge toward the solution of a pressing problem, an even greater end has been attained.

A "Student Journal of Fact and Opinion" ought not concern itself with ivory tower discussions of personal interest to the author and then hold itself out as the intellectual embodiment of the campus.

Another campus magazine has for its end the publication of literary works by members of the student body. Another seeks to present a forum for all forms of political thought. Concept which regards itself as the embodiment of all valid intellectual endeavor on campus should seek to fulfill the definition of purpose which it has given to itself.

Opinions

The intelligent and well thought-out opinions of its contributors would surely serve a better purpose were their efforts spent answering questions of greater interest. It is indeed commendable that they are concerned with reviving philosophies and searching out true metaphysical meanings in all they do, but it would be more commendable to attack the problems of society which a Catholic campus is obligated to analyze: birth control and steroid pills; marriage; federal aid to sectarian schools; and in increase in awareness of, and concern for, the vital issues of the day when viewed through the eyes of intelligent Catholic college students.

The campus waited nearly 10 months for Concept to appear.

Touring The Continent Can Be Fun!

by Barbara Greehey

After taking various "patch tests" and selling numerous pints of blood, I saved up enough for a summer of leisure. I'm scarred and anemic — but darn, it was worth it. So off for a summer of sun and fun across the gay Atlantic.

Transportation was provided by my girl scout troop where I sold the greatest number of protection policies since that great organizer, Al Capone, founded our association in the days of stills and the Charleston. I was overjoyed to hear I'd be travelling with a group from Penn whose aim is to further tact and diplomacy here and abroad.

First Stop

The first stop was the land of my ancestors. Stepping off a cheap replica of the Kon Tiki, I sank knee deep into the lovely green sod of Killarney. Next thing I thing I know, some jerk named Molly is running up trying to sell me some old clams. Attempting to escape I tripped over a shamrock into a nest of leprechauns.

In England, it was a toss-up between seeing C. Darwin's birthplace or his primate friends, "The Beatles." Being a music lover, I chose the latter. Finally pushed my way close enough to get their autographs, but drat, they can't write. More I see, more I believe Charlie had something in that theory of his.

In France and Germany

I thought I'd drop in on DeGaulle and say hi. He was all nose and smiles. Blushing red, I said my name was Mao — he said, "I recognize you, I recognize you."

After stocking up on beer mugs in the land of Dracula and Transylvania, I noticed this underdeveloped little guy dressed up like a paper hanger shouting at me. He kept trying to get me to read some book he wrote. I told him Mein Kampf or whatever the name was would never make the best seller list — advised him to stick to hanging.

Short Hike

One sunny afternoon, I decided to go for a short hike in the Swiss Alps. Passed my friend Lord Hillary on the way up. Reached a point where I was sure no man had ever set foot 'till a sign caught my eye — "Heidi's Motor Lodge — bargain rates — one mile up."

Rome was disappointing — most of it was in ruins. Another important city was flooded out. Some buildings haven't been repaired for two thousand years. So what happened to urban renewal?

Finally decided that Europe wasn't for me — I hotfooted it back to Miss Liberty and the red, white and blue.

Villanova And Spring Fever

by Jeff Radowich

The "winter of our discontent" has finally been deposed by a colorfully joyous spring.

There are many signs of this successful revolution.

Seersucker and madras have replaced camel hair and herringbone.

The volley ball courts (all three of them) are in constant use.

Every available open space on campus is saturated by eternally hopeful tennis players, golfers and baseball players. Unlike their respective idols, however, they usually miss the tennis ball, lose the golf ball and drop the fly ball.

Long, lanky legs and sore sunburned shoulders become objects of derision and delight.

Couples

Young men's fancy, as the sage once said, turns to things young women have been thinking about all winter long. Interdigitated couples can be seen everywhere: frolicking across field and stream, waiting in line for park benches, etc.

Two mallard ducks have appeared at the engineer's pond, much to the consternation of the engineers, who don't understand what's going on.

Those raucous afternoon outings innocuously labeled "picnics," have returned to the social scene in full force, with every indication that the participants are out to break last year's record for number of persons thrown in ponds, rivers, streams, etc. all.

But perhaps the most typical sign of spring, and the most important, is the emergence of that old bane of teachers everywhere: spring fever.

Spring Fever

"Spring fever" is actually not a fever, in medical sense. To my knowledge, there is no doctor who admits an organic justification for this strange disorder.

Commonly considered a weak kneed lethargy, as regards anything akin to work, this malady is epidemic in proportions at almost all colleges and universities across the country, even Penn.

As any victim of this disease will gladly inform you, it results in more lost A's than any other known cause. Next to the Chemical Engineering curriculum, it produces more students for state-supported colleges than any other factor here at Villanova.

As should be obvious, therefore, spring fever is detrimental to the welfare of the student body and should be abolished. Yet the Student Government Association cannot merely pass a motion to this effect; the conquering of this malady will take a concerted effort on the part of every student.

Antidote

Actually, the antidote for this illness is mature evaluation of the situation, a balancing of benefits derived from succumbing to the fever against benefits derived from abstaining from this laziness.

It's been a good year. Villanova has enjoyed huge successes both in academic and athletic endeavors.

We've had some great weekends and some truly inspired parties.

Everywhere the attitude is one of expansion. Next year everything will be bigger, better. It would be a real shame if anyone was unable to return to Villanova because of two or three weeks of uninhibited merriment; it's simply not worth it.

esting. In fact, this is probably the most effective cut on the side.

Drummer Waits shows some particularly good brush work on "I-Thou," another philosophical approach (Zeitlin feels that, in order to be "whole," one must think in terms of "I-Thou," a rather metaphysical approach.)

The album closes with "Blue Phoenix," an extended composition by Zeitlin in which has gets a chance to stretch out. There is some blues, a ballad approach in the first movement, and a frantic pace to close the album.

Mr. Duprey's Novel Describes Agony And Pain Of Childhood

by Tom Krause

A House Full of Angels, by Richard A. Duprey, J. B. Lippincott Co., Philadelphia and New York, 1964, 224 pp. $3.95.

"A novel about children, written for adults," was the way Mr. Richard A. Duprey described his recently published novel, A House Full of Angels, now available in the University Shop. Duprey, chairman of the Graduate Theatre Department, delineates the internal and external conflicts of a young boy in Amskoeag, New Hampshire in the throes of despair and fear.

Paul Normandin, the youthful protagonist, moves with his hard-working parents into an ominous, antediluvian house unaware of the toils he will soon undergo. Except for his favorite Uncle Toussaint and kindly Mrs. Bunn, Paul feels overwhelmed by the inconsistencies and mendacity of his parents.

When Bert and Loretta Normandin buy the "firm's white elephant", they literally throw their lives into the house, painting, fixing, and decorating the dilapidated dwelling. Paul would have to run with his problems to sympathetic Uncle Toussaint.

Impressionable child that he is, little "Chou" wants to be a missionary after meeting Bishop Jolicoeur, an old friend of his Uncle. The angel referred to in the title appears to the child when Paul finds himself in the oppressive milieu of his room in the old house.

The Angel's Wings

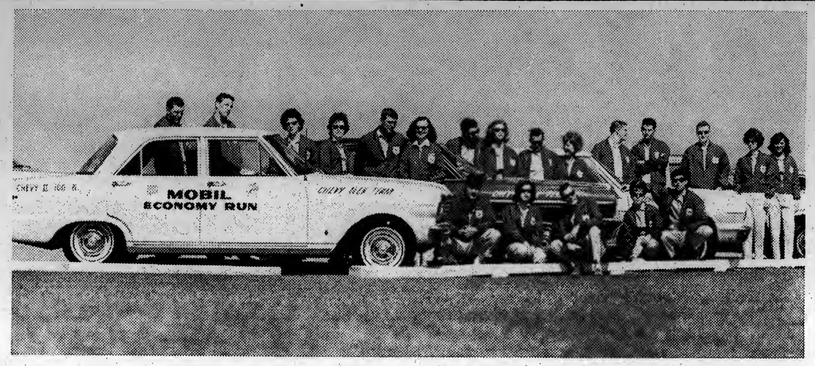
The angel's wings are "beautiful — how painfully, frighteningly, heart-achingly beautiful." It is at this point that Paul feels "God is close . . ."

However, during the course of the novel, Paul's incipient faith is transformed into a cynical, mundane outlook on life. His friend Philli states, while involved in a juvenile theological discussion, "There isn't any God up there. You call him — call him for anything — and you'll see."

The novelist's pervading theme, one which he mentioned himself, is the fact that a person, in order to live, must be able to accept mysteries. Uncle Toussaint puts it this way, "Don't stand too close to a mystery." Answers are not always available for everything in this life.

Little insights into human nature can be discovered throughout the book, such as the natural attraction of old men and young boys for each other. It seems that they are the only ones who have time for each other.

Another idea which the author presents, reminiscent of James Joyce and J. D. Salinger, is that childhood is the time of agony and importance. "Everyone must suffer childhood, but few recall its agony when they're fully grown," states the narrator.



Autobiographical?

One might be tempted to search for autobiographical elements in the book, since Mr. Duprey was born and raised in New Hampshire. But this seems senseless for it is a difficult task to write a work of art without putting something of your experience in it.

In the book, the influence of one writer in particular, Thomas Wolfe, can be noted. He rings out in this passage: "It was a night for barking dogs and the piercing cries of children shouting in the dusk and the sound of solemn trains calling through the long shadows . . ." The novel, however, shares none of his long discursive editorial comments.

Writing about children can be very difficult because it is easy for an author to sound affected. But A House Full of Angels shows no evidence of this artificiality, portraying vividly the periodic ferocity and meanness of youth.

In sum, those who are still searching for the Great American Novel will not find it here. However, if you simply wish to be entertained, to read a good book, and to travel back to the land of childhood, then pick up a copy of A House Full of Angels.

We'd like to say some nice things about America's young adult drivers

And we think we've got good reason! Last January, we selected twenty 18- and 19-year-old young men and women through the Junior Achievement program to drive our team of Chevrolets in the Mobil Economy Run, April 3-9. It was the first time any company had relied entirely on drivers with limited experience in this exacting competition.

We brought these young adults—most of them college students, some from the business world—to Arcadia, California, in late February. For six weeks, our expert teachers trained them in the skills of economy driving. Then, on April 3, they set off on the Run, 3,243 miles from Los Angeles to New York.

We were going against the grain. It takes high proficiency to win the Mobil Economy Run. Competition is tough. Why did we rely on drivers with such limited experience?

Chevrolet wanted to give the Chevy Teen Team a chance to prove in front of the nation that they and the 6.5 million licensed drivers in their age bracket are safe, sane people behind the wheel. We felt the Run offered a splendid chance.

The Corvair, Chevy IIs, Chevelles and Chevrolets driven by the Chevy Teen Team in the Mobil Economy Run did remarkably well compared with the class winners in overall miles-per-gallon figures. The final results are a tribute to the high degree of driving skill displayed by the Chevy Teen Team representing the youth of America.

No wonder we're proud of America's young adult drivers. We couldn't have a better reason.

Villanova Shooters Snare NRA Title; Two All-Americans Also Announced

by Gerry Bruderle

The Villanova Pistol team completed its most successful season by capturing the National Rifle Association Intercollegiate International Team Championship, the individual championship, and placing two firemen on the All-American team.

The team championship was based on sectional matches held earlier in the year in various parts of the country. The national title was determined solely on these scores which were computed by the National Rifle Association.

This was Villanova's first National Pistol title and the finest record for the team since it was founded in 1953. The championship was "International" in the sense that the target size is universal all over the world.

Senior George Sinclair took the National Individual Championship and was named All-American for the fourth straight year. Sinclair is a C and F student from Monsignor Bonnor High School.

He holds nearly all of Villanova's Pistol records, including a high round of 291 out of 300 shots, an an average of 283.7 for the year.

Joining Sinclair as second-team All-American is Tony Mascia. Mascia is an engineer from Port Chester, N.Y. with a 273.6 average and is nigh game of 282.

Aside from national and individual honors, Wildcat sharpshooters also posted a 26-4 record in dual matches against Eastern and Mid-Western foes. Villanova improved greatly over last year's 13-6 record, losing only to the three service academies and Ohio State.

The defeated the Coast Guard Academy, Valley Forge Military Academy, Rutgers, University of Massachusetts, West Chester, M.I.T., the Merchant Marine Academy, Pennsylvania Military College, LaSalle, and on a Mid-Western tour Michigan State, Notre Dame, and Savier.

Against nine other gun clubs in the Philadelphia area, Villanova went underfeated

Intramural Council Elects Officers For Upcoming Year

by Buzz Langan

Softball Playoffs began on Monday, May 11 with 19 teams participating. The final game will be played on Monday, May 18 on Austin Field.

Volleyball playoffs have also started on the Sullivan and Annex Courts. Due to the tremendous interest shown by the students in this sport, an additional court has been provided at Delurey Hall.

Fifty-one students were certified by the American Red Cross in the senior life saving course conducted by the Intramural Department at Villanova's pool. Approximately the same number are now taking the Instructors Course in Water Safety.

Elections

Recently the Intramurals Officials Association elected their student officers for the 1964-65 academic year. Elected as chairman was John Peters, a biology major from Altoona, Pa. Frederick Livingston and John Fenlon were elected as SGA representatives while Michael Mulvey was elected as secretary.

The Officials Association now has 37 members and the goal for September will be to reach 50 members by additions from the incoming class of 1968.

Each year the Intramural Department presents the Outstanding Intramural Athlete Award to a senior who has actively participated in all phases of intramural sports during the past four years.

Shayer was a member of the Intramural Council for three years and this year served as Student President of the organization.

Looking ahead to the fall, the Department is also planning for the 1964-65 campaign. It was announced that Monday, September 28, has been designated as Muff day while Intramural football will open on Wednesday, September 30. For the Muff day proceedings, the sophomore team will be directed by Don Serafano, Vice-president of the class of 1967.

VU Ruggers Edged By 1st Calvary Troops Of Philadelphia, 10-0

by Bob McIntyre

The Villanova Rugby Club dropped a close decision to the First Troop Philadelphia City Cavalry Saturday afternoon, by a 10-0 score, as injuries were the keynote to the defeat.

The game opened up very briskly but was soon to be halted for within ten minutes after the start, Jeff Houlihan, a Freshman Wing-Three-Quarters was caught up in a herd of First Troop players and received a deep cut in his head. He was taken to Bryn Mawr Hospital and there was given ten stitches.

"Injuries"

This incident marked the beginning of defeat for the losers because now they had to take one of the scrums, (a forward), Bill Glenn, and place him in the backfield thus weakening the forwards; for in Rugby once you start the game you cannot replace any of the 15 men that started because there is no substitution allowed.

Nevertheless the game continued but again in ten minutes the last of the wing-three-quarters, Jim McKusker sprained his ankle and had to leave the field but by the second half he returned to try again. When he left the ball was on the goal line and in two plays it was over the goal line for the score. The conversion was made and the score read 5-0.

The second half found the Wildcats hungry for a score. They were moving the ball very fast on their way to paydirt, but then on a forward pass play one of the Troop players, on the dead run intercepted the pass and went all the way for a 50-yard run which spoiled the Cats chance for victory or a tie, and after the extra point the score was 10-0. Thus the Cats record slipped to 4-3-1, (3-1-1 in league play).

"Catnips"

After the game these comments were heard as the players left the field. Capt. Ed Wilkinson said, "Their team was made up of big strong forwards and their kicker was the main reason for defeat, besides injuries, because he kept Villanova in a deep hole with his kicking."

The Rugby Club has two more games left before the "Seven Aside" tournament at Baltimore, June 6. They oppose St. Joe's Wednesday and Penn State Saturday. Both games will be held at home.

Villanova's Lacrosse Team Drops Two Of Last Four Games

by John Barron

The lacrosse club has been one of the busiest team on the campus in recent weeks. Since their game with national power George Washington University from Washington, D.C., the squad has played four games.

The stickmen split these four games, defeating Fairleight-Dickinson and Franklin Marshall while losing to Dickinson and Hartwick College.

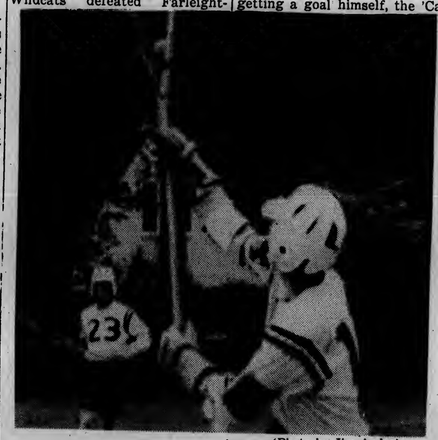
Wildcats Win

In what was probably their best game of the campaign, the Wildcats defeated Farleight-Dickinson 8-4 at the loser's home field. It was a fine team victory as the club looked good enough to take on any competition. Captain Bill White and Spook Hilgartner paced the offense with two goals apiece.

On the following Saturday, Villanova played Dickinson behind the football stadium. This time Villanova came out on the short end of a 7-5 score despite the near-heroics of goalie Jack Wehrman. White, with assistance from Hilgartner, tallied three goals.

Despite the score the game was tied at 3-3 at halftime.

Playing with only a three-day rest, the Stickmen defeated Franklin and Marshadd 4-2. Wehrman had another fine day as he batted down some thirty F. and M. shots.



In addition, he held the upstaters scoreless until the game was no longer in doubt. White handled the scoring honors.

Rounding out the circle of the club's activities was a tough 7-6 loss to Hartwick College last Saturday. The lead see-sawed back and forth throughout the contest, and a Father's Day crowd saw the Villanova team battle back from a 3-1' deficit to tie the game twice, at three and five all.

With White scoring one on a Hilgarter assist, and Spook getting a goal himself, the 'Cats rallied from an 8-5 score to make it close, but still falling one goal shy as the game ended.

White ended the game with four goals while Hilgartner picked up one more and added four assists.

This Saturday, the team travels to the Nation's capital where they take on Georgetown in an attempt to avenge an earlier 10-9 loss. This will be the team's last game of the season.

Villanova's Brennan Crowned As Champion Of Collegiate Bowlers

by Spence Jones

John Brennan, a Villanova junior, won the National Intercollegiate Match Game Bowling Championships held May 9 at the Bowlmor Lanes, New York City.

Brennan defeated Bruce Forsland, the Western Intercollegiate Bowling Champion, 579-573. Forsland, from the University of Minnesota, rolled games of 168, 235, and 170.

Brennan bowled 175, 214, and 190 for his winning total.

The match was not decided until the tenth frame of the final game when Forsland failed to convert a spare.

Brennan, a 21 year old junior, hails from Dallastown, Pennsylvania. He is majoring in Mechanical Engineering.

With only six years bowling experience, Brennan is now the best collegiate bowler in the nation. He has been the key to the Wildcat keglers rating of second in the East.

Friendly Foolishness

Looking Back?

by Steve Freind

With the school year rapidly drawing to an end and the student body preparing a mass exit to promote the good name of Villanova in far flung spots (Somers Point, Long Island, New England,, it is time to reflect on the closing sports campaign. Time and space prohibit discussing every sport on campus, but two of the major ones can be handled.

Football

Alex Bell's gridders produced a 5-4 record which seemed to please absolutely no one. The 'Cats started fast with victories over West Chester and Toledo, but faltered throughout the rest of the season. Criticizing Bell became the thing to do and a few "loyal sons of Villanova" went to the rope locker.

The merit of Coach Bell is not being discussed here, but one fact must be realized. At the outset of the grid campaign with a huge amount of graduation losses, most critics figured that the 'Cats would be lucky to break even. Bell's boys surpassed that mark, but armchair quarterbacks have short memories.

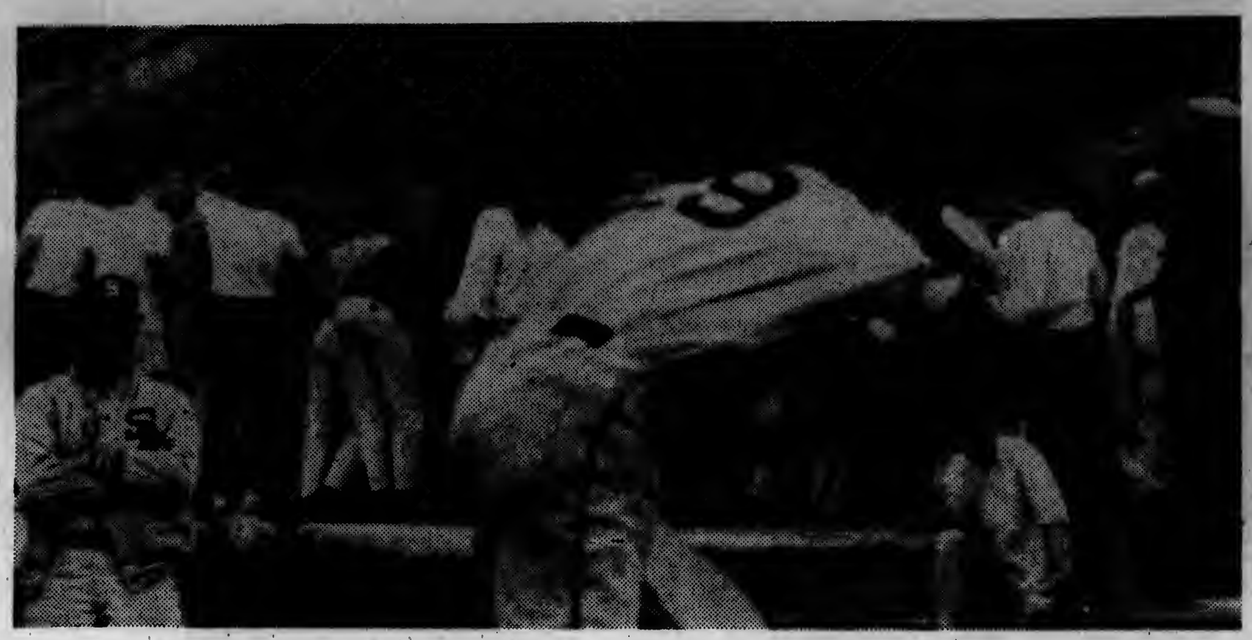
A major problem was the absence of a seasoned quarterback, but Soph Dave Connell picked up available game experience and should lead the 'Cats to greater heights next year. With the wealth of talent returning, including Al Atkinson, from this corner the finest lineman in the country, the 'Cats could be an eastern power.

Basketball

There's not much that can be said about the basketball season. All the superlatives have been already used. The 'Cats posted one of the finest logs in Villanova history and only a superhuman effort by Jeff Mullins deprived them of a ticket to Kansas City and a shot at the big cookie.

One thinks of the basketball campaign with a touch of sadness though, for it marked the end of the reign of Wally Jones (St. Walter to many). For three years the Jones boy did everything right and it will be a long time before the sight of Number 24 flashing around the court is forgotten. He may be sorely missed in Tokoyo, but the Detroit Pistons got themselves a bargain.

As great as Jones was, the bulk of credit for the Villanova success is due to Coach Jack Kraft. Kraft possesses the mystifying knack of getting every possible bit of talent from each player and his defense is a thing of beauty. It's only seven miles from Malvern Prep to Villanova, but when Kraft traveled that distance, the basketball miseries of Villanova came to an end — and spirit was reborn.



There are many talented coaches in the country and, more locally, in the Big Five, but you have to go some to top the man who produces the annual Miracle of the Main Line.

All in all, it was the kind of year that makes you proud to be a Wildcat.

P.S. We're Number One.

Villanova Nine Even Season Log 5-5 In Victory Over West Chester State

by Jim Proud

In their first of two games against West Chester this year, the Villanova nine squeeked out a 5-4 victory in 10 innings to even their season log at 5-5.

The game was played on Villanova's diamond last Wednesday and was the 'Cats first game since April 25 when they played Seton Hall.

Villanova went into the bottom of the eighth training by 4-1 but the Rams pitcher Tony Makara lost the touch slightly and allowed two runs. They came on the strength of a two run homer by the 'Cats third sacker Bob Hall.

The runner scoring in front of Hall was, a pinch-hitter for pitcher Tony Candellio, Jim Morcey.

As a result of the eighth inning the 'Cats trailed by one run but made this up in the ninth. This final run in regulation time was unearned, thanks to errors by Jackson and Kratzof of West Chester, but it enabled the Villanova left fielder Jack Emery to get the game winning R.B.I.

His bases loaded sacrifice fly in the last of the tenth to right field prevented starting pitcher Bill Smith from being tabbed with a loss.

The inning started with the 'Cats catcher George Pond slapping a single. The Rams then got two outs, one on a sacrifice bunt by Art Mahan. The Rams then planned on getting an easy out and walked two batters to load the bases. Emery, however, spoiled their plans with a shot to right.

The Seton Hall game, played on May 9, was also won by a late rally but this time the 'Cats weren't supplying the runs.

The Pirates, led by their third baseman John Monteleone, scored four runs in the top of the ninth to down the 'Cats 9-7 who were until then leading 6-5.

Monteleone hit a bases-loaded triple to drive in three runs and then scored himself to account for the Pirates' dnal four and game winning runs.

In this their second meeting with the Pirates the 'Cats played good offensive ball, collecting 10 hits and seven runs, but they allowed three unearned runs which cost them the game.

The St. Joe Hawk was downed by the Cat for the second time this season by 4-2 on Monday, May 11.

Smith Wins

Behind the hard pitching of Bill Smith and reliever Vic Majewski, Villanova scosed the first run and sustained a rally to come up with the fourth big five victory.

In the bottom of the fourth the Cats broke the 0-0 tie with two unearned runs. Bob Hall was the first batter to face John Butzs, the Stt. Joe hurler, and reached first on a dropped third strike. He then stole second and two pitches later Jack Emery walked.

Butzs was showing signs of weakening and it proved itself when he serped up a hanging curve for Mike Zaia who lined it to center. The St. Joe centerfielder charged it too quickly and the ball skidded through his legs. Both base runners scored and Zaia moved over to third.

Majewski Relieves

Startter Smith was relieved by Majewski in the seventh and this proved to be the game winning move by Coach Mahan. Wtth one across and men on second and third, all with none out Majewski toed the rubber and got the next three batters in a row out. Preserving the Cats then one run lead.

Thinclads Tie Quantico At 70, Zwolak, Livers Set Records

by Al Lupcho

The Villanova Wildcats dualed the Quantico Marines in their annual hair-raiser. In what is considered the best dual meet on the eastern coast, the 'Cats were tied by the Marines 70-70.

Record Set

Two stadium records were broken under warm temperatures and sunny skies. Larry Livers broke the stadium record in the 440 yard hurdles. His time of 52.4 seconds broke the old mark of 52.6 set back in 1959 by Josh Culbreath of the Philadelphia Pioneers.

Captain Vic Zwolak also broke the old 2-mile record of 9:15.3 set by Crawford Kennedy of Michigan State back in 1958. Vic's time of 9:07.3 shows that he is ready and waiting for the IC4A's to be held at Villanova on May 28 and 29.

The 'Cats managed but two first places and only 23 points in the seven field events. Soph Dick Kurnik won the shot with a put of 56'. Senior Rolando Cruz won the pole vault with a leap of 15'.

Running Events

The running events produced a 47-30 advantage for the VU speedsters. Down 70-65, the Marines captured the last event, the Mile Relay, which was worth fife points to tie the meet.

Junior Larry Livers, in addition to his record breaking performance in the 440 hurdles, also won the 120 yard high hurdles in 14.2 seconds. In a losing effort, Livers also ran the third leg of the VU mile relay team in a sizzling 47 seconds.

Junior Tom Sullivan came from behind to win the mile in 4:13.4 while Marshall Uzzle toob the 100 yard dash in a burning 9.6 seconds. Soph Earl Horner, who was nipped by Uzzle in the 100 yard dash, turned the tables by nipping Uzzles in the 220 yard dash in 21.0 seconds.

The only other Villanova first place was taken by Junior Noel Carroll who won the 880 yard run in 1':53.8. The slow time was caused by a very slow pace in which the first quarter was run in 60 seconds.

Coaches Jim (Jumbo) Elliott and Jim Tupeny were quite pleased with performance of most of the boys.

Los Angeles

Coach Elliott will take his world record 2-mile indoor team of Al Adams, Tom Sullivan, Vic Zwolak, and Noel Carroll along with pole vaulter Rolando Cruz to the Coliseum Relays at Los Angeles this Friday night. The test of the team will remain at home to tangle St. Joseph's this Saturday.

Large Freshman Class Increases Enrollment To A Record High

Villanova University tops all previous enrollment figures in the history of the school with approximately 1,500 incoming freshmen students.

This largest freshmen class in the history swells the University's full time undergraduate enrollment to nearly 4,500 students. Another 3,000 students are expected to enroll in the University College, the Graduate School and the Villanova School of Law for a total enrollment of about 7,500.

Largest Catholic College

With this expected enrollment, Villanova becomes the largest Catholic College in the state of Pennsylvania as it begins its 122nd year.

Applications for the 1964 freshmen class ran nearly thirty percent higher than 1963, the Rev. Francis X. Smith, OSA, Director of Admissions, reported.

Over 1,600 are housed on campus. Others either commute from their homes or as in the the case of out of town students, live in approved apartments or rooms near the Villanova campus.

The moving of St. Mary's Seminary from the heart of the Villanova campus to the new structure at the north-west corner of the campus has given the University use of the old seminary. The building has been named Corr Hall and has been renovated to accommodate resident students and contains offices and recreation rooms.

Moriarty Hall

Villanova recently purchased a private dwelling on the south side of Lancaster Avenue across from the main campus. This building, called Moriarty Hall, is used by the Speech Department and is headquarters for the Department of Fine Arts.

The campus now comprises 34 buildings and a 14,000 seat football stadium. The new seminary is on the campus but operates independently of the University.

Of Villanova's four major undergraduate programs the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences has the greatest number of students with over 1,700 expected for the fall. The College of Commerce and Finance enrolled 1,400 and the College of Engineering nearly 1,000. The College of Nursing has upwards of 200 women students.

THE VILLANOVAN NEEDS YOU

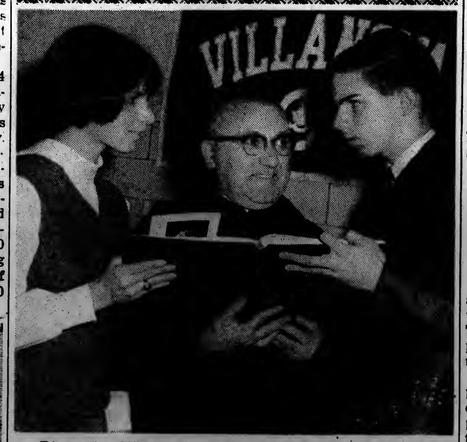
Applications Second Floor Dougherty

Dear Students of Villanova:

While the quiet solitude at Villanova University in the few weeks before your arrival provides a delightful rest priod, one soon becomes aware that Villanova is not really itself until you, the students, come back to give life and vitality to our campus. It is a happy privilege for the administration and faculty of the University to welcome you back to our midst. Again we express the he hope that you return to your studies refreshed and eager to put in a year of serious application to study, to the development of your careers.

As I write this letter, I have just finished reading the newspaper accounts in which Premier Krushchev has announced that the Soviet Union possesses a "monstrous new weapon," capable of exterminating of all humanity. Whatever may be the foundation of Comrade Nikita's boast, we are certainly living in an age in which such a weapon can be built.

Some may become discouraged by this news to the extent that further efforts to self-development on our part may seem futile. In God's Providence, the possibility of an abrupt annihilation is meant to have a more salutary effect.



This stark prospect should serve to remind us, as our Holy Scripture long ago has warned us, that we have not here a lasting city. Our destiny is in the life to come, the life after death, our life with God. That life to come is inevitable, and it is everlasting. It is for that life that we have been created. Whether our life on earth shall be considered worthwhile will depend wholly on the direction we give to that future life by our brief span of existence here. If wehere lead the purposeful, industrious, considerate life of charity that Our Divine Lord asks of us we shall indeed enjoy real life in that everlasting eternity. Otherwise our time is wasted even if we should spend a hundred years on earth satisfying ourselves and our wants.

While no one has promised you tomorrow, God has given you today. Try sometime to figure how much you could do today to insure your happiness in that future life. Try today to do at least some small part of what you could do.

May God bless all of you with good health and abundant grace today and for many years to come.

Sincerely yours,

Rev. John A. Klekotka, O.S.A.

Villanova Forum Schedules Author Mary Perkins Ryan

by Walt Baginsky

"Are Parochial Schools the Answer?" a rather controversial question among Catholic educators will be the topic of the second lecture offered by the Villanova Forum for its 1964-65 series.

The inaugural lecture presented by Dr. Mortimer Adler has given the Villanova Forum a highly intellectual impetus which most certainly will bear its continuance with this second lecture to be delivered by Mary Perkins Ryan on Thursday, October 15. The author of eight books, her latest on Catholic education she has generated a great deal of controversy.

Others

Other cultural events on the agenda for the 1964-65 series of the Villanova Forum will include: A no-holds-barred debate on current political and election issues features Fulton Lewis III and James A. Burkhart on Wednesday, October 28. With the national elections, by then, less than one week away, the topic — "Liberalism Versus Conservatism" — promises that the debate will gain tremendous stature, owing to the host of pertinent political issues.

Fulton Lewis III is an eloquent advocate of the need for conservatism in America today and director of the nation's largest conservative youth organization. Mr. Lewis is also known for his contribution to a variety of journals and appearances on national telecasts with David Brinkley and and David Susskind. His counterpart — Professor Burkhart has consistently espoused civil liberties as a member of the American Civil Liberities Union and the Americans for Democratic Action. He is an instructor in political science at Stephens College, Columbia, Missouri.

On November 23, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., President of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, will address the forum in a lecture entitled, "The Challenge of a New Age." An eloquent speaker, his preaching of non-violence ended segregation in the buses of Montgomery, Alabama in 1956. He has since emerged as one of the more temperate champions of the Negro in America today. He is the recipient of scores of awards including Time Magazine's "Man of the Year 1963" and most recently an honorary degree from Yale University.

On Thursday, December 3, Louis Untermeyer, the famous poet, editor, biographer, critic and anthologist will deliver a lecture on the topic "What Americans Read and Why." Lively, witty, gay, ageless, a

First Class Rating Awarded To Villanovan Last Semester

The Villanovan has been awarded a first class rating by the Associated Collegiate Press. The rating was based on issues published during the second semester last year.

The issues were evaluated by professional journalists and compared with other college papers in the same classification from across the country. The Villanovan's classification is that of a weekly in a university with better than 4000 students.

Among the topics judged were news content, photography, make-up, editorial content, and headlines. Receiving outstanding ratings were the editorial page and sports coverage.

There exist six categories into which papers may be placed: All-American, First, Second, Third, and Fourth Classes, and no rating.

Approximately 40 newspapers were entered in the Villanovan classification. No information as to relative standing is available except that the Villanovan was rated in the top third.

Mortimer Adler, Philosopher Defines Liberal Education

by Tom Krause

The Villanova Forum presented in its inaugural lecture of the 1964-1965 series, Dr. Mortimer Adler, director of the Institute of Philosophical Research. He spoke on the topic "Meaning of Liberal Education,, on September 21 in the Field House.

The lecture, well attended by Villanova freshmen and students from neighboring colleges, filled the Field House to near capacity. Dr. Adler, a renowned educator, addressed himself to the problems of education in the past and the present, calling for universal liberal education.

He said until the end of the 19th Century, "Schooling was for the few; learning was for the few. Now there is confusion and bewilderment in our society about higher education. Schooling in the past had nothing to do with earning a living."

Liberal Education

In Dr. Adler's opinion, liberal education should be available to everyone in our society, "who is not in an asylum". This education should consist of a bachelor's degree, earned in either 12 or 16 years.

"The end of liberal schooling is leisure," commented Dr. Adler. "Leisure does not mean free time but those activities by which a man grows in the goods of the soul rather than the body."

Dr. Adler noted that schools are not the place for the achievement of education. As you grow older you will become educated."

Hard Work

The teacher in Dr. Adler came forth when he exhorted the students in his audience to choose the hardest courses they could find. They should eschew the courses which produce "easy" A's. He realized however that the greatest obstacle to education is youth, its restlessness and lack of experience.

There are three ingreditents in a liberal education which Dr. Adler felt schools should provide for the young: 1. training in the liberal arts, the arts of learning; 2. an acquaintance with the world of learning, and 3. the "stretching" of a young person's mind.

In the question-answer period which followed the lecture, Dr Adler proposed a 12 year program in which six years are devoted to elementary education and six years to higher education. He also castigated our society for its failure to cope with its educational problems.

Changes On The Campus Scene Provide Lounges And Dorms

The physical appearance of the University has undergone pronounced changes over the summer. These include the interior renovation of Corr and St. Rita's halls, the adding of lounges and recreation rooms, and changes on the campus itself.

Corr and St. Rita's Halls, previously seminarian dorms, have been changed to accommodate the increased number of freshmen on campus. In addition to the added dormitories, space was also provided for campus organizations and administrative facilities.

Psychological Services, the Vocation Director, the Selective Service Office, the assistant Chaplain's Office, and the Postgraduate Study Adviser were relocated in Corr Hall, the old St. Mary's Hall.

Campus organizations in Corr, are: the Lynx, Concept, C.C.D., and VAMP. There was a visitors' lounge installed on the first floor of Corr with a laundromat placed in the basement. A recreation room is planned for the basement of the dorm.

The Belle Aire, Belle Masque, Turf 'n' Tinsel, the University College Student Council, the Knights of Columbus, the fraternities, sorority and other activities will meet in the basement of St. Rita's Hall. There is also a visitor's lounge and a recreation room in St. Rita's.

In other moves, the Political Science Department has taken over the former offices of the Belle Air in the basement of Vasey Hall. Mr. Vincent J. Femia, Student Financial Aid Director has taken over the former Postgraduate Study Adviser's office in 208 Tolentine.

Exterior improvements include the construction of two handball courts and resurfacing of the tennis courts. Also resurfaced were a major part of the campus roads and over half of the parking lots.

The football field was completely resodded as another part of the University's extended program of building and renovation.

Included in this program, will be the refinishing of basketball courts in the Alumni Gym. Two coin-operated pool tables were placed in the recreation room of Sullivan Hall. The proceeds of the tables go to the purchase of free tables in the future.

Annual Conference Held At Villanova For Young Newsmen

Nearly five thousand high school students from the eastern part of the nation attended the fifteenth Annual School Publications Conference at Villanova University on Saturday, September 26.

Registration for the day long parley began at 8:30 a.m. in the lobby of the Field House. Students representing two hundred and thirty high schools and preparatory schools in a twelve state area attended the day long meeting on the Villanova campus.

Activities

The young and budding journalists heard lectures, watched exhibits, and participated in panel discussions designed to aid them in their work on high school newspapers, yearbooks magazines and other scholastic publications.

A host of professional journalists assembled to serve as speakers and moderators on panel discussions which were held in various buildings throughout the campus. Among subjects reviewed were newswriting, headline writing, photography, art work, administration, editorial writing, and carbon drawing.

Address

The Very Rev. John A. Klekotka, O.S.A., Villanova's President, delivered a brief address of welcome during a general session at 10:30 a.m. in the University Field House. The keynote address was delivered by Mr. Samuel Boyle, City Editor of the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

The Rev. Louis A. Rongione, O.S.A., University Librarian, is chairman of the School Publications Conference at Villanova University, one of the largest of its kind in the nation.

VILLANOVA HOMECOMING: 1964

After winding its way through rnegie Hall, the Ford Caravan Music will bring "A Folk and zz Wing Ding" to the Field House on October 10.

The concert slated to begin at 8:00 p.m. will feature the Serendipity Singers and George Shearing Quintet. The concert is being sponsored by the Senior Class; tickets are $2.50 and $3.00 and may be purchased in the Pie Stoppe.

If you have been humming "Crooked Little Man" or "Beans in Your Ears", blame it on a business administration student, a prospective ancient historian, a would-be psychologist and a bunch of music majors — all possessing a boundless zest for singing — who, having become compatriots at the University of Colorado, formed the original core of the Serendipity Singers. Enlarged by the addition of two University of Texas graduates, the group of seven boys and two girls was born.

When word of the Serendipity Singers reached New York and Fred Weintraub, owner of New York's celebrated night spot and folk mecca "The Bitter End", arranged to bring them to his club, where they entertained capacity audiences for several months.

The Serendipity Singers have recorded 3 albums and have appeared on six "Hootenanny" television shows. In view of the definition of "serendipity" meaning "the unexpected discovery of a new and happy event", the group seems to have chosen a most appropriate and descriptive name.

And the name "Ford CARavan of Music" is also a most descriptive name for the concert series which began a year ago in New York City at Carnegie Hall. The Ford Motor Company is the underwriter of this promotion of the "Lively Ones".

Shearing's Courage

The story of George Shearing is one of tremendous talent and courage. Totally blind from birth, he faced obstacles which might have easily discouraged a less optimistic or determined artist. After his formal education ended at sixteen, George Shearing considered himself lucky to land a piano playing job in a neighborhood pub.

He studied classical music dilligently during his off-hours, and eventually began getting supper club engagements with a band led by a friend of the family. After touring Britain with an all-blind band for 9 months, some musical arrangements, and a first personal BBC broadcast, England began to take notice of the shy, slender nineteen-year-old, who varied between piano and accordian with equal dexterity.

Broadcast and recording dates began multiplying rapidly, and just before the outbreak of World War II, George Shearing landing his own BBC radio show. By 1946, he had headlined at virtually all the top clubs in London with his own groups, and his records were acknowledged best-sellers in the jazz field.

John Barrow Chairman for the Homecoming Queen Contest, announces that any Villanovan who wishes to enter his girl in the queen contest must submit a 5" by 7" picture of her accompanied by her name and school or occupation. His name, class and division must also be written on the back of the picture. These pictures must be submitted before Thursday, October 1, in the Student Government Association office.

The queen will be selected by a qualified panel and the five finalists will be announced in the Villanovan. The winner will be announced at the dance on Friday evening, October 9 at which time she will receive a bouquet of roses and her crown. She will reign over the activities of the entire weekend.

Saturday afternoon at the football game between the Wildcats of Villanova and the Detroit Titans the queen will be announced. The queen will lead the half-time show of more than twelve floats. by Bill Manfred

The Senior Class of Villanova will present the annual Nick Basca Homecoming Weekend on October 9 and 10.

Vince Arpa, the chairman for the weekend, announces the weekend will begin Friday evening at 8:30 pm with a rally and a bonfire on the field across from the Field House. This rally and bonfire will be sponsorel by the Spirit Committee of the Student Government Association under the leadership of Brian Banmiller.

Rally-Dance

Directly following the rally there will be a dance in the Field House. The music of the Paul Judge Orchestra will entertain the near record crowd from 9 pm to 1 am. During the dance the winner of the Queen contest will be announced and she will begin her reign over the weekend of activities. Chairman for the dance is Paul Varillo. Tickets for the dance may be purchased in the Pie Shoppe at $3.00 per couple.

On Saturday afternoon the weekend will continue as the Villanova Wildcats meet the Detroit Titans in what is expected to be one of the most interesting football games of the season.

John Barrow, Chairman of the half-time show, promises a tremendous show including the introduction of the Queen and her court and more than twelve colorful floats depicting Villanova's victories over the Detroit Titans in the past years. The Nick Basca Award will be presented to the best float entered at the half-time show.

Concert Climax

The climax of the weekend will be the concert by the Serendipity Singers and George Shearing. This concert, sponsored by the Ford CARavan of Music, was arranged over the summer by the general chairman, Vince Arpa, and Fr. Appicci, Dean of Student Activities, and Fr. Ryan, the Senior Class moderator.

This show will travel across the country to entertain the jazz and folk music lovers of America after leaving Villanova University. The concert will begin at 8 p.m. in the Field House. Tickets for this concert may be purchased in the Pie Shoppe for $2.50 for balcony seats and $3.00 for orchestra seats.

As it is expected to be a sell out, it would be wise to purchase tickets early.

A Study In Hypocrisy?

The words and actions of Senator Barry Goldwater and Congressman William Miller have been analyzed by any number of political and not-so-political theorists. The man who seems to have escaped notice until recently, however has been Pennsylvania's Govenor William Scranton.

Embodied within the Governor, political scientists and other curiosity seekers may have found the perfect example of unity for party's sake or — the perfect example of the grossest kind of political hypocrisy imaginable.

Not three months ago, Scranton had been bouncing across the country desperately pleading, yes pleading, for support to prevent the hallowed Arizona Senator from receiving his party's Presidential nomination. The vigorous attack he mounted against Goldwater was so similar to what the Democrats would use, and in fact are using, that the State Democratic Party boss Otis Morse has said that the State organization need only re-iterate Scranton's words this fall.

Judging by the behavior of Scranton and his supporters up to and during the GOP Convention, particulary the imfamous letter written by an over-zealous Scranton staff member to Goldwater, whose contents the Governor never repudiated, has given the impression that nothing could be more abominable, more catastrophic, or more deadly for America, the free world, and the Republican Party than nomination and election of Barry Morris Goldwater.

And yet, not three months after the Convention's never doubted choice, the Governor, while campaigning in the mid-West, has publicly stated that voting America's two best candidates are Goldwater and Miller!

Granted, if party unity is an essential for the party of the incumbent administration it is demanded for party out of power. A badly divided party will not be defeated by the opposition but by itself.

Nearly all Republican leaders are publicly supporting the Goldwater-Miller ticket hoping for victory but willing to accept a loss to the Democrats, but not to themselves. But in the case of Scranton, it does not seem plausible that his cold aversion to possible nominee Goldwater in July can be defrosted to warm, enthusiastic support for candidate Goldwater not two and a half months later. Can such strong conviction as displayed last July be tossed aside in less than ninety days?

The New Slavery In Labor

by Jim Brennan

"Yellow dog contracts" under which employees were forced either to join a union approved by their employer or not to join any union were denounced by all labor for a generation. These contracts were outlawed by national and state laws to free labor from this coercion.

The agreement for a union closed shop is now called a "union security" agreement. This term by itself shows that it is not the worker who is made more secure by union closed shop agreements. Only the union itself, the union officialdom is made more secure by such agreements. These closed shop contracts make it practically impossible for dissenters, even for a substantial majority in the union successfully to oppose the dictatorial control of a well-entrenched machine of labor bosses Resulting from this, the union closed shop agreement destroys the fundamental principle of self organization and collective bargaining which, friend and organizers of free labor have been establishing firmly in public opinion, public policy, and public law.

Union Bosses

Union bosses argue that all employees are free to choose within the union their representative. Realize this is not a genuine freedom of choice any more than there is freedom of voting under a communist government. In communism there is only "one party" which the voter can choose to represent him and in compulsory unionism there is only "one party" which the employee can choose to represent him.

Now union labor leaders are demanding that a new type of "yellow dog contract" be legalized. This is called a union shop agreement. Under it the employer forces every old and new employee to be a member, pay dues and submit to the discipling of one particular union, or else lose his job.

This presents a questionable situation for the union may not necessarily bea beneficial organization. It may be loyal to the workers and to the government; or it may be a communist-controled union disloyal to both.

Inherent Wrong

The inherent wrong of compulsory unionism exists in the opression and denial of individual liberty. The most effective voice which any man can have in an organization is the voice of criticism. This can be made effective only if it is coupled with the power to withdraw from the organization, to refuse to give it moral and financial support, and to threaten unwise or vicious leadership with the development of a rival faction or organization to challenge its authority.

The worth of labor organizations to the workers lies in their power to control their representatives. If the individual worker is denied the right and freedom to refuse to support an official or an organization which does not truly represent him they may become helpless subjects of a labor autocracy.

The outstanding labor unions of the United States are making a mockery out of collective bargaining and destroying the essential freedom of labor by their campaign to establish compulsory unionism which should not be lawful under a free government or tolerated by a free people.

Chaos And Conflict

A small southeast Asia country hardly bigger than the State of Florida has become with in the past year probaly the hottest and blackest spot of American foreign policy.

Brought vividly into the spotlight by the violent overthrow of the Diem government on November 2, 1963, this country literally holds the attention of the world. Never has such a collection of revolt, chaos, confusion, petty politics and uncertainty been gathered in one small area.

Already the military government of General Khah seems destined to be overthrown, if not by his own offices, then surely by the leftist orientated Buddhists. Saigon seems so engrossed in the problem of establishing a governmet that no one seems to have time to give serious thought to the fact that the government is already threatened by the Viet Cong.

And while the South Vietnamese wage war among themselves as well as with the Viet Cong, what of the United States, how are we affcted? We went around until 1960 claiming that there was no real Communist threat merely because no Vietnamese army units had been attacked, meanwhile the Viet Cong was going about destroying all local authority, with close to 13,000 local leaders killed since 1957.

In the November 1, 1963 issue of Stars and Stripes we praised the loyalty of the Vietnamese soldier and the next day they overthrew the civilian government. We have had the further trouble of trying to push a lethargic people to maintain a war which holds no real hope for an end in the near future. With the Communists self sufficient in more than half of the 40 provinces, this country faces a decision. The crossroads at hand offer us two choices — postive and decisive action or a bad investment write-off. Uncertainty can no longer be tolerated. It is our feeling that the decision must be positive. Our position as a leader in the fight against Communism should remove our choice. The decision must be made and made now.

On behalf of myself and the other officers of the student body I welcome you back to what I hope will be a successful year for all.

Perhaps the most difficult and immediate job a campus officer faces at the beginning of the fall semester is the establishment of a tone or a fabric within which his organization can function for the coming year. The determination of this tone is essential if a unity of purpose is to be achieved.

This task of establishing a set yet flexible matrix becomes much more difficult when the number involvel approaches 5000. In this instance proper publicity plays as important a role as the actual policy determination. Much of this publicity can be achieved by the Student Government organs but in the final analysis it is the interest of our student body members that results in a well informed campus.

Cooperation

If the theme for the coming year could be narrowed to a few words they should be: expansion coupled with student cooperation. The element of cooperation is already evident in the Freshman orientation program since the classes of '67 and '68 are combining to produce one of the most successful programs in years.

The tone of expansion is best exemplified in the Student Government Concert and Lecture series. These programs are the finest yet sponsored by the students, thus deserving of large student support.

To the Freshmen

Within three years you must hold the positions of student responsibility on campus. Being active and taking an interest in the workings of student government on the student body on the class and on the organization level is the best preparation possible for these positions. In closing I would remind you that Student Government meetings are open to all and that attendance at one meeting would be an interesting and rewarding part of a successful Villanova career.

ADA And The Democrat Party Humphrey ADA Vice Chairman

by Steve Morrison

In 1947, at the Willard Hotel in Washington, D.C., liberal minds gathered to create an organization known as the Americans for Democratic Action, or the ADA. One of the founding fathers was the new mayor of Minneapolis, Hubert H. Humphery, who is a member today.

The ADA's platform according to the 1961 policy statement calls for such realistic actions as:

1. Total disarmament under U.N. controls.
2. A U.N. army to keep world wide peace.
3. Immeriate negotiation for U.S. recognition of Red China and its admission to the U.N. as China — i.e., with a security council veto.
4. Removal of all P.S. trade and passport barriers with Red China.
5. A hands-off policy toward Cuba.

Most Americans question the wisdom of these and other ideas of the ADA. A 1958 GOP staff study described the overall aims of the ADA as "a program of laundered communism with the Bill of Rights tacked on."

Socialistic

The ADA is not a communist organization or front. It does have a strong socialist leaning as was pointed out by Congressman Thomas B. Curtis (R-Missouri) in a speech to the House of Representatives on Thursday, January 11, 1962.

". . . The socialism they want to bring about would be quite as total, industrially, as that in Russia by shooting, and, of course by infiltrating the executive branch of the Government."

They have been successful infiltrators of the executive branch of the federal goverment. This fact was brought out by a series of articles which appeared in the Los Angeles Times during the period of September 3-10, 1961.

The articles were titled "What and Why is ADA? Its Top Man Gives the Answers" Dr. Samuel H. Beers, a leader of the ADA was asked:

Q. What is the most effective way in which ADA helps to shape our National Policy?

A. ". . . The most effective way we are shaping policy right now is by the large number of ADA people — present or former members — who are in the Kennedy Administration. To tell the truth the Kennedy Admin'stration is full of ADA members or people who were in the ADA — of course that couldn't be true when it is a Republican Administration."

Leftwing Democrats

The reason for this infiltration may also be an effort to gain more control of the Democratic party. This would swing American politics farther to the left than ever before.

The 1958 Senate Republican policy committee staff study claimed the ADA is "a group of leftwing Democrats who hope, as either senior or junior partner of a labor alliance, to capture the Democratic party and bring about a system which would amount to a National Socialism in America."

Whatever the case, the ADA is an important element in our government today. The Johnson Administration has inherited the same ADA infiltration from the Kennedy Administration and even has Hubert H. Humphrey who was until recently, a Vice-Chairman of the ADA, as a candidate for Vice President.

TOPS IN POPS

by Bill McCloskey

We understand Ray Charles has deceided to quit recording his soul sounds, in favor of record producing . . . a great loss to American Jazz . . . but Ray has some expensive tastes . . . he may be back for some of that lucrative $$$.

Watch for record prices to go up if the Post Office is successful in pushing through postage rate increases on the discs. Even without a mark up Barbra Streisand will laugh all the way to the bank with returns from her brand new album . . . "People" . . . it is nothing short of great. The same goes for her new single . . . "Funny Girl". Pretty fair for songs that she doesn't even sing in the show score.

Fine Tuning

. . . we find the new Lloyd Thaxton Show "at 5 on 3" different, but overdone. The day we caught his act, the host was "lip-sinking" the bongos. He did it well but the director couldn't resist switching cameras every 8 seconds. Thaxton moves his lips (or hands) to discs of the latest teen hits as sung by the original artist.

Tips For Freshmen

by John E. Roberts

If you have been wandering around campus for the past few days with a bulge in your sport's coat pocket (a student handbook) searching for the campus tavern, the hand ball courts or the fourth floor of Dougherty Hall, chances are that you are a freshman.

If this be the case, then read on and you may garner a few useful bits of information.

Being an upperclassman, I offer these tips in a rare display of affection and pity for the hopelessly confused.

Avoiding Trouble

Of prime importance to you is the avoidance of all upperclassmen, especially SCs and OCs, since they generally consider you inferior beings of sub-ethnic origins.

Since you are easily, identifiable as a freshman by your 'regs,' it is advisable for you to avoid all places where upperclassmen may be congregated, such as Kelly's, the pie shoppe, the dining room, Kelly's, Dougherty Hall in general, the Field House and Kelly's. Places like the classrooms and the library will be relatively free of upperclassmen and should be safe.

If you are the typical college freshman, you have come to this benevolent institution of higher learning with one serious thought on your mind. Girls!

Were Are They?

The question is, where to find them. The answer is easy. Find an inconspicuous place to stand near the main entrance to the campus at about four o'clock any afternoon. Watch for an upperclassman with a peculiar forlorn look in his eye and when you spot the look, follow him. It's a safe bet he'll lead you straight to Rosemont College and a veritable plethora of . . . girls?

In case you miss Rosemont and wind up at Harcum, keep your head. Any girls you meet, tell them you are from Penn and your name is Nickie Hilton and you'll get your date.

If you wind up at Bryn Mawr talk fast, mention existentialism Thoreau and psychology, and may the Lord be with you.

Now, some tips for the classroom. If your instructor doesn't arrive when the bell rings, you don't have to sit all day and wait for him. Adopt the following standard waiting periods, graduated according to the instructors rank.

For a student assistant, wait 5 minutes — For an associate professor, wait 15 minutes — For a full Professor, wait anywhere from 20 minutes to the time h--- freezes over, depending on his temper.

When the instructor asks a question you can't answer, you could say, "I don't know." You could, but that answer immediately brands you as a green frosh. I suggest the following alternatives:

1) "I can't remember."
2) The gentleman next to me and I were discussing that very question just before you came in, but since he expressed it far more eloquently than I, I shall yield the floor to him." (Make sure the fellow next to you is not a football player and is not more than 2 inches taller than you are.)
3) Faint. (Never try this more than once with each instructor.)
4) Discreetly ask somebody next to you for the answer. (Try camouflaging the question with a cough.)

Brownie Points

When the dismissal bell rings, don't immediately bolt for the door. It gives the instructor an inferiority complex. Rather, sigh regretfully and glare in the general direction of the bell to show your displeasure at being interrupted in the middle of a stirring, inspiring lecture. Casually pick up your books, stroll through the door, THEN bolt for your next class.

Some night about 8 or 8:30 p.m., after finishing a hard evening of study, if you feel the need for some liquid refreshment, you can follow these directions to Kelly's, the off-campus social center for upperclassmen, featuring an olympic billiards table, a grand piano, a television, tasty sandwiches and fifteen cent draughts.

Thumb it down Lancaster Ave. in the direction of Bryn Mawr and past a small forest on your left. Then look for the big flashing green and red neon sign that says KELLY'S. On second thought, forget it frosh; they are carding everybody anyway.

Burton + Shakespeare - Hamlet, A Disappointment

by Mr. Joseph McGowan. Department of English

Last week John Gielgud's recent stage prooduction of "Hamlet" was made available to movie goers at several neighborhood theaters in our area. A new process called Electronovision was used to record a live performance at the Lunt-Fontanne Theater in New York City, and while it provided the viewers with some interesting close-ups, the results were in the main unsatisfactory and at times disconcerning. The recording of the sound track was deficient and the overall quality of the picture about equivalent to that of a taped television program.

The production itself was found to be disappointing, but I must confess at once to be strong prejudice: I do not like Elizabethan drama done in modern dress without scenery. To present a Shakespearean tragedy successfully on a bare rehearsal stage the actors must be exceptionally skillful and compelling in their roles; they must capture the audience's imagination totally and hold it throughout the performance. Unfortunately Gielgud's cast never quite achieved this end, and even the much heralded performance of Richard Burton appeared uneven in quality.

It may be unfair to demand of an interpreter of Hamlet that he add to our knowledge of the most enigmatic charter in all drama, but we should at least feel that we understand his interpretation. I found myself puzzled by Burton's Hamlet and several times had difficulty in finding a consistently developed motivation beneath his portrayal.

For one thing he played the opening scenes in such an agitated and even frenetic manner that when it came time for Hamlet to assume the "anti disposition" I frankly wondered why it was necessary. The raw power and virility, the carefully studied rendering of Hamlet's painful introspection and mental anguish, the magnificent voice and many other fine qualities noted by Broadway critics were all present in Burton's acting.

But I got the impression that he was at times operating within a blurred focus, that he was unsure of his reading of this most difficulty and exacting role. Certainly there were moments when Burton assumed control of his interpretation and managed to convey the true pathos of Hamlet's tragic plight, but at other times, as in his slopping handling of the advice to the players, the talented Welshman almost came a cropper.

Undoubtedly Burton's Hamlet will be considered a significant contribution to the stage history of Shakespeare's masterpiece but as presented on the movie screen it fell considerably short of greatness and, it might be added, a good distance short of Laurence Oliver's 1948 tour de force.

As for the other principals, a distinguished group of actors turned in some surprisingly undistinguished performances, most conspicuously the weak and ineffectual portrayals of Claudius and Gertrude by Alfred Drake and Eileen Herlie. The talents of William Redfield and George Voskovec seemed wasted in the uninteresting roles of Guildenstern and the Player King, while Linda Marsh as Ophelia fought a losing battle with inexperience.

Summer Is Over And School Is In Don't Pass Out!

Well, another backbreaking summer of swimming, water skiing, and skin diving is over and all loyal Villanovans have returned once again eager for . . . a good beer party. Now Tony Marts is O.K. but nothing beats a V.U. beer . . . huh? Wrong theme?

Freshmen, in welcoming you to Villanova we would like you to know, to understand, to feel the real spirit of Villanova, liberty, equality and fraternity, mostly fraternity. Villanova has some of the best fraternity parties around. Like I said, there's nothing like a good . . . sorry!

Frosh, in your conduct at all times remember that this school has a reputation to uphold. So, at all times act like the Villanovan you are. How's that, you say! Well, ask any girl from Rosemont of Immaculata. They'll tell you how a true son of V.U. acts. In no uncertain terms they'll tell you . . .

The question has been raised about the consumption or alcoholic beverages in Pennsylvania. I realize this will be degrading for you New Yorkers but the age in this wonderful state seems like 32 and there is absolutely no way to circumvent this. All area "cocktail lounges" demand positive proof of age (or a note from your mother).

An American Liberal's Answer To Goldwater Simplicity

by Tom Bruderle

In all forms of democratic society, the party out of power or not in control of the government continuously and unceasingly attacks the policies of the majority party. In the United States this has always been the case and in criticizing the opposition and citing trouble-spots facing the nation, Senator Barry Goldwater knows no peer.

The Republican standard-bearer has declared that foreign policy will be the central issue in this fall's campaign. And to that end he has been lambasting the policies of the Johnson Administration from Vietnam to France, to Cuba, to Panama, to Cyprus, and the list could go on.

He has been passionately appealing to voting America that these and other problems cannot be solved by electing Lyndon B. Johnson for four more years. Although he has been severely scoring the foreign policies of the Johnson Administration, he has yet to propose his own solutions for the handling of the Cyprus problem, or ending the disunity within NATO.

Senator Goldwater has a duty, as the loyal opposition to draw the voter's attention to the world's "hot-spots." But he also has a duty to spell out his own methods for dealing with America's problems. Said the then Senator John F. Kennedy in 1959, "It's up to the minority party to present realistic and constructive alternatives when they believe it in the national interest."

The choice being offered John Q. Citizen this November 3 is not a question of what type of policy will work here, there, or anywhere; the choice is something even more basic and fundamental.

Behind the final decision of American or presidental action is the concept of power and its use. Contained within this concept is the recognition of the types of power, conditions under which each can be used, the methods of their use, etc. A man's philosophy of power supplies the groundwork for his proposals for meeting various problems at home and abroad.

The Kennedy-Johnson concept of power is no easy thing to explain. American military, economic and diplomatic strength must be maintained but, particularly in the case of the military, it must be used thoughtfully, carefully and delicately, if it is to be used at all.

Because of the awful spectre of atomic weaponry, because of the presence of that disgusting, but nevertheless intangible, known as world opinion, because of the varied histories of the nations of the world in dealing with the U.S., because of many other complex "becauses," this administration believes that America's tremendous power potential must be operated with restraint.

Fears that a President Goldwater would retreat within a "fortress America" either abandoning or dismissing the rest of the world are groundless. What is alarming, however, is his overall train of thought and action in handling international affairs.

Just as President Johnson's concept of power seems disturbingly complex, Senator Goldwater's seems disturbingly simple, a simplicity that was theory in practice during the latter quarter of the 19th century. Basically he believes that the United States is the most powerful nation in the world, and should, therefore, act in a like manner. All of this decade's complexities are merely swept aside as all problems are reduced to a right-wrong, good-bad, white-black basis. Since the United States is always morally right there is no question that she can employ any means to reach an end and, acting out of reaction, the rest of the world will understand and step aside.

Consider the following example. The Arizona Senator's initial reaction to the cut-off of water to the Guantanamo Naval Base was "send the Marines in." The probable reasoning behind this proposed solution was that Castro would acquiece only to direct military force. To salve wounded U.S. pride and prestige this was the only course of action left open.

The eventual U.S. action did not even give the Castro regime the comfort that this country actually depended on the Cuban water supply, as ocean-going water tankers began transferring fresh water from the U.S. mainland. In addition, a complete water de-salinization plant was moved from California to Cuba. Although administration officials might have been sorely tempted to use troops, they were not needed as the final U.S. reaction complemented the initial Cuban action. After all, a fly-swatter is used to kill a winged-pest, not a brick.

In this age of scientific and political complexities, the philosophy of a far simpler, never-to-return era are not applicable despite deceiving similarities. Saber-rattling as an easy means of threatening potential enemies went out with the saber.

Lincoln once said that "the dogmas of the quiet past are inadequate to the stormy present. The occasion is piled high with the difficulty and we must rise to the occasion. As our case is new, so we must act anew. We must disenthrall ourselves."

American power today must be maintained for immediate and effective use. Unlike yester-year, power does not lie in its bold and showy use, but in its restrained and ready use.

American Conservatism

by Paul Fannin

Paul J. Fannin — Republican Governor of Arizona who is one of Presidential nominee Sen. Barry Goldwater's strongest supporters and who was very instrumental in achieving for Sen. Goldwater the Republican nomination. Governor Fannin is a very articulate advocate of conservatism.

Conservatism is today's challenge to the status quo. It is a dynamic challenge to the prevailing policies of liberalism, to the people who advocate and administer those policies, and to the theories behind them. In simple terms, conservatism is an adherence to ideas and policies based on experience rather than theory. Conservatives are constantly searching for new ideas and in fact have probably originated most of the world's best thinking. Aristotle was a conservative. Cicero was a conservative. John Locke was a conservative. Immanuel Kant was a conservative. Edmund Burke was a conservative. The list extends back through the most fertile periods of social, political, and economic expansion in the world's history — the Nineteenth Century industrial revolution, the Eighteenth Century age of reason, the development of science in the Seventeenth Century tremendous worldwide economic changes all the way back to Rome in the Second Century B.C. and Athens in the Fifth Century B.C.

Conservatism is sometimes mistakenly considered an archaic form of modern political thought, which is ridiculous. It is not, as its critics imply, a reactionary philosophy with the purpose of restoring an earlier social or political order any more than it is an effort to maintain the status quo.

I think liberalism as a form of modern political thought acting as a deterrent to human progress in precisely those areas where progress is now most needed, and while unfortunately it cannot yet be called archaic, the sooner it is discarded for something more promising, the better. Then we can begin to cope with the multitude of problems already left in its wake. The role of conservatism today is to accomplish this purpose.

On Second Thought

by Eugene FitzMaurice

When the President of the University welcomed the Freshman class, as well as the returning upperclassmen, he pointed out to them the self-educating process through which they must go in the next several months.

A part of this, he said, might be the kindling of an interest in politics, particularly in view of the fact that this is a Presidential election year which will offer many opportunities for discussion and debate for the next few months.

As far as he went he was right. However, had he gone beyond this, he would have been as wrong as the Capital clergyman Dean Sayre, who turned his pulpit into a rostrum and lashed forth at both Presidential candidates.

Dean

There is no doubt that his experience in government, both by association and service, as well as his obligation as a citizen to analyze and discuss the campaign make valid his right to such views. However, when as the Dean of the National Cathedral he lends the weight of his high office to political opinion, then he exceeds the bounds of his clerical capacity.

In 1960, clergymen of all faiths took a more active role than ever before in politics. The activities of clergymen to keep the Presidency from a Catholic was waged with unusual strength. But it should not be forgotten that there were those who sought to use the Democratic candidate's faith in his favor. A more crashing condemnation of these activities than merely their existence is both labors bore fruit.

Views

There is no doubt many consider one nominee to be rash and incapable of exercising the proper mental caution required of the President in these troubled times. Further, there is no doubt that many consider the financial manipulations of a Huckleberry Finn in a three piece suit to be equally disturbing. However, these facts should be left to those most capable of presenting them to the public, not those who view worldly activities with praise-worthy, but rarely utilized standards.

When a movie-star, author, financier or other public figure offers his support or condemnation of a political candidate, then his words are given more credence than might otherwise be the case. This is not as it should be, but it is the state in which we operate.

Points

For a member of the clergy to use his office to sway political opinion is doubly wrong. He first gives the often mistaken impression that his political views carry moral force behind them. The damage which this can do to incalculable thousands of voters can never be determined.

Secondly, he takes advantage of, and abuses, his high office to vent partisan views. In so doing, he compromises his office and the view which he seeks to further.

When political activity is recommended to students, a definite step forward in achieving political literacy is made. But when any clergyman be he college president, mountain hate monger, or politically oriented minister goes beyond this to influence others, then a point has been passed and pressure must be brought to move the individual, not the norm.

Villanova Young Republicans Set Strategy Tomorrow Night

The Villanova Collegiate Young Republican Club, which is affiliated with Young Republican College Council of Pennsylvania and with the Young Republicans of Pennsylvania, will hold its first meeting of the semester tomorrow night at 7:30 in 110 Bartley.

Tactics and campaign plans for the presidential election will be formulated. Campaign paraphernalia, such as bumper stickers, lapel buttons and viewpoints of the candidates, will be available.

The club was organized last May and offiers were elected at this time. Serving as Chairman will be Don Franz '66; Jim Brennan '66 will be vice chairman with Joe Scalfani '66, secretary; Joe Molinari Jr., a graduate student in political science, treasurer and John Lawrence '66, student council representative.

The purpose of this club shall be to contribute to the growth of the Republican Party among the students attending Villanova; and to promote good government. It will also train young people in practical political activity in campaigning on behalf of the Republican Party.

Students will be encouraged to contribute participation in the activities of the Young Republican and the Republican Party local, state, and national, after graduation from college.

Members of the club recently attended the Montgomery County Young Republican Federation "kickoff rally" for the county's Republican election campaign. The meeting was held at the General Washington Country Club in Audubon.

Attending the gathering were Congressman Richard S. Schweiker, a candidate for re-election; United States Senator Hugh Scott, also seeking another term and John A. Acton of Bryn Athyn, new chairman of the state's Young Republicans.

Franz, chairman of the club, stated that "we hope to do our share to carry the Republican Party to victory in November."

Old and new members are urged to attend. "Democrats and independents who realize the importance of the election of the Republican ticket are also welcomed," said Brennan.

The club hopes to remain active. Prospective members should remember that the Young Republicans support all Republican candidates.

University College Announces Enrollment At 1000 Students

University College officially opened the Fall Semester for Villanova University when more than 1000 Evening Session students started attending classes on campus on Monday, September 14. An additional 400 students, primarily in Humanities, Social Science and Education, attended their first Fall classes at Hallahan High School as University College's Saturday Session got under way on Saturday, September 19.

The great majority, 63 per cent of University College's Evening Session are residents of Delaware and Montgomery Counties, split about evenly between the two counties, according to a survey taken late last spring.

Their ages, ranging from 19 through 50, do not represent as much of a departure from the University average as the range would seem to indicate since the age group with the most sudents is 24 to 26 and 70 per cent are under 30.

Although University College is open to both men and women, only 12 per cent of the students are on the distaff side, a fact that is believed by their participation on the Student Council, Newsletter and other extra-curricular activities.

Nearly 60 per cent of the University College students are married, and 90 per cent of the wives (or husbands) favor their spouses getting an education at night. Of the remaining 10 per cent half are neutral but 5 per cent are bucking opposition at home!

On the academic side, and by their own estimates, a good third of the evening students spend two or more hours of study for every class hour.

University College, which also includes Extensions in several religious communities, is headed administratively by Dean Charles P. Bruderle and Associate Dean Frederick M. Burgess. The students receive academic counselling from advisors in the part-time division.

Grad Theatre Launches New Season With A Tribute To Shakespeare

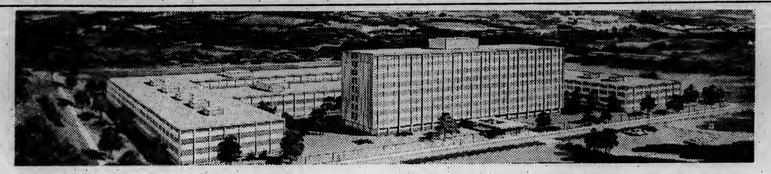
The final performance of Shakespeare on Shakespeare, the first production of the season at the Villanova University Playbox, will be presented Friday and Saturday, October 2 and 3 at 8:30 p.m.

The show, a tribute to Shakespeare's 400th anniversary year, is a collection of scenes, songs, and statements from the writings of the famous playwright. The Villanova production, directed by Thomas F. Nevins, is an attempt to present a realistic approach to Shakespeare himself as seen through his works.

The script, arranged by Richard A. Duprey, chairman of the University's Theatre Department, includes selections concerning life, love, foolery, and death from the tragedies, histories, and comedies.

Class Problem

Shakespeare on Shakespeare started as a classroom problem raised in discussion. After having seen Brecht on Brecht, the similarly-titled sampler of words and work from contemporary German playwright Bertolt Brecht, Duprey and several of his students wondered if the same sort of self-justification and self analysis could be gleaned from Shakespeare's works.



The more than thirty roles are played by six graduate students in theatre. James Mason, formerly an undergraduate student at Villanova, plays Romeo, Prince Hal, Timon of Athens, and does the Prologue for the Pyramus and Thisbe scene from Midsummer Night's Dream. Ed Weinheim does Hamlet's advice to the Players and Jacques' famous speech about the seven ages of man from As You Like It. Mitzie Smith, a graduate of Quincy College, plays Juliet and Beatrice and sings a number of the famous songs of Shapespeare including those of Lear's Fool. Others in the cast are Jack Black, Ed Hagan, and Carole Hodgson.

Modern French playwright Paul Claudel's drama Break of Noon opens at the Playbox on October 9 and will play on the 10, 11, 16, and 17.

The box office is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday. Reservations can be made by calling LA 5-4600, ext. 454.

Other plays scheduled by the Playbox this season are: Mother Courage by Bertold Brecht; Curse of the Craven Warrior by Jules Tasca; The Two Grenadiers by James Fox; Mr. Duprey's The Gargoyle; Bonaparte by William Long and Disorderly Conduct by June Dwyer.

Tickets are on sale at the Playbox located in the Classroom Annex at a subscription rate of $10 for a single admission and $17 a pair for general admission. Student subscription rates are $7.50 single and $13 a pair. Single tickets can also be purchased for each show.

THE National Security Agency
is a totally unique organization

. . . and offers creative research opportunities in the art and science of sophisticated communications

There is absolutely no other organization like it . . . no other organization doing the same important work, or offering the same wealth of opportunity for imaginative thinkers in the Liberal Arts, as well as the Physical and Engineering Sciences.

The National Security Agency is a major research arm of the Department of Defense, but its influence and responsibilities are far broader. It works closely with many industrial and research institutions; it has special access to scientific information at universities and other Government laboratories; and it enjoys close consulting arrangements with scientists of commanding stature. NSA staff members enjoy all the benefits of Federal employment without the requirements imposed by the Civil Service system.

What does NSA do that warrants this unique stature?

NSA approaches the subject of sophisticated communications from these original standpoints:

1. Creating secure communications systems and equipments unknown anywhere else, and devising special refinements for computers & edp systems that will increase our handling capabilities. This means that Communications Engineers, Computer Design Specialists, Mathematicians, Programmers, and Systems Analysts, all contribute to the design of antennas, transmitters, receivers, and terminal equipment . . . to experiments using new semiconductors, magnetic film, superconductive devices, etc., resulting in new logic circuits and memory units, better high-gain arrays for UHF radio systems, higher-capacity data handling terminal equipment, more effective speech band-width compression . . . and scores of similar advances.

2. By the very nature of "secure" communications, assuring the continuing invulnerability of U.S. communications through cryptologic procedures and techniques. Because cryptology and its cryptographic counterpart are not taught elsewhere, mathematicians, scientists—and all others with appropriate intellectual curiosity—will be taught this challenging new discipline right at NSA. Work in this field may involve specially-designed computers, television, computer-to-computer data links, and edp programming. (Even music, philosophy, or the classics may be useful prerequisites for cryptology!)

3. Translating written data, and presenting the crux of the material in meaningful form. This is the home of the linguistics expert and the languages graduate—enabling the talented graduate to make the most of his or her particular gift, and quickly expand familiarity with other tongues.

In all that NSA does, there is seldom any existing precedent. Only NSA pioneers in secure communications on this broad a scale, so only NSA offers the college graduate the best chance to make immediate use of his disciplined thinking . . . without years of post-graduate experience. All these features—together with its well-instrumented laboratories, libraries, and professional staff of specialists in amazingly varied fields—provide a stimulating academic atmosphere for individual accomplishment.

On-Campus Interviews for Mathematicians and Engineers will be held later. Consult your Placement Office for dates.

LIBERAL ARTS SENIORS: Your PQT Application must be mailed before November 27th

This is most important: To apply for an NSA position, all students EXCEPT Mathematicians, Engineers, and Physicists must take the PROFESSIONAL QUALIFICATION TEST scheduled for Saturday, December 12th. Stop in at your Placement Office and ask for the NSA Professional Qualification Test brochure . . . fill out and mail in the application card enclosed inside . . . and bring to the test the ticket you will receive by mail.

Even if you are not sure of your career interests yet, get the facts on NSA opportunities now.

NSA is located in expanding facilities at Fort George G. Meade, Maryland—halfway between Washington and Baltimore. It is handy to transportation facilities, the University of Maryland and Johns Hopkins, suburban or rural living (in-town living, too, now that the new circumferential highways are completed) . . . and the Chesapeake Bay resort region.

real raconteur, Mr. Untermeyer has made numerous television appearances and crossed swords with many traditions. American literature is most recently placed in his debt owing to his publication of "Letters of Robert Frost to Louis Untermeyer," a book which spans almost fifty years of a memorable and significant friendship. His book, "Modern American and British Poetry," has been adopted as a standard text in virtually all schools and colleges throughout the United States.

Spring Term

The following are scheduled for the Spring Term: "Disintegrated Liberalism in Foreign Policy" is the subject to be discussed by Dr. Russell Kirk on Monday, March 8. Dr. Kirk is one of the foremost intellectuals in America who writes extensively and speaks widely on conservative thought, educational theory, literary criticism and other themes. Dr. Woodrow Wilson Sayre who "perished rather than publish" at Tufts University last year will deliver a lecture illustrated with slides on Wednesday, April 7, "Four against Everest."

Admission is free to the general public. Lectures begin at 8:00 P.M., and are held in the Field House. A question period follows every lecture.

Handbook Additions Include New Rules For Excused Absences

The Rev. Joseph A. Flaherty OSA, Vice President for Academic Affairs, has announced additions have been made concerning excused absences for student activities. These additions are effective as of September 21. They follow pages 21 and 22 of the 1964-65 student handbook.

Moderators will not ask for excused absences for on-campus student activities. Field trips are to be approved beforehand by the Dean of the College involved, and after the trip the moderator is to present the names to the Office of Academic Affairs.

The Athletic Director will present names of members of Varsity teams who are absent because of trips, not practice. Excused absence cards will be sent to the Secretary of the Athletic Department from whom the students must collect them.

Trips by other groups representing the University must be approved by the Dean of Extra-curricular Activities. Names of those making the trip are to be submitted to the moderator and excused absence cards will be issued to students in the Office of Student Affairs.

Finally, extraordinary cases not covered by the preceding regulations will be judged on an individual basis by the Dean of Extra-curricular Activities.

Lynx Opens Drive For Contributions To Next Publication

The Lynx, Villanova's literary magazine, has announced the opening of a drive for undergraduate co-operation in submitting material which can be published in the forthcoming edition. The publication serves as an organ of literary communication for the student.

Those who join the Lynx will benefit from the association and the criticism of fellow members and advisors, as well as an outlet for their intellectual endeavors.

Last year a student-poet writing for the Lynx received the Madeleva Medal of the Catholic Poetry Society, thus making Villanova the first college to receive the award for two consecutive seasons. As in past years the magazine plans to interview notable literary figures. Playwright Edward Albee will be interviewed this year.

The editors urge all students, especially freshmen, to contribute their literary efforts to the Lynx. There will be an announcement about openings on the staff in the near future. All those interested should attend the introductory meeting.

Material may be submitted to either the Lynx office in the Student Publications Department of Corr Hall or 210 St. Rita's Hall.

The Great Choke

by Steve Freind

An apple, according to Webster, is a fleshy, usually round, red or yellow edible fruit. It has been said that Adam and Eve were banished from the Garden of Eden for partaking of this fruit. It has also been said, with equal justification, that the Phillies lost a pennant by choking on one.

Two weeks ago, Gene Mauch's charges were the toast of the sporting set, basking in the limelight that comes when you're seven and a half games in front of the National League race. Phillie fans were lining up for World Series ducats and Gene Mauch was being boomed for (a) the Hall of Fame (b) the presidency and (c) canonization. The Phils merely had to play average ball the remainder of the shrinking season to set off the greatest display of pandemonium viewed in the City of Brotherly Love since the North Philadelphia riot.

The Phils took their good fortune in stride. In Houston, the Mauchmen frolicked away their leisure hours with toy revolvers, which prompted one astute Bulletin scribe to remark that the Phils were oblivious to pressure. This statement has to go down for posterity along with such gems as the earth is flat, Hitler desirespeaceand Listen has gone straight. Besides the sound of obstructed breathing, the Houston pop revolvers were the only noises heard from our heroes since the great giveaway began.

Gulp

Within the space of ten days, the Phils dropped from their lofty position into third place, one and a half games behind the front running Cincinatti Reds. It wasn't easy to do. They had to lose eight in a row to accomplish this dubious feat, but they rose to the occasion. Gene Mauch assumed a nochalant air. "I'm not the least bit worried," quoted the boy Napoleon, but his tears gave him away. With Mauch understandably perturbed, the Phils decided to wear dungarees while eating in the locker room. Wes Covington, experienced in the ways of his manager's table kicking, initiated the motion. It really didn't matter, though. The Phils can't seem to swallow anything these days.

It all began when Philadelphia's pride dropped three in a row to the Reds. When Chico Ruiz stole home in the opener, the hadwriting was on the wall. After the Reds sweep, the Phils really hit their stride. Milwaukee flew into town and the Phils' flag hopes flew out the window as the Braves tagged their limp opponents for 60 hits and four more losses. Mauch, even the thinker, sent out a frantic request for either (a) Sandy Koufax (b) oxygen tanks or (c) a Christian burial next week.

Johnny Callison, who along with Richie Allen is one of the few Phils to suffer from a tightened larynx, blasted his teammates for their complacent attitude. He claims that they were spending their Series money two weeks ago. Goldwater would frown on such deficit spending.

The death march continues against the Cards. It would take a major miracle for the Phils to salvage the flag that came so close to flying at Connie Mack Stadium. It's tragic to see them falter now after leading most of the season but champions are made in the stretch and the Phils just didn't measure up to the standards.

It's going to be a long winter for Gene Mauch and his dejected scramblers. Six months is a long time to brood over vanished hopes and broken dreams.

Wildcats Boast Speedy Backfield Strong Line For '64 Campaign

by Steve Freind

Boasting a powerful line and an unusually fast backfield, the 1964 edition of Villanova's grid Wildcats could provide Coach Alex Bell with one of his finest teams. "We should have a pretty good ball club this year," Bell said. "If we play up to our ability, we could improve on last year's record."

Last season, in what was supposed to be a rebuilding year, the 'Cats posted a surprising 5-4 log.

Leading the 16 returning lettermen from last year's squad is All-American candidate Al Atkinson, a 6-2 230 lb. tackle whom Bell rates as the best he has ever coached. "He puts out all the time. He's quick, smart and aggressive. If we had eleven Atkinsons, we'd be quite a team." Bell said. Sharing Co-captain duties with Atkinson is 6-0, 200 lb. John McDonnell, whose rugged line play also drew praise from Bell.

Ends

Emmett Michaels, a 6-2, 215 lb. senior will man the other end of the line, with help from 6-1, 200 lb. sophomore Paul Sodaski. A big question mark is the condition of John Kelleher's knee which was operated on last spring. Kelleher, a 6-3, 180 lb. pass catching ace, will give the 'Cats an added scoring punch if his knee holds up. Bell also figured on soph Tom Flandera to see action in his end corps, but the 6-1, 185 pounder was side lined for the entire campaign with a pre-season back injury.

Battling for the other tackle berth will be Tom Smith, a 6-3, 240 lb. senior and junior Harry Walter, 6-1, 220 lbs. Soph John Fry will also see action. Leading performer among the guards is 6-2, 230 lb. Mike Strofolino, a rugged senior whom Bell rates along with Atkinson and McDonnell as his best linemen. Jack McDonald, a 5-10, 220 lb. senior will start opposite Strofolino. Defense ace Bill Quigley, 6-1, 225 lbs., will see plenty of action at a linebacker slot.

Quarterback Battle

Starting center will be Roger Agin, a 5-10, 215 lb. junior, backed up by 5-10, 200 lb. senior Chappy Moore. The quarterback spot proves to be a real battle between starter Dave Connell and sophs Bill Andrejko and Rich Green. Connell, a 6-2, 195 lb. junior, has the edge in game experience and ball handling finesse, but his passing needs improvement. "He's improved over last year, but his passing still needs work," Bell commented.

Bell rates 5-11, 175 lb. Andrejko as the team's best passer and feels that Green, a 6-0, 185 pounder, is the top running quarterback. Both are expected to push Connell. Sharing halfback chores will be junior Joe Santomauro, a 5-9. 185 lb. speedster and 5-10, 180 lb. senior Dick Sernyak. Sernyak, while not as fast as Santomauro, is one of the hardest runners on the team and never stops hustling. Santomauro is the team's most dangerous open field runner. Sophomore John Kolmer, a 5-10, 190 lb. soph, also promises to be a top performer.

Fullback duties will be handled by Tom Brown, a 5-9, 195 lb. junior. While lacking the size of past 'Cats fullbacks, Brown is by far the fastest back in that position in years. Sernyak and Santomauro also present a switch from the big back offense of past Bell squads, but along with Brown, they form the swiftest Villanova backfield in years. Because of this, Bell says the 'Cats will employ a more wide open attack than in previous campaigns.

While remaining cautious, Bell feels that this squad could go a long way. Just how far remains to be seen.

Villanova Harriers Base '64 Success On Returning Stars

by Bob McIntyre

Villanova's usually powerful cross-country team will have to work extra hard this year to produce the champions of the past.

Returnees

Returning this year is number two man Dave Hyland who should be able to fill the shoes of All-American and Olympic-bound Vic Zwolak who graduated last year. Behind him will be Tommy Sullivan and Marty Ferko. They could have their problems this year, however, trying to strengthen the top five, because of their Pre-med schedules.

Coach Tuppeny is looking to Jimmy Orr and Bobby Cubbins, former Roman Catholic, star for the much needed help.

Meets

The Cats open up against a strong St. Joe's College team on October 10 followed by the ever-powerful Quantico team on Oct. 17.

Villanova is also pointing to the two favorites of the IC4A's, Georgetown and Notre Dame on November 16.

Intramural Season Opens With Varied Sports Activities

by Buzz Langan

The 1964 fall Intramural Athletic Program officially opened September 25. Touch football got under way with five leagues composed of fifty teams.

The singles and doubles Hand Ball League will begin in October. New courts have been added and entry blanks may be obtained at the Intramural Office which is located in Alumni Gym.

Those interested in cross country can report to the Stadium October 8 the day of the meet. Applicants should be there promptly at 4:30. No prior applications are needed. A member of the Varsity track team will take the contestants once around the campus.

The Intramural Officials Association has twelve new applicants and if any freshmen wish to apply they may do so at the Intramural Office.

Plans are in full swing for the 1964 Homecoming which will be held the weekend of October 10 with the football game against Detroit University.

The Intramural Committee has decided to concentrate on the Float decorations and to eliminate the hall decorations. This will permit classes, fraternities, organizations and qualified dormitories to participate.

Float at Halftime

In this manner the spectators at the homecoming game can see the spirit of Villanova by the parade of floats at halftime. Last year's dorm winner was Sullivan Hall whose theme was "Shooting the Bull at Old V.U." and the winning float was Lamda Kappa Delta fraternity with "Saint Mother Goose."

Award of the Old 84 Football Helmet will be made to the winning float contestant.

The events are under the direction of Edward P. Geisz of the Intramural Office and John Barrow class of '65.

VMI Preview

by Jerry Bruderle

Coach John McKenna will bring a fast but inexperienced team to Villanova on Saturday to face the Wildcats in the first home game of the season. The Keydets had their first losing season last year in seven years and the rebuilding is still underway.

As usual V.M.I. will have small swift backs to lead the attack but the lack of beef in their line will cripple their efficiency. Halfbacks Donnie White and Mike Patterson run the ends well but tip the scales at only 160 pounds each. Fullback Grannie Amos also has speed to burn as witnessed by his 98 yard run from scrimmage against William and Mary.

The Keydets have big, agile ends who may give Villanova trouble but their effectiveness is reduced since quarterback Charlie Snead is not yet a first rate signal caller. If Snead could pass like his brother Norm, who quarterbacks the Philadelphia Eagles, V.M.I. would be extremely dangerous. However, it appears that if Villanova can contain the end sweeps, the Keydets' offense will be at the mercy of the bigger and more experienced Villanova line.

Two Losses

V.M.I. arrives with a winless record after two close losses to only so-so opposition. They dropped their opener to William and Mary by a matter of extra points, 14-12. To give you an idea of what this means, William and Mary lost to Navy on Saturday 35-6, even though Roger Staubach sat out most of the game.

This past Saturday, V.M.I. lost 20-14 to Richmond a fellow also-ran in the Southern Conference.

All American

by Rusty Miller

The man of the hour on the Villanova gridiron this season is one Al Atkinson. If anyone out on the field is behind the eight-ball, it is Mr. Atkinson. Al has been hailed from all sides as "Villanova's candidate for All-American." So, every time Al sets foot on the field, coaches, reporters and fans alike expect great things from him — funny thing, they're never disappointed. That's why he has started every game of his career.

Coach Alex Bell feels Al is without a doubt, "one of the best, if not the best, player he has ever coached. Like John McDonnell, he gives you 100% all the time, even if he doesn't feel up to par." Bell never ceases to extol Al's praises. Though an excitable Bell sometimes leaves his lungs on the field, its never with Al that he's left them.

Al never ceases to amaze even his teammates. "Did you see Atkinson tonight? That guy's fantastic! He's all over the place!" commented one soph on the bus to the Toledo airport. Last year Al made several All-East squads as well as being All State.

Like many great athletes, Al is quiet and shy. Unless he knows you, you'll never know he's around. He is without a doubt one of the nicest guys on the team. Of his teammates Al commands not only their friendship but also their respect. The title of co-captain is far from being a nominal one.

A senior from Upper Darby, Pa., Al looms at 6-2, 230 lbs. Before coming to V.U. he played on the locally famous Monsignor Bonnor High City Championship team along with three of his teammates.

Rated by one mid-west newspaper this summer as the best tackle in the country, several pro teams have shone enthusiasm over Al, and his coaches feel he would make a solid pro player. Though he is perhaps to small to be a pro tackle, the pro scouts feel his speed and manuverability should be perfect for a linebacker's spot.

Al Atkinson

Last year because of a lack of depth Al was forced to play almost 60 minutes a game and this year coach Bell had hoped to avoid the same circumstances. As of yet, what depth we have, although very promising, is inexperienced. So, it looks like Al will have to reassume his "iron man" role.

We can only say to the Wildcats' "candidate for All-American", "the man behind the eight-ball", good luck.

Sixteen Lettermen Boosts 'Cats Hopes For Rugby Campaign

by Al Lupcho

Sixteen lettermen are back to form the heart of Villanova's Rugby team. The club will begin its sixth season of competition with an atmosphere of great enthusiasm.

An experienced line composed of nine letterman, is back to insure a solid front wall. These unsong heros, who don't usually make the headlines include: Ross O'Donaghue, Dennis LaHiff, Bill Blavelt, Kevin Fidgeon, Brian Carty, Rich Ward, George Tongring, Haller LaRue, and Ed Brenan. Newcomers to the team, Bob Dowling and Bill Green are rapidly proving themselves capable and should help the team later on in the season.

The backfield is also loaded with seven returning lettermen. Larry Rozentosky, Jim McCusker, Burt Lombino, Jim Brandt, Vic Sarkissian, Leo Campbell, and Jim Campbell are all proven and experienced players.

The club is being run by Captain Dick Grove and when asked about the coming season, Dick replied: "If everyone comes through the way they have in practice, we should have a successful season for both fans and players. We hope and look forward to improving upon last season's 6-5 record and with a little luck, we could go undeated."

Freindly Foolishness

Villains Still On Top

by Steve Freind

Leave it to the New York Yankees to spoil the perfect plot. Their patented September streth run for the American League flag ruined aproduction that their CBS sponsors could never match. The stage was set and the show was receiving higher Nielson rating that Ed Sullivan. Baltimore's youthful Orioles were on the vege of the greatest rags-to-riches story since Horatio Alger.

Birds Surprise

Relegated to the second division in pre-season forecasts, the Chesepeake Bay boys jumped into the top spot at the season's outset. This didn't exactly rock tht sporting world, but when the Birds refused to fold by late August, Yank-hating fans across the country rallied to the Baltimore cause. At last the New York empire was crumbling and the American League race ceased tobe a game of follow the leader.

Following the revered American tradition of worshipping the underdog, the national audience toasted the Birds as liberators, breaking the chains of Yankee domination. It was like Lancelot resuing the maiden, Bobby Kennedy convicting Hoffa or Cybil Burton topping Liz. Names like Boog Powell, Wally Bunker anr Yank reject Robin Roberts became house-holdwords and Brooks Robinson became the most popular citizen south of the Mason-Dixonline since Russ Barnett.

Yanks Off Form

The Yanks contributed to the cause by playing their worst ball since 1959, when they finshed a poor third. With the exception of Mickey Mantle, the usually powerful Bomber bats were silent, and the Mick, hampered by his legendary bad legs, spendt a large portion of the campaign on the bench. The pitching staff was little better. Whiety Ford, the ace of the Bomber squad was hampered by a hip injury, Jim Bouton was having control problems andA l Downing could not recapture his 1963 form.

As usual with a slumping team, dissension hit the Bombers. When Manager Yogi Berra started swinigg at harmonicas instead of fun goes, Oriole fans lined up for World Series tickets.

Time Chances

And then, with the curtain about to drop, the Yanks spoiled the grand finale. With the chipson the table and the scent of World Series greenbacks in the air, the September offensive began. Mantle, sparing his aching pins by movingto right field, unleashed a home run barrage, and the bats Joe Pepitone,Roger Maris and Elston Howard were heard from again. As in the last 15 years. the Bombers looked to Ford to lead the mound chores and their great stopper crawled off the training table to turn in a typicalclut ch performance.

The Orioles, young and vulnerable to the pressures of a pennant fight, felt the noose begin to tighten. The breath of Yanks became hotter on their backs and each time they looked behind all that was visible was a mass of pinstripes. In one quick thrust, the race was over and Berra wore the largest smile since Yoo Hoo stock jumper four points. It was like the maiden turning down Lancelot for the Black Knight, Hoffa being acquitted on a hung jury or Liz and Dickie bolting Rome together in search of marital bliss in Mexico.

The show has one last chance for a happy ending when the Yanks take on Gene Mauch's boy wonders in the October Classic. Somehow, though, the feeling prevails that when the series dust clears, Horatio Alger will have struck out again.

Editor's note — This article was written while the Phils were still five and a half games in first place. The author did not figure on the greatest choke since the Boston strangler.

'Cats Rout Holy Cross, 32-0 Connell Stars In Second Win

by Steve Freind

The pre-season scouting report on Dave Connell read something like this: "Fine runner and play caller; has ball handling finesse and valuable game experience; passing needs improvement." After his performance against Holy Cross on Saturday, you can scratch out the last phrase.

All Connell did in Villanova's second straight victory was score one touchdown, pass for another while completing six out of ten aerials for 125 yards, intercept three Crusader passes and flawlessly direct the 'Cats to a surprisingly easy 32-0 triumph.

Shaky Start

The 'Cats got off to a shaky start when the Crusaders marched to the 25 yard line after recovering a Villanova fumble on the opening kickoff. John McDonnell ended the drive by pilfering a Holy Cross pass and Holy Cross had mounted its last threat.

Minutes later, the 'Cats were on the board with their first score. Dick Sernyak recovered a Holy Cross fumble on the Crusader 22 and two plays later Connell completed the first V.U. pass of the year to Emmett Michaels for 16 yards and a touchdown.

Connell Again

When it appeared that the 'Cats would have to settle for a 7-0 halftime advantage, Connell went to work again. With three minutes left in the second stanza, he uncorked a 49 yard bomb to John Kelleher and the glue-fingered end hauled it in at the Holy Cross seven. After two plunges, Connell snuck across from the one. Jim Case added his second conversion to make it 14-0.

Sixty-four seconds later, the 'Cats tallied again. Connell set the stage by snaring a stray Crusader pass and returning 24 yards to the Holy Cross twenty. With the entire defense expecting a pass, Connell handed off to Joe Santomauro on a deep reverse and the junior speedster, sprung loose by Roger Agin's crushing block, scampered in for the score. Case again converted and the 'Cats took a 21-0 lead to the locker room.

Villanova added four more points in the third quarter on two safeties. Tackle Jerry Strid accounted for the first deuce blocking a Crusader punt in the end zone. After a Villanova drive stalled on the Holy Cross four, Crusader quarterback Joe Cunnion fumbled in his end zone while rolling out. Cunnion recovered, but the 'Cats had two more points.

Two sophomores accounted for the final marker as Jerry Bellotti hit George Piper with a 19 yard touchdown strike late in the fourth quarter. Case added his fourth conversion to round out the day's scoring.

Strong Defense

While Villanova's strong passing attack came as a surprise, the Wildcat defense was the same old story. Time and again, the 'Cats defensive line, spearheaded by All-Ameican candidate Al Atkinson, stifled the Holy Cross ground game, which accounted for only 41 yards. The line also pressured the Crusaders' inexperienced quarterbacks into firing six interceptions while completing only nine of thirty-two aerials.

Wildcats Topple Toledo 22-6; Ground Game Overpowers Foe

by Rusty Miller

The '64 grid opener against Todelo gave a good insight into both the strong and weak points of the Cat's eleven. Nothing really surpr'sing happened, but some players performed better than expected and some didn't quite come up to par.

Good Defense

On defense the Cats did exceptionally well allowing only 94 yards on the ground as opposed to 194 for V.U. Senior end Emmett Michaels came through with an interception to halt one Toledo drive and turn it into a touchdown for the 'Cats.

In general the Rockets offense was masterfully handled by a strong, experienced, and now proven Villanova defense. Co-captains Al Atk'nson and John McDonnell played excellent ball — no one doubted that they would. Senior guard, Mike Strofolino, who had played well in the past, showed the benefit of experience and played the best game of his career. A fired-up Strof had 10 tackles and was in on several more.

Grind-It-Out Offense

On offense the team played an unexpected slow grind-it-out game similar to the '61 and '62 seasons. With the backfield composed of: senior, Dick Sernyak, a good hard runner, junior, Joe Santomauro, a fast, elus've back, and Tom Brown a halfback converted to fullback, the Cats were expected to jive with a fast break-away offense.

The reasons — Joe Santomauro was constantly and effectively stopped by the right side of the Toledo defense who broke through to nail him every time. On the other hand the trio of Atkinson, McDonnell and Strofolino opened up barn-sized holes on the opposite side for Brown and Sernyak. So, rather than chance sweep plays, the holes opened by the line were util'zed to the fullest. Tom did a fine job of finding the daylight, pick-up 80 yards on 13 carries. Dick had 49 yards on 17 carries.

Sophs

Several sophomores turned in good performances in their relief roles. Lou Morda did a commendable job filling in for Strofolino. Tony Ferra'nolo scored the Cat's third touchdown. John Kolmer showed good running strength in the halfback slot. All in all the Cats looked good and showed the potential to do better.

SGA Holds First Meeting; Mock Election Scheduled

The Student Government Association of Villanova held its first session of the academic year last Wednesday in the cast lounge of Dougherty Hall. Opening remarks to the body were made by the Dean of Student Activties, Rev. Richard Appicci

He advised the SGA members that they were the spirit of Villanova and he urged the members to continue the activity of the past several years.

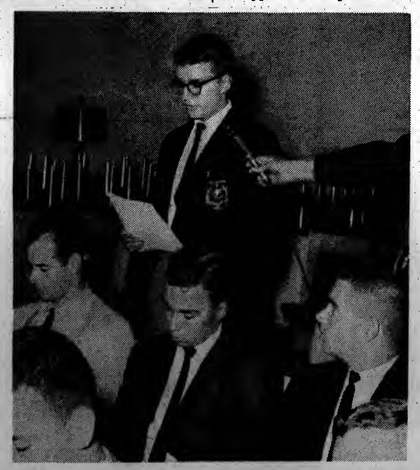
Chairman Tom Furst, announced that the Reverend John J. Klekotka, President of the University had received a letter from President Lyndon B. Johnson, inviting the chairman of the student body to attend a reception at the White House on Saturday October 3.

Dignitaries and outstanding leaders of the nation were to be in attendance including UN Representative Adlai Stevenson, and cabinet members Robert McNamara and Willard Wirtz.

Tom Furst, who attended representing Villanova, was among "a group of student leaders from representative colleges and universities throughout the nation.

Four motions were considered by the new Congress. Three were passed unanimously and the fourth was tabled.

A motion introduced by Dave Moore provides that the SGA supervise a presidential preference election among the student body to be under the co-sponsorship of the Villanovan and other campus political groups. The motion passed unanimously and was sent to the committee for academic affairs implementation.



Another motion which passed unanimously was a proposal that the SGA investigate the concept of establishing a used book exchange to operate at the beginning and end of each semester. Dave Moore, the maker of the motion, explained that the system would have a catalogue of available books and the owner 's name.

A third motion to facilitate business of the Alumni Association was introduced by Charlie Zaccaria, Alumni Representative. The proposal provides that the four senior class officers be considered permanent officers of their respective classes for the purpose of assisting in Alumni Affairs.

The final motion, involving a fund-raising drive for the Kennedy Memorial Library, was tabled at the request of Steve Friend, the maker of the motion because a difficulty arose over the wording of the motion and the means of raising contributions.

Prior to adjournment, the Congress moved into the committee of the whole to discuss the possibilty of procuring a number of area printers to fill the needs of all campus organizations.

Chairman Furst explained that in the past several organizations have had difficulty with inferior workmanship. The Congress approved a letter to be sent to printers requesting price data and type of work performed.

Brian Banmiller, soph orientation committee chairman, makes his reports on Orientation before the first meeting of the Student Government Association held last Wednesday evening.

Drama And Tragedy 'Break Of Noon' Opens At Villanova Playbox

French playwright Paul Claudel's Break of Noon (Partage de Midi) opens at the Villanova University Playbox on Friday, October 9 and will run October 10-11, and October 16-17.

Break of Noon described as perhaps the most awesome of Claudel's dramas and the closest to pure tragedy, is constructed around the metaphysics of adultery and the spiritual struggle between the Creator and the creature.

Barrault Production

The play, a poetic symbolic drama written in the early 1900's, was adapted to the present version in 1948 for its production by Jean-Louis Barrault. In Break of Noon, Claudel is concerned primarily with the meaning of love, and especially with the role of woman in the experience of love.

The cast includes one woman Yse, her husband, and her two lovers. The action of the play derives from Yse's search, through her relationships with these men, for personal fulfillment that will bring stability and meaning to her life.

New Director

The role of Yse is played by Maria Parrish from Wayne, Pennsylvania. Ed Weinheim of Secane plays her husband, De Ciz. Lee Brooks of Bryn Mawr, who is making his debut with the Villanova Playbox, and Dennis Ciesil of Phoenixville, are cast as the lovers Amalric and Mesa. The production is directed by Jackson G. Barry, a new member of the Theatre Department faculty, and designed by Thomas F. Nevins, instructor in theatre and Playbox technical director.

Performances begin at 8:30 p.m. Reservations can be made by calling the Villanova Playbox (LA 5-4600, ext. 454) from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday. Tickets are priced at $1.25 for students, and $2 for general admission.

Junior Class Rings To Be Distributed In Dougherty Lounge

Junior Class rings will be distributed to all those who ordered them last spring in the Center Lounge of Dougherty Hall tomorrow and Friday, October 8 and 9 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. each day. Re-orders for all those wishing to do so and for those who did not order last spring will also be taken at that time. New and re-orders placed now will be delivered in mid-January.

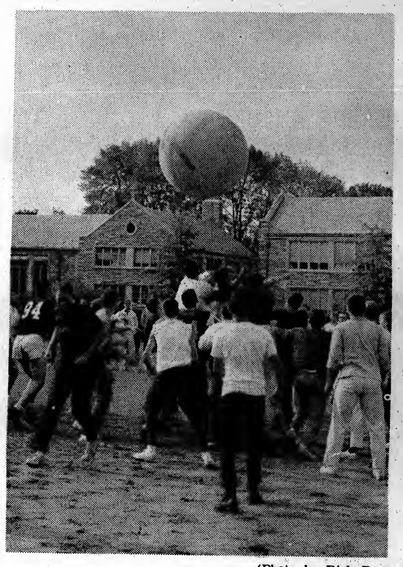
Frank Eck, President of the Class of '66, also announced plans are being made for a Junior Class Ring Mass and Communion Breakfast to be held probably on October 18. Final plans for the event will be presented within the next few days. The Class party will be on Friday, Nov. 6.

Controversial Speaker Ryan Questions Faith, Education

by Thomas Sproul

The Villanova Forum aroused great expectations of a successful year when they opened their fall lecture series on the first day of the school year.

This early start, along with the prominent guest speaker, Dr. Mortimer Adler, gave promise of an interesting and rewarding series throughout the year. The Forum has remained ambitious from the start and, before the close of the first school month, is presenting its second lecturer, Mary Perkins Ryan. This discussion also will be held in the Field House. The time set is Thursday, October 15, at 8 p.m.



Experience

For this lecture, the Forum will introduce a prominent authority on Catholic education, Mary Perkins Ryan. Mrs. Ryan besides being the mother of five children, has a lifetime career in Catholic education to which she may refer. Mrs. Ryan has authored many books, written articles for a number of periodicals, and is currently the editor of a quarterly journal on catechetics.

Topic

For her topic Mrs. Ryan plans to discuss her book: Are Parochial Schools the Answer? One of the beliefs she maintains in this book is the much-needed effort for a better unification of the faithful. For this purpose, the author sets up the objectives of the Second Vatican Council as a guide.

She considers the past methods used to accomplish Christian unity among the faithful and she elaborates on the current methods to achieve this unification. Involved in these current methods is the importance of Catholic education.

VU Band Promises Better Performances Precision This Year

TheVillanova Band has opened its season with a crash of cymbals and a blare of brass. The all-new band has extra class and precision this year and promises even better performances than in the past. The drum section has developed a style of its own which adds prestige to the flashy group.

Along with their new director, Mr. C. Dudley Lowden, and their moderator, Rev. Edward C. Doherty, OSA, the band staff has scheduled several events which will highlight the year.

On October 31, Parents' Day, they have scheduled an extravaganza of high school bands. These various bands will be the guests of the Villanova Band, and they will put on a thrilling, colorful half-time show, for which they will be provided with refreshments and entertainment.

The band will travel to Buffalo, N.Y. on November 20 in order to play at the half-time of our last season game. This trip, as well as other area tours promises to be enjoyable and advantageous to all band members.

Anyone who is interested in joining this worthy organization is asked to contact one of the officers at the Villanova Band office in the Classroom Annex.

Council, Steering Committee, Guide Junior Class Of 1966

The Junior Class Council will function more effectively this year with the help, suggestions and criticisms of the members of the class. They hope that enthusiasm will characterize the attitude of the Class members, that apathy will not have a chance to exist.

The Junior Class Steering Committee has already been formed. It is a cross-section of our class, formed with the intent of shaping a body truly representative of all interest groups within the class. The committee will be looked to frequently for opinion this year, and its ideas and suggestions will be given a hearing. It is felt that many of its ideas will be adopted and channeled into action because of the calibre of its membership.

Promise

The Steering Committee will work this year. It will function. Its members will be compelled to work, to "put out," or they will be asked to resign their membership from the body.

They hope that active participation in class endeavors will become a matter of personal commitment and responsibility on the part of each and every Junior. Class members are urged to use the two means whereby suggestions will be brought to the attention of the Class Council:

1. A suggestion box will be placed on the second floor of Dougherty Hall, and will be checked on a regular basis.

2. A Post Office box, number 971, will be used so that suggestions may be brought to the president. Any mail forwarded to this box will be read immediately and acted upon without immediate attention of your delay.

Asked To Act

Also, class members are asked not only to voice opinion, but to act. The success or failure attached to this year's projects will be contingent upon the amount of energy expended by Juniors. Help is welcome. It is needed. No one need ever hesitate to offer his help for fear of being turned away.

Knights Name New Officers; Win State, National Awards

by Al Lupcho

Villanova's Chapter of the Knights of Columbus placed first in the total number and percentage increase of new members among all Universities and Colleges in the Country. This is a great honor to be bestowed upon a Catholic lay-organization from a Catholic men's school.

Other honors awarded the Knights include: fourth in the nation of total new members from any one council, and first in Pennsylvaia for high percentage of new members from any council.

This year proves to be another promising one for the four hundred and ten members of an organization in its sixth year of existence. Led by Grand Knight, Chris Fisher, the Knights will try to live true to its motto of "Charity, Unity, Fraternity, and Patriotism."

Officers

Some of the officers are: Deputy Grand Knight, James Brunt; Warden, Dennis LaHiff; Treasurer, Pete Schultz; Recorder, Ward Williams; Inside Guard, Stephen Witham; Chancellor, Thomas Brennan. Among the others are: Advocate, Thomas Keegan; Outside Guards, Alfred Caponiti and Paul Stolburg, and Financial Secretary, Thomas Luebking. The Trustees include: Fr. John O'Rourke, O.S.A.; Fr. Marshall Halphen, O.S.A., and Kenneth Resinski. The Chaplain is Fr. George Lawless, O.S.A.

The Chairmen of the Six Point Committee are: Council Activity, Bob Keating; Fraternal Activity, Dick Brant; Membership-Insurance, Lou Stengel; Public Relations, Brian Kiupar; Youth Activity, Phil Mino; and Catholic Activity, Al Lupcho.

The Council is currently incresing its membership and the First and Second Degrees are scheduled for October, 27 and November 17 respectively. The tentative date for the third degree is December 6 and this degree is to be preceded by a Communion Breakfast for all members.

Activities

Social Activities include an annual Homecoming party on October 10 and a possible picnic during the second semester. This year a new district council has been formed and has become joined with the St. Joseph Council. This is one of only thirty-three such Catholic Councils in the United States and the relationship is to be both religious and social in so much as they will be competing in various intramural sports and joining in various religious activities.

All candidates wishing to join may visit the Belle Air Office in the basement of Vasey Hall for more Information.

Political Union's Members Debate International Issue

The Villanova Political Union begins its third year this semester with its first debate on Monday, October 12th at 7:30 p.m., probably in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall. The speaker has yet to be announced.

The union members not only listen to guest speakers, but debate with them on current, national and international issues. The topic for a debate is phrased in the form of a resolutios, e.g. "Resolved, that this House Favors Medical Aid for the Oppressed Viet Cong."

Speakers

The invited guest speaks for a half-hour pro or con the resolution. Then, the three parties: Liberal, Moderate and Conservative each send three prepared speakers to the podium. Following these nine prepared speeches the floor is open to all members of the House (Union) for rebuttals.

Rebuttals are limited to two minutes each, after which the guest closes debate with a short summation of his arguments. Finally, a roll call vote is taken of the members and the outcome of the resolution is decided.

Questions

In addition to speeches the members of the Union are allowed to ask questions of opposing student speakers. This device promotes interest among the members.

Committees

All Union members are urged to speak at least once during the year. But there are many other activities to engage the members' interest and talents. Members may join various committees dealing with research, publicity and hospitality. Also, they may work on the staff of Politico, the Union opinion magazine. Any member may submit his views for publication in Politico.

Parties caucus to plan and prepare for upcoming debates. Last year the Union ran a mock Republican primary in Dougherty Hall which drew the Philadelphia newspapers and television.

Prospective speakers for this year include Richard Nixon, Senator Jacob Javits and Congressman William Green of Philadelphia. Applications may be obtained from Bob McKelvie, 215 Sullivan Hall.

Literary Society To Discuss O'Neill At Initial Meeting

President Tom Krause of the Villanova Literary Society has announced that the Society's first meeting will be held on Thursday, October 8, 1964 at 10:30 a.m. A slight mixup in the scheduling of rooms caused the proposed first meeting to be disrupted; however, Krause has promised that this gathering will take place in 207 Tolentine on Thursday at the scheduled time.

Members who attend will be treated to a consideration of the life of Eugene O'Neill, the famous playwright. Slides dealing with his life and commentary on his play, A Long Day's Journey Into Night, will be combined to create an entity called "A Long Life's Journey Into Greatness." Leading the discussion will be the triumvirate of Bill Byrne, Stan Zaleski, and Dave Roberts.

Future speakers and literary discussions, a forthcoming sysposium, and general business will also be discussed at this meeting. Anyone interesed in literature is invited to attend. Old and new members are encouraged to attend in order to help formulate the society's goals and projects for the coming year.

Villanova Students Begin Clerical Study At New York, Phila.

Arthur Chappell valedictorian of the class of 1964 is one of ten Villanova students who recently began studies for the priesthood. Chappell and five other Villanovans were among thirty-eight men received as novices into the Order of St. Augustine in a ceremony that took place in the Chapel of St. Mary's Hall on September 9.

Others

The others are: John Brady, '61, who had been serving as a lieutenant in the Marine Corps for the past three years; Richard Ekmann, who recently received his master's degree in History from Villanova; George McKeon, '64; Gerald Dobbin, '67; and Richard Harkins, '67.

As novices they will now spend one year at Good Counsel Novitiate, New Hamburg, N.Y. At the conclusion of the year each will take the vows of poverty, chastity and obedience. They will then return to Villanova to finish their philosophical studies before going to Washington, D. C., to commence four years of theological training.

More

Two other Villanovans entered the Augustinian Preparatory Seminary, Staten Island, New York. They are: Daniel McLaughlin, '66, and Maurice McCarthy, '65.

Michael A. Contino, '67, has entered St. Charles Seminary, Overbrook, Pennsylvania and Ronald M. Kuboski, '67, has begun studies at St. Mary's Seminary, Orchard Lake, Michigan.

Letters

As will certainly be the case with many other newspapers the world over The Villanovan will take a stand in this fall's presidential and senatorial campaigns. Because of the varied emotions and opinions the presidential combatants have engendered, our editorials and features will not be palatable to all of our readers, but then again, they are not meant to be.

In some instances the positions we assume may seem so far-fetched to you that your feelings may reach the boiling point. Well, don't just sit there and secthe, do something about it.

You may be diametrically opposed to some of our writings, but the only way we and the rest of the University can be aware of your discontent is writing a letter to the editor.

The only way your feelings can be made known throughout the campus is through a letter to the editor of The Villanovan. The small cost to you can be measured in the time and effort expended to write your letter and, if you are unwilling to pay this, don't write.

But do not confine your letters to politics. Feel free to discuss any timely or untimely aspect of campus life. Letters to the editor is your only open forum to Villanova — use it.

LEO GOODREAU

Lyndon's Two Faces

by Jim Brennan

If one observes a certain man who now sits in the White House, it would seem that this individual can speak out of both sides of his mouth at the same time. The two-faced aspect of this man that is particularly interesting is his voting record on civil rights.

In 1937 and 1940 the present leader of our nation who was then a representative of his state, voted against an anti-lynching bill. He voted against an anti-poll tax bill in 1942, 1947 and 1948.

During 1949, as a member of the Senate,he voted against an anti-segregation amendment to a Federal aid-to-education bill.

He voted to send a Civil Rights Bill to the Senate Judiciary Committee, dominated by Senator James O. Eastland. Had this succeeded, the Civil Rights Act of 1957 probably would never have been enacted.

During 1957 he also voted to eliminate Title III from the Civil Rights Act. This title gave the attorney gerenal he right to intervene in civil rights suits.

In 1960 he again voted against Title III in the 1960 Civil Rights Bill and on April 1 of that year, he voted against an amedment to establish a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission. During this time he also voted negatively on an amendment providing for technical assistance to areas desegregating their schools.

This man has said — and it was reported in the Capital Times of Madison, Wisconsin: "I am not now and never have been an advocate of civil rights. I don't think I ever will be."

Has this man now become an advocate of civil rights or has he assumed an advantageous political position? Because of his voting record, the latter opinion holds more credence. It is sad to see that our leader speaks with a "Forked tongue."

A Defense Of Conservatism

Paul Fannin, Republican Governor of Arizona, is said to be one of the great defenders of American Conservatism. If this is the case his article in the Villanovan should have not been printed. Conservatism can be defended effectively because its philosophy (and the application of it to daily life) has a positive value, a positive contribution to society.

To begin with, Mr. Fannin mentions that "Conservatism is today"s challenge to the status quo." However, he fails even to mention what kind of a challenge it poses! The Governor defines Conservatism as "an adherence to ideas and policies based on experience rather than theory." This might very well be the case but Mr. Fannin, again, fails to mention what ideas and what policies based on what experience make up his definition.

Which Side?

That Aristotle, Ciecero, Locke, Kant and Burke were conservatives does not mean that a thousand other famous men were not liberals! In other words, it is a very poor argument to defend a point by just giving the names of a few famous men who happen to agree with one's views. Famous men on the "other side of the fence" might outnumber the ones on this side.

We do not know how the balance between the liberal and the conservative contributions to political thought stands. The Governor, definitely, does not clarify this point. His presentation is, we are afraid, a little "biased."

Archaic Form!

It is ridiculous, says Mr. Fannin, to consider Conservatism as "an archaic form of modern political thought." But that is ALL he says! We wonder why it is ridiculous . . . , and we also wonder why he categorically affirms that liberalism is a deterrent to human progress.

We are sure Mr. Fannin can develop his points to a degree where his article might be comprehensible, to say the least. He is capable of defending Conservatism; he has the tools and the necessary knowledge. But as the article stands, it is just a chain of categorical statements without foundations. It is, indeed, a very poor defense of American Conservatism.

A Real Choice

As the Presidential campaign draws toward its expected or unexpected conclusion, whichever you prefer, the forces, motives and aims of Goldwaterist conservatives will be subjected to close scrutiny.

Since the Republican convention last July, various social, political, psychological and psychiatric pundits have been attempting to explain the Goldwater boom. The reason most often offered is that basically, the Arizona Senator epitomizes the sense of frustration, anxiety and disappointment which many Americans feel because of the still existent cold war, the zeal of the civil rights movement, and the complex conveniences of the space-age.

Other experts claim that the probably over-whelming defeat of the Goldwater-led Republican Party will result in the "purging" of the party's strong conservative elements. Once this process is completed, more "responsible" and "moderate" members of the Party will assume control.

Most observers believe that a spirit of moderation may be found in the likes of Governors Scranton of Pennsylvania, Hatfield of Oregon, Romney of Michigan and Rockefeller of New York. Scranton, himself, has said that he is an internationalist in foreign affairs, a liberal on the domestic front and a financial conservative.

Possibly excepting this last category, the other two classifications can be easily attached to any number of Democrats. This is the year that the American voter is actually presented with a clear choice in political ideology in a presidential election. And yet many regard this party difference as something of a temporary nature only.

The next logical question concerns the future existence of the two party creed. If the candiate is overwhelmingly rejected this fall as predicted and the Republican moderates re-assume control of the GOP, what will be the choice in 1968 and in later years?

If conservatism fails to catch the imagination of the voting public, then it seems consistent that its influence in 1968 will be slight, thus returning the party to its pre-Goldwater philosophy and, in the process, returning it to a close similarity with the Democratic Party.

The Republican Party will not disappear from the national scene if Goldwater is soundly beaten this fall, but the voter may never again have such a clear-cut choice in candidates.

Taking all this into consideration, one final question must be asked: in this age of complex complexities, is our political system and structure becoming so involved as to render the existence of two distinctly different parties impossible? In a rush to find pholoscphical labels for each party, will we have liberal moderates and moderate liberals? Yes indeed Senator Goldwater, America does face a choice this November 3.

Don't Forget To Vote Nov. 3!

A Few Words To Freshmen Nurses

by Mary Anne Rowland

Freshmen nurses are a motley crew. They come in tall, short, blonde, brunette, redheaded, frosted and sunstreaked varieties, all wearing the blue felt beanie, the outward sign that marks them as freshmen. They share a common denominator: fear. That is, of college life in general; of "Am I really meant to be a nurse?"; and, most of all, of the hordes of males that occupy every nook and cranny of this campus. Some attempt an air of outward sophistication but the majority look just plain bewildered and scared.

These would-be Florence Nightingales come to Villanova armed with a set of sterling high-school-inculcated ideals and ideas, a brand-new mohair sweater, and the fervent hope that they will make a success of college.

Now More Settled

However, by now they are beginning to feel a little more settled. They have partially recovered from the initial trauma of the 200 or so bugle-playing, catcalling, wolf-whistling, shouting mob of boys who greeted them in the best Villanova style as they inadvertently blundered into the Quad. A couple of quarters poorer but none the worse for wear, they have survived the Orientation Committee's program of relentless, well-meaning, bittersweet torture. The high school ideals may have become a bit tarnished with the more mundane aspects of reality as the freshmen narrowly escaped getting their noses smashed by the carelessness of "gentlemen" who absent-mindedly forgot to hold doors open for the person behind them; or by a few well-chosen but harmless invectives hurled at them by the "receiving line" on the Pie Shoppe steps. The new mohair sweater is soon declared impractical for Chem. lab. The already lacy pattern of mohair is not improved by random splashes of H_2SO_4.

Timely Tips

Having any of these problems, ladies? Then listen my children and you shall hear a few words of advice from a senior. In order to survive in this man's world it is necessary to either build a wall around oneself and retreat from the onslaught, or to meet the "enemy" on his own ground. The second course of action is preferable — it's more fun that way. In order to get the most out of Villanova you must put something of yourself into it. Join the campus activities that appeal to you (but not so many that studies fall by the board). In a school of this size I think you will find that the best way to meet people is to start by approaching a comparatively small group such as the staff of any of the activities. Something about sharing a common interest with the boys makes them easier to approach and makes the whole group of them seem less formidable.

Helpful Hints

Another helpful hint: Either think up a few witty replies or practice a scathing glance to be used for such "emergencies" as the time when a deleterious remark is directed toward you, your clothes, the way you hold your coffee cup or innumerable other points that are being constantly appraised by the Pie Shoppe's unshaven, shirt-sleeved connoisseurs of all that is good and beautiful.

One more item. Expect people to ask you, "Why did you come to Villanova?" Standard answer expected is, "I want to become a good nurse." Don't stoop to using cliches, girls. Try saying something different like, "I looked through the catalogs of many different colleges and found that Villanova had the best boy-girl ratio for my purposes. You see, I think that working my way through a few years of classes is the best, easiest, way for me to reach my goal — "Mrs.!"

Advantages of VU

There are a few advantages in going to an almost all-male school. Not the least of these is getting to know the boys in their native habitat. I do not think a more sincerely down-to-earth group can be found elsewhere than at Villanova. One can make a lot of real friends (who can incidentally, be most helpful for such things as borrowing enough carfare from them to get home); assisting with term papers; or giving a candid male opinion on anything from a new hairdo to a serious problem.

Yes, callow freshmen, Villanova is quite a place. It is made up of real people — not pedantic demagogues — who are trying to learn as much as they can about life itself, about their particular field of study, and about themselves. Loyal sons of Villanova all — even if two hundred of us do wear skirts.

So, take it from one who will soon be leaving these hallowed halls: Try to relax and enjoy sharing your college days with 5000 Villanova boys — God bless them, one and all.

Sounds Of Note

by Bill McCloskey

We hope the Ford presentation of the Serendipities and George Shearing is not as commercial as their World's Fair presentation. Listen to WWVU for interviews with these superstars . . . . It looks like they're playing "let's re-run it up the flagpole" with songs. Remember way back when WE were kids and Happy "Happy Birthday Baby" was big? Its back and WILL score again with the Four Seasons . . . . Speaking of "Baby," have you noticed how many songs mention that word in their title. The latest BILLBOARD Hot 100 lists eight mentions of the word. It seems that the record industry goes through phases like that. First there will be a bunch of "rain" songs, then a pile of "Cry" songs . . . .

Speaking of "Cry", Mr. Tears himself, Johnny Ray has signed with RCA. It's been 12 years since he broke big. His next scheduled release will be within 30 days . . . . We hear that Dean Martin's "Everybody Loves Somebody" was virtually rammed through the Record Industry Association of America (RIAA), so that he could receive his Gold Record on the Bob Hope Show a few weeks back . . . .

Susan Starr and Jane Morgan, an unlikely pairing, are set for an October 23rd date at the Academy of Music in Philly. We hear that the Ice Capades are the best in their history. They open the 13th at the Arena. By the way, Bob Dylan will make good weekend entertainment too, this Saturday night at the Academy. Also, watch for Nancy Wilson in the Quaker City soon.

Withdraw From South East Asia? Forget Victory, And Compromise?

by Steve Morrison

Columnist Walter Lippmann proposed in the September 28, 1964 edition of Newsweek some informative theories on what we should do about our problems in Vietnam.

The article, entitled: "Our Problem in Vietnam," suggests negotiations with the communists which would allow us to safely withdraw our support from South Vietnam. Mr. Lippmann writes:

"In plain language our problem in South Eastern Asia is how we can induce the communist bear (North Vietnam backed by Red China) to leave the whole of Indochina alone so we can softly and decently take away our 18,000 military advisors."

Unrealistic

In still plainer language, our problem is how to talk the communists into completely forgetting their basic desire to overthrow capitalism while we "softly and decently" offer them the ideal setup, an unprotected government in South Vietnam.

Such a withdrawal of American support would create a critical "power vacuum" in Asia. This vacuum would undoubtely be quickly filled by communist forces, despite any treaty they might have to sign to get us out.

As history has shown us time and time again, nations with conquest on their minds have been consistent violators of agreements with other countries. The Reds are no exception. They have proven that they will honor an agreement only as long as it is to their advantage. They have broken approximately 50 agreements during the last 40 years.

World Conquest

It is no secret that the communists have set world domination as their goal. They have reminded us of that. Yet, there are many liberals in Washington who will tell us that Communism has "softened" its position and that communist leaders are ready for peacefull co-existence

This analysis of world communism has been refuted by countless experts on the subject. One of the most informed authorities on communism and its goal is N. Khrushchev who has said, "Anyone who believes that our smiles signify the abandonment of Marx and Lenin deceives himself grossly. They who wait for that will have to wait until the shrimp learns to whistle."

To fully appreciate this statement you must read a summary of Lenin's plan for conquest as it appeared in John Stormer's excellent book, One Dare Call It Treason. Lenin's ideas are summed up:

"First, we will take eastern Europe, then the masses of Asia, then we will encircle the United States which will be the last bastian of capitalism. We will not have to attack. It will fall like an overripe fruit into our hands."

No-Win Policy

Declarations such as Khrushchev's and Lenin's do not seem to have any effect on our foreign policy since we still seem to place a lot of trust in the integrity of the communists. They have, in effect, declared a war on capitalism while we have tried to seek peacefull co-existence. We have followed too well the first line of a Chinese communist slogan.

"When the enemy advances,
we retreat
When he escapes, we harrass
When he retreats, we pursue
When he is tired, we attack"

Our position in Vietnam was summed up by Mr. Lippmann in his column. He writes: "I think I am right in saying that the objective of United States policy today is to convince the communists in Hanoi and Peking that they cannot dictate a settlement and they had better negotiate." Mr. Lippmann seems to agree with this attitude toward communism. Not everyone agrees with him.

"I doubt if this nation ever before has found itself in a battle for her very existence where any public official or group of officials automatically foreclosed the possibility of victory . . . the opposite of victory is defeat—not coexistence, or compromise. For the first time in our history that glorious word victory seems to be slipping out of our national vocabulary."

—Senator Goldwater

Why Not Victory?)

"An' All That Jazz"

by Barry Bornstein

We were given the pleasure of an audience with the "Trane" (Coltrane) last week during his delirious whistle-stop at Pep's on South Broad St. The few pearls John bestowed upon us, plus his performance, revitalized our old "Coltrane reaction-formation" — UTTER APPRECIATIVE DISMAY. "I'm in a rut, jus' can't get movin'!" and "I didn't feel it tonight," trothed John, as he initiated our conflict. For he had just completed a moving two-hour stint that had the feet of his audience doin' the St. Vitus and their eyes left candent. His portrayal of "Equinox," his latest headlining track, "(Coltrane's Sound-Atlantic) was outstanding. So outstanding, that at times his drummer, Elvin Jones lifted his eyes in amazement. And as always, the melodic freedom allowed was the ingredient that lit the fuse. So John, you floored us. Our only thought was a remembrance of The New Yorker magazine's comment re: Charlie Mingus: "There'll never be an instrument on which Mingus can say everything that he wants to say." "We guess you're in the same boat, John. But keep paddling, the wake is fantastic."

Word has it that there are still a few albums left of the 1964 Villanova Intercollegiate Jazz Festival. For those of you who were there — you know! For those of you who weren't—you missed it, brother! But you're both in luck. So see Eddie Bride in the Student Council office and partake of the fabulous sounds recorded at the greatest collegiate Jazz Festival — Villanova's.

It would be flagitious to miss Lee Morgan's The Sidewinder (a blue-note album). The title-track is hypnotic.

Headliners this week in town: Lloyd Price and his big band at Pep's (Broad and South). And Brother Jack McDuff, the king of the jazz organ is at the Showboat (Broad & Lombard). His performance is similar to what life would be under Goldwater—brief. But he's an earful.

Where Is Jazz Today?

Shearing And Jazz

by Ed Bride

For some years now, George Shearing has been making albums with a satin moody theme, and only occasionally has he released solid Jazz records. His last was "Jazz Concert," recorded "live" on the West Coast.

Shearing only this past Monday, released another mood album, but with creditable Jazz soles and arrangements by the blind-since--birth pianist. The album is entitled 'Deep Velvet," another of his series which started with "Velvet Carpet," and continued with "Black Satin," "White Satin," and "Satin Affair." "Deep Velvet" is undoubtedly the best in the series.

Here is a collection of standard tunes, most of which are done in a modern interpretation, with the exception of "Sentimental Journey," and "Willow Weep for Me." These two are rather unchallenging for pianist or listener, but remain pleasant nonethe less.

The most interesting piano can be found on Irving Berlin's "I Used to Be Color Blind" and Leonard Feather's tasty ballad, "Signing Off." The latter is very melodic and a soft touch by pianist Shearing is superb.

"My Heart Stood Still" is probably the best cut on the album, as woodwinds build to a full blending and the piano is almost "driving" toward finale. This and the other Rodgers-Hart tune on the album ("Spring is Here") give the brass and woodwinds a chance to build a cozy mood for the casual listener, before exploring some interesting passages by Shearing.

This album comes right at the time when Shearing will make his first appearance in the Philadelphia area in some time. His appearance in the Villanova Field House this Saturday is expected to feature several of these "easy-going" selections.

. . . And They All Look The Same

by Ron Javers

"If I am not better than other men, then at least I am different." Jean-Jacques Rousseau said that. He is dead now, and perhaps so is the underlying respect for individualism that would prompt such a statement.

In America the individualist is most often made an object of laughter. He is called queer, odd, or phony by people who aren't themselves capable of generating an original idea.

The man who says what he thinks is considered rude. The man who stands up for principle is judged indiscreet. Many go along playing the fool to their neighbor, hoping for some sign, however fleeting, of acceptance. Many mill around in the same herd, never daring to meander from the group; never realizing that they are growing stagnant.

No Enemies

Few people have enemies. Life is full of handshakers and backslappers. Few hate openly and few love openly.

This creeping conformity is physical as well as mental. It is evidenced every day in all walks of life. College students, who strangely enough like to think of themselves as rebels, are paradoxically the worst offenders.

Anyone who admits that he spends a lot of time studying is immediately castigated. The person who reads books not officially assigned in class might be termed "weird" or "off the wall."

A campus is composed of many cliques: the athletes, the class politicians, the fraternity men, etc. Each group believes that IT is THE group on campus. All others are mildly tolerated, accorded a passing nod and a shallow friendship.

Small Talk

Wherever students gather there is an abundance of small talk — the countless words and phrases that are calculated to pass time and mean nothing. Deep conversation comes all too rarely, often amazing students with the edification it brings.

College life should be a time of growth and expansion, a time to question, a time to dare. Many instead are stifled by their own fear of ridicule.

Personality

God gave man, among his other gifts, a personality. This personality is meant to distinguish a man from his fellows. It is not the indiscriminate smile and instant popularity some think it to be.

The students at Villanova have been termed "Sophisticates," with the implication of snobbery. "Sophistication," however, means far more than this. It signifies worldliness and an ability to appreciate both the things and people around us. It offers the opportunity to partake more fully of the conglomeration of ideas which is life.

Positive Individualism

In America an individualist is appreciated only if he is wealthy and then he becomes merely eccentric. To be different is not necessarily a negative characteristic. The world is full of differences existing harmoniously together.

The problem is not that of being weakened by our separateness, but of being smothered by our unanimity.

It is very easy to preach conformity, and even easier to conform. Consequently, it is comensurately difficult to see the basic flaw in this "Doctrine of Oneness." Inability to envision reality in no way negates its presence however, for often it is unfortunately true that mediocrity is hidden beneath the cloak of conformity.

New Collegiate Mixer

The first weekly all-collegiate mixer will be held at the Concord Ballroom, 7049 Frankford Avenue, Northeast Philadelphia, October 9.

This will be a steady Friday night college dance, that will feature top bands and talent aimed at the college level. The opening night's attractions will be Tina & the Marquis plus an intercollegiate folk singing contest.

Also

Folk groups and singers from many of the area colleges will compete for a giant trophy and a private audition with a leading record company. If you have a folk group and are interested in getting an audition, contact Ron Diamond at RA 5-7520.

Coming attractions that will appear at the dance include: Maynard Ferguson; other top jazz, rock and dance bands; plus some outstanding folk groups and singers.

Identification

College identification will be required at the door and positively no one under college age will be admitted. The dance is being promoted at many of the colleges throughout the area and students from the following colleges are expected to attend: Temple, Penn, Cabrini, Beaver, Drexel, Rosemont, Immaculata, Harcum, Villanova, Moore, Holy Family, Chestnut Hill and Museum College of Art.

The dress regulations will be coats and ties for the men and skirts for the coeds.

LUSTY... PROVOCATIVE... ELOQUENT...

Dialogue highlights from the motion picture that LIFE Magazine calls "a lusty, boldly provocative production with an array of castles, wenches and derring-do." This new RCA Victor album captures the tremendous emotional impact, all the eloquence (and earthiness) of the film's major speeches as selected by director Peter Glenville. An album of significant interest to students of drama and the spoken word.

A Victory For "Justice"

by Gene Kearney

A nineteen-year old freshman walks to and from class. A dog walks beside him. Together they will face and conquer all the challenges experienced in another sightless day for John Justice.

Justice, who hails from the seaside community of Wildwood, New Jersey, has been blind since the age of three, when stricken with glaucoma. He has been forced to make many adjustments. It appears that he has made them well.

The likeable psychology major is the only boy in a family of four children, but despite this has managed to participate and keep abreast of the normal male activities.

Sports

Sports such as swimming ("I taught swimming in a camp for the blind this summer"), shooting ("I shoot by sound — best I've ever done is about five out of six, though"), and ice skating (I belonged to an ice skating drill team in Ocean City for a couple of years") have proven to be no obstacle when attacked with determination and confidence.

Self-confidence is probably the first characteristic one would notice about John Justice. He makes it abundantly clear that he came to play, as it were. He is gifted with an extraordinary memory, that he has trained and is not afraid to use. He pays infinite attention to detail, and takes notes in Braille of anything impressing him to be important.

Education

His elementary education was received at St. Joseph's School for the Blind in Jersey City, New Jersey. From there John attended Wildwood Catholic High School in his hometown for four years. His 92.3 graduating average was attained by hard work, tackling such subjects as: algebra, geometry, accounting, French and Latin, among others.

Although it takes about an hour longer for John to study, he doesn't seem to mind. He takes pride in his intellectual achievements, but would rather talk about his other ones, as when he told us "I ride a bicycle."

Socially, John Justice has found things perhaps a bit more challenging, but John appears to thrive on challenges. His senses of touch and hearing are such that he has become a fairly accomplished musician, playing piano, organ, accordion, and drums. He can remember drum arrangements of most records after a couple of listenings. He says that he would like to renovate our dance band because it "lacks punch."

Interests

Radio is another one of John's interests. His main extra-curricular activity on campus is WWVU, the Radio Voice of Villanova, where he is a member of the staff. Engineers who have belonged to the station for three and four years were amazed by his proficiency in operating the console after practicing for only about three hours.

As most young men, John also agrees that young ladies are in season whether its Spring or not. After his first weekend here he was asked to comment on the area's offerings, he promptly replied "I like Harcum girls." On dates he frequents pizza establishments and occasionally goes to a movie although he says "Sully (his German Shepherd seeing-eye dog) enjoys them more than I do."

When talking in terms of females, John just can't seem to resist the opportunity of getting in a plug for Sully. She has a training and personal value of about thirty-five hundred dollars. In her dual capacity of seeing-eye-dog and classmate, John likes to think of her as "the world's most educated dog."

John Justice says he came to Villanova because he "heard it was a good school." Good schools like to have good men. From all indications Villanova has one in John Justice.

The Society for the Advancement of Management is initiating its ninth year as a Villanova Society. Many students fail to understand what S.A.M. is really trying to accomplish. A large majority seem to think that this organization is merely a management-oriented club. This is not so. The main objective of this society is to acquaint the members with business and union leaders who have dedicated themselves to the art and science of management and its problems.

The society fulfills this purpose by arranging to have top speakers discuss the problems they face. Field trips are also arranged for the students to such noted firms as Schmidts Brewing, Atlantic Refining, and the New York Stock Exchange.

S.A.M. welcomes all students who feel that this society may be interest to them. Membership is open until Oct. 15.

Campus Volunteers For LBJ Seek Student Assistance

The Campus Volunteers for Johnson—an organization of faculty members from Bryn Mawr, Haverford, Villanova, and other colleges in this area—are now in the process of attracting new recruits from the Villanova campus.

Their goal is to work for the election of President Johnson and the defeat of Senator Goldwater in the November election, four weeks from now. The Campus Volunteers are engaged in three kinds of activity: the intercampus exchange of speakers with competence in law and government; the recruiting of workers from faculties and student bodies for canvassing and poll watching; and the solicitation of funds.

Dr. Cyrus J. Sharer, head of Villanova's Chapter, has expressed his hope that interested faculty members, groups, and students will earnestly respond to the organization's invitation.

World Series Pick

It's that time of year again when a sports scribe has to climb out onto the proverbial limb to list his choice for that annual October classic known as the World Series.

As usual, the selection of the future world champs is a rugged one. The St. Louis Cardinals, appearnig in their first Series since 1946, present a lineup that could duplicate the Los Angeles Dodgers' sweep of the Yanks last year. The Birds, who copped the National League flag in the greatest giveaway since Santa Claus got drunk, still have the momentum from their late season stretch run.

More important, they boast a slugging corps which their foes can't match. In the likes of Curt Flood, Bill White, Ken Boyer, Julian Javier and Dick Groat, the Cards far surpass the Bombers in consistent power at the plate.

Only Mickey Mantle and Elston Howard have wielded a consistent bat for New York. Roger Maris and Joe Pepitone were sporadic and the batting average of the rest of the Yank lineup was absolutely anemic.

Cards' Pitching Strong

The nod for pitching also goes to Johnny Keane's boys. Twenty game winner Ray Sadecki, Bob Gibson and Phillies' retread Curt Simmons provide the Cards with mound strength capable of silencing the Bomber bats. Another factor in the Cards' favor is the fact that the first two games are played in St. Louis. The Redbirds wi be albel to get two games under their belt before heading to Yankee Stadium, which ranks with Madison Square Garden as the top choking spot for newcomers.

On paper, it looks like the Cardinals should top the crown. But the New York Yankees are a team that can't be figured out on paper. There's an intangible something about the Bombers that doesn't show up in the statistics.

Maybe it's their quiet confidence which enables them to rally every year with a blistering finishing kick that spells pennants. Maybe it's the legendary Yankee tradition, started by a guy named Ruth and nurtured by men like Gehrig, DiMaggio, Gordon, Lazzeri and Mantle. Whatever it is, it's magic—Yankee magic, which many have cursed but everyone respects.

The Yanks are a proud team. They suffered bitterly last year at the loss of their crown. Yankee Stadium looked naked without the championship flag. Within six games, though, the banner should be back home.

Wildcat Pistol Team Hopes To Continue Past Victory Trend

by John Barrow

Sgt. J. A. Migliacci, USMC, announced that tryouts for the Villanova varsity pistol team will be held in John Barry Hall at 6:30 p.m. next Monday night, October 12.

Last year, led by All-Americans George Sinclair and Tony Mascia, the team compiled a 23-5 record, copping the first three positions in the NRA sectional meet. Moving on to the National meet, the Cats placed third in the conventional shoot, and nailed down the national championship in the International Shoot, which uses a different type of target.

With co-captain Mascia leading the way, Sgt. Migliacci is looking for another outstanding year, and possibly an improvement on last year's fine record. The team was hit hard by graduation, however, and new shooters are needed. The pistol team is a varsity sport, and all students are eligible.

Detroit Preview

by Buzz Langon

Saturday, John Idzik, will bring his big and fast Detroit Titans to Villanova for the annual Homecoming Game.

Detroit has twenty returning lettermen and a fine crop of sophs. Last year they were hurt by lack of depth as shown by their 2-6-1 record.

The leading veteran is 5 fooot 10 inch, 215 pound fullback, Fred Beier. Along with being All Catholic All American he was thirteenth in the nation in rushing, which is quite a feat in that he played in only nine games which is one less that the nations leading ground gainers.

Detroit's running fullback is the key to their offense. Against Kentucky he ran 55 yards for a touchdown on the second play of the game.

Up front, Detroit's line averages 227. Four of the linemen are experienced veterans. Their biggest lineman is Steve Mass who is 6 feet 4 inches and 285 poounds. He plays defensive left tackle and offensive right tackle.

The best of Sophs, is end Tom Beer at 6 feet 4 inches and 215 pounds. This High School All Ameican has excellent hands and good speed. Detroit followers are on the All American bandwagon for their boy.

In the backfield the Titans have a veteran quarterback in Ron Bishop who was ineligible last year. This quarterback likes to run as evidenced by a 42 yard touchdown run against Toledo. At halfback there is letterman Dennis Assenmacker and a couple of fine sophs, Mike Rondall and Wendall Smith, along with Fred Beier at fullback. fullback.

The Titans have experience at every position. They have a big heavy line, also strength and speed at halfback and fullback.

The Titans lost their game to Kentucky 13-6. The score was tied 6-6 until the last three minutes of the game. To give you an idea what this means, the next weekend Kentucky beat Mississippi which was picked fourth in the nation by Sports Illustrated.

They have a victory over Toledo 22-6, which is the same score of the Villanova — Toledo Game. Last Friday Night the Titans lost to Cincinnati.

The Wildcats beat the Titans last year by a score of 28-14 with John McDonnell breaking the game wide open when he turned an interception into a 26 yard touchdown.

Pep Rally Planned Before Friday Night's Homecoming Game

A pre-Detroit pep rally is scheduled for Friday night at nine o'clock to kick off the Homecoming Weekend festivites.

The rally will be held immediately precedingthe Homecoming Dance directly across from the stadium. Members of the team will be on hand to talk about the progress of the team.

New Handball Courts Bring Another Event To Intramural Program

With the erection of new handball courts, the Villanova Intramural Department brings a new sport to the Villanova scene.

Two official A.A.U. handball courts were constructed over the summer, and are located immediately adjacent to the basketball courts nearest to the library. These courts provide the finest facilities available for the students.

Handball Tournament

In connection with this, a Handball Tournament started on September 30, although anyone interested may still sign up at the Intramural Office. Entries are accepted for singles and doubles competition. Gloves and balls are available to all students from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily, and 12 noon to 6 p.m. on weekends.

In addition, the outdoor tennis and basketball courts were rebuilt with a new deck, new nets, and backboards. It is hoped that the students will make greater use of these facilities, especially in regard to outdoor basketball courts. However, sneakers must be worn at all times on these courts. This is to protect the new surface which will become marked if shoes are worn.

Football

The touch football league is already under way with 63 teams competing. The season is expected to last until Thanksgiving.

Tomorrow at 9:30 a.m. in the stadium the Cross Country run will be held. This is open to all students and information is available at the Intramural Office.

The Swimming and Diving Championships will be held on October 15 at 4:30 p.m. in the Villanova pool. Again, all students interested may compete.

FRIENDLY FOOLISHNESS

The Pony Backfield

by Steve Freind

"Outlined against the blue-grey October sky, the Four Horsemen rode again." . . . Grantland Rice, October, 1924.

With these twelve words, Grantland Rice achieved immortality. But the dean of American sportswriters would roll over in his grave if he realized the scoop he missed. True, Rockne's Horsemen were the greatest thing to hit the college scene since coed dorms, but that was before the coming of the Pony Backfield.

In locker room lingo, they are known as Okie, Dickie Bird, Stampede and King Toad. But these are only aliases. In real life, they answer to the call of Connell, Sernyak, Santomauro and Brown who, in three short weeks, have brought the glory days of Villanova football back to the Main Line.

There's nothing fierce looking about these four. They're an under sized quartet in a big boy's game, but three Wildcat foes have felt the sting of these terrible tots. Without them the 'Cats would not be sporting an unbeaten record and Alex Bell would not be sporting the biggest smile this side of the Mona Lisa.

Heresy

When Bell announced his starting backfield at the season's outset, he was immediately accused of heresy. (A fatal tag on an Agustinian campus). The veteran coach couldn't have shook up the armchahr alumni more if he announced a nurse starting at end. (If you can't be a cheerleader, you have to do something.) A drastic departure from the big back offense of past Bell squads, the ball toting corps averaged a meager 188 lbs. Gone were the Rettinos, Joes and Merendas whose grinding ball control tactics piloted the 'Cats to two bowl appearances. With a skelton crew for a backfield, the "experts" predicted trouble on the Main Line. But they failed to figure on Connell's Corral.

In the Toledo opener, the Ponies kicked their heels for the first time, Connell and Brown led the charge, as the 'Cats ripped the Rocket defense to shreds on a strictly overland route. For the the first time in years, Villanova had a breakaway offense and the experts headed for their erasers.

Bell turned his stable loose against Holy Cross the following week, and they found grazing land in the Crusader end zone. This time it was Connell and Santomauro at the head of the stampede, and just to prove that horses can fly, Connel un leashed an air barrage that the boys from Worcester couldn't handle. The New York Times flocked beneath the blue and white banner, filling the sports page with news of the redheaded flamethrower from Havertown and his playmates.

VMI received more of the same treatment. Always fine judges of horseflesh, the southerners recognized a herd of thoroughbreds when they saw one. The Keydets were never in the race after Connell hooked up with Sernyak for an 81 yard scoring strike. Before heading back to the corral, the Ponies rolled up 441 yards and the Keydets headed home a 27-7 loser.

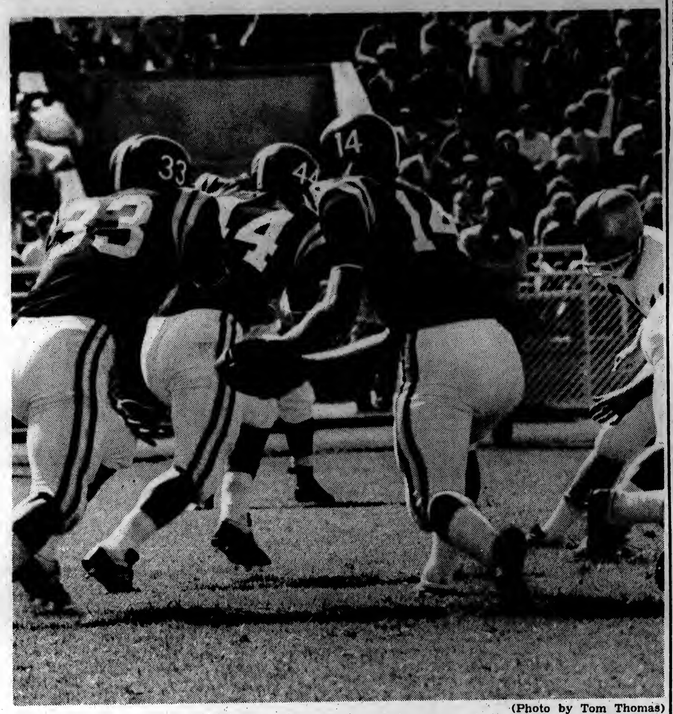
Popularity

The influence of the Pony backfield is amazing. Suddenly, basketball is not the only sport on the Villanova campus. In fact the 'Cats were paid the highest tribute possible by their fans when the chant of "We're Number One" arose from the Villanova stands, a cheer formerly reserved for Jack Kraft's hardwood magicians.

There was a time not long ago that the football season at Villanova was defined as that period of time immediately preceding the basketball campaign. All this has now changed. The football season is now the time when the Pony Backfield frolics across the grid to another victory. If you haven't seen them ye, a word of warning is in order. They're contagious. Once bitten is forever addicted, for the hoofmark stays on your heart. You can't ignore them, so don't try. Connell's Corral is here to stay.

Sophomores Defeat Freshmen In Muff Day Competition

According to tradition, the annual Muff Day events were held att Villanova University on October 1, 1964 and also keeping tradition, the Sophomores routed the Frosh class by a core of 130-60.



Initial activites were started on the previous Saturday when the Sophomore nurses defeated the Frosh nurses in softball and volleyball. From that time on the Sophomore class was never headed and the resulting runaway was evident.

The winners won nine of the eleven events. They were victorious in Volleyball, Push Ball, Tug O'War, Egg Toss, Three Leg Race, Wheelbarrow Race, Football and the two events in which the nurses participated.

The only two events in which the Frosh were able to win were F oul Shooting and Pass For Distance contest.

Mr. James Moran, Assistant Director of the Intramural Department, supervised over this years activities and commented: "While the Sophomores may have won the activities, certainly the Spirit and Co-operation, showed the Frosh far in front." The student director in charge of this years Muff Day was John Fenlon.

The Intramural Football Leagues began Monday after last weeks games were fained out.

Bell's Bombers Ramble To Third Win; Connell Stars As Keydets Topple

by Steve Freind

Displaying their most explosive offense in year, Villanova's hustling Wildcats rolled over VMI 27-7 in their home debut on Saturday. It was the third victory in a row for Alex Bell's unbeaten 'Cats and paved the way for next Saturday's Homecoming battle with powerful Detroit.

New Offense

The 12,000 fans who watched the outmanned Keydets go down to their third straight defeat were quick to realize that this was a new type Villanova team. Instead of the grind-it-out, ball control offence of past years, Bell's Bombers substituted a blitzkrieg attack which struck like lightning four times for long scores.

Once again, the Villanova attack was spearheaded by Dave Connell. The 6-2 redhead hit the airlanes for two touchdown strikes, gained 94 yards rushing and hijacked his fourth enemy pass of the year. A doubtful quantity at the season's outset, Connell continued his flawless direction of the 'Cat offense, which rolled up 41 yards.

Before the Wildcats hit the scoring colmn, they were treated to a few anxious moments as the Virginia invaders dominated the first quarter. Twice the Keydets mounted drives deep into Villanova territory before the 'Cats defense stiffened. The second VMI thrust was halted at the Villanova 15 when Connell intercepted a Charlie Snead aerial.

Two plays later, the 'Cats were on the board thanks to the longest pass play seen on the Main Line in years. After two running plays gained four yards, Connell found former Bonner High teammate Dick Sernyak alone at midfield. Sernyak hauled in the pass and continued untouched to complete the 81 yard play. The Connell-Serynak combination came within two yards of the Villanova record set by Steve Romanik and backfield coach Joe Rogers in 1949. Jim Case converted and the 'Cats had a 7-0 lead.

Poor Punt

Villanova increased its advantage to 14-0 just before intermission on another Connell aerial. With two minutes left in the half, the Keydets were forced to punt from their own 14. Emmett Michaels put a tremendous rus on kicker Carl Rhodes and the ball traveled only 13 yards to the VMI 27. On first down Connel drew in the defense with a beautiful fake and hit co-captain John McDonnell in the end zone for the 'Cats second tally.

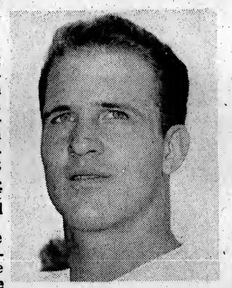
Midway through tthe third period, quaterback Richie Green, subbing for Connell, added six more to the Villanova total. The talented sophomore from Massachusetts roled to his left, cut back toward the midde and rambled 60 yards to score. John Kolmer and Chip Bender cleared the way for Green with key blocks.

Brown Scores

VMI narrowed the gap to 20-7 early in the fourth stanza on a two yard Snead-to-Donnie White pass but the 'Cats came right back with another tally. This time it was Tom Brown who supplied the fireworks.

Brown, converted to fullback in spring practice, took a handoff from Connell, broke into the clear and turned on his sprinter's speed en route to a 59 yard touchdown. For the third straight time, Brown led all Villanova ball carres, gaining 107 yards. Case added his third conversion to round out the day's scoring.

Although pleased with the win, Bell was not completely satisfied with his team's performance. "We made too many mistakes that could be fatal in a close game," Bell said, referring to the 77 yards the 'Cats were penalized. "Our execution wasn't what it should have been. We should have been able to hold the ball longer." The 'Cats lost the ball three times on fumbles.



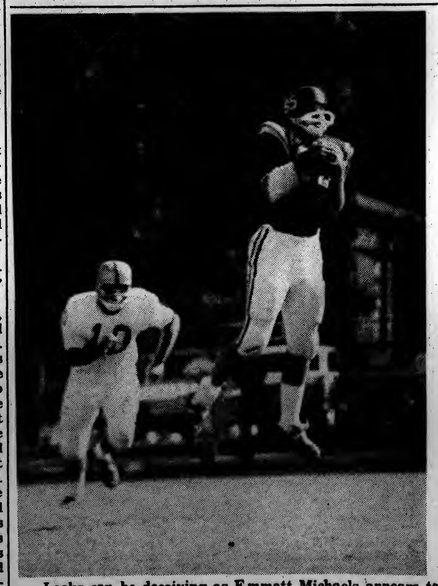
As usual, the Wildcat defense sparkled. Against the likes of Al Atkinson, McDonnell, Michaels and Jack McDonald, the Keydets were able to gain only 76 yards overland. The air route proved little better for Coach John McKenna's boys, as the VMI quarterback completed only 10 out of 24 passes for 138 yards.

The Oke Strikes Back

by Rusty Miller

The opening of the '64 gridiron season saw the Wildcats with unusual depth in the vital quarterback spot. The $64,000 question was — after all were battle tested, who would emerge as starting general? Three of the hopefuls all of whom showed good potential — one an excellent passer and good runner, one a fine runner and team general and one a fine under fire. The fourth prospect was a junior, who although he had seen some action last year was never really in contention for the spot. A good runner, he has since been switched to halfback.

The final nominee was a 6-2, 195 lb. junior from Havertown, Pa. named Dave Connell. "Okie" as he is known to his friends, was out in front of the race for only one reason — experience. As a soph he started when Bill Sherlock was out with a knee injury. His performance, however, was inconsistent.



At Monsignor Bonner High, Dave had directed the attack for a championship team — strictly a running team though. On a third and fifteen situation they could be expected to sweep the end with their fast, hard-running backs. He was not expected to pass; he was not supposed to pass. The Oke got the reputation of being there strictly to hand off the ball.

On coming to V. U. he was a good running quarterback—on a first and goal, he really shines. One big strike against him was his unorthodox method of passing. He cocks his arm to the side instead of straight back. Many people figured that this year Okie's number was up, that his advantage of experience would keep him out of the starting role for no more than three or four games. Just when darkness and oblivion in the person of three sophomores seemed about to overtake Mr. Connell, he hit the line with a explosion unequaled by K's new super weapon. To question his starting birth now would be like asking Patterson if he'd like a crack at the title.

Strong on Defense

Because or a lack of depth at the quarterback slot, Okie could never be used on defense before. An inter-squad scrimage the Monday after the Toledo game was the turning point as Oke went both ways. "By the end of the scrimmage he was hurting but he made it," said one of his teammates It may be noted that the starting quarterback now has four interceptions on his already shining record.

The question of consistency is now on the line. Can the Oke do it week after week? If it's answered as easily as were the others . . . Mr. Connell has arrived.

Looks can be deceiving as Emmett Michaels appears to have snared a Connell pass. Actually, ball fell incomplete during 'Cats rout of VMI.

AN EDITORIAL— Lyndon B. Johnson

More so than at any other time, this year's Presidential campaign provides the American voter with a real choice this fall, a choice between two futures.

Even before John F. Kennedy took office, three key issues facing the United States in the sixties were the establishment of a firm flexible defensive posture for the nuclear age, the maintenance of a strong and growing economy, and the attempts to provide the rights and duties of United States citizenship to all within our borders.

The late President realized that these problems could not be rectified in the first month, year, one thousand days or even within the life-span of his administration, but he did say, "Let us begin."

And begin we did! A nuclear test ban treaty, the elusive goal of every administration since the end of World War II, was signed and enjoined more than one hundred members of the world community, including the Soviet Union.

The theme of these four years could well have been one of peace through predaredness as this diplomatic achievement was matched by a 150 per cent increase in nuclear warheads and an 800 per cent increase in counterinsurgency forces, among other thing.

Earlier this year an eleven billion dollar across-the-board tax cut was enacted. The pessimists of both national parties immediately sent up the storm signals of inflations, and yet the economy has marched on to a new record of consecutive months of growth with the main impetus of the cut still to come.

The proudest possession of a Roman living two thousand years ago was his citizenship. What should be the proudest possession of of an American in 1964 is his citizenship but, because of the deep-rooted prejudices of many Ameicans against twenty million fellow citizens whose skin happens to be of a darker hue, this priceless gift in its fullest meaning, is not completely enjoyed in this country.

In an attempt to correct this inequality, a Civil Rights Act was adopted to give all citizens the rights to which they are entitled as Americans.

The leader of the opposition, however, has presented another type of future decidedly different from that envisioned by President Johnson, one that is decidedly vague and hazy. On each of these important measures, Senator Goldwater cast a dissenting vote.

Instead he offers for the next four years a future of fear and suspicion on the international level, folly and ineffectiveness on the economic level and misguided sincerity on the social level. Unfortunately the drawing card of the GOP is not one of superior handling of internal and external policies, but one based on fear, archaic methods and a sense of frustration and ignorance.

America must have, should have and will have — Lyndon B. Johnson.

Mary Perkins Ryan Asks Question: "Are Parochial Schools The Answer?"

Mary Perkins Ryan, author of the controversial book, Are Parochial Schools the Answer? is scheduled to discuss this work at the Field House tomorrow evening, Thursday, October 15, at 8 p.m.

Mrs. Ryan maintains the belief that her book is a much-needed effort for the better unification of the faithful. Subtitled "Catholic Education in the Light of the Council", the book does not primarily concern itself with criticism of the present American system of education, but rather includes the broader and more distant problems of Christian formation of all the faithful in line with the objectives of the Second Vatican Council.

General Survey

The author presents a general survey of the present Catholic educational system in terms of manpower, scope, and effectiveness. She also considers methods used in the past to achieve unity of the faithful. Questions are raised, such as: "Who needs religious formation?"; "Of what should it consist?", and "What is its chief purpose?"

Controversial Idea

The book concludes with the author's well-publicized and controversial idea on the role that the Catholic school system should play in religious formation. That is, her inability to see how, under present circumstances, the continuance or the extension of the Catholic school system can be anything but an obstacle to the pursuit of these aims."

One critic feels that the book is a valuable tool in stimulating the re-evaluation and discussion of some of the problems concerning the American Church.

Mrs. Ryan's lecture is being presented as part of the Student-Council sponsored Villanova Forum series.

Political Stage Is Set For Tomorrow's Mock Election

ICG Idea

The plans for the election sprang from an idea initiated by the Villanova chapter of the Intercollegiate Conference on Government (ICG) last spring. It will be supervised by the Student Government Association under the co-chairmanship of Ward Williams and Bill Manfred —co-ordinated by Dave Moore, Student Activities vice-president of the S.G.A.

Groups co-operating in the venture are the Villanovan the Young Democrats and Young Republicans, the Conservative Club, the Political Union, the International Relations Society and the Intercollegiate Conference on Government.

The feature debate of the campaign will be held this afternoon in Vasey Hall Auditorium at 4:30—and will include representatives from each of the above-mentioned organizations. It will be aired over WWVU and everyone is invited to the event. Attendance is expected to be excellent.

A special issue of Politico, the magazine of the Political Union will be published this week in conjunction with the campaign. The paper will include articles presenting the views on the issues from both the Democratic and Republican sides of the ticket. Greg Leonard, editor of Politico announced the publication will be available to all students.

Republican Headquarters for the campaign are in 39 Sullivan Hall. Democratic Headquarters are located in 215 Sullivan.

Nationally known as an excellent orator, he delivered the keynote address at the 1956 Republican National Convention. His topic for this lecture will be the question: "What is Good Government?"

The first meeting of the Forum will coincide with the annual meeting of the Villanova Chapter of Coif, the National Honorary Law Society.

The next speaker will be William Stringfellow of the New York Bar who is scheduled to speak on the relationship between "Race, Poverty and the Law." This meeting will be held on Friday, November 20 at 8:30 p.m.

Senator Goldwater Endorses Pennsylvania GOP Candidates

By Jim Brennan

With approximately six thousand people in attendance, Senator Barry Goldwater arrived in Ardmore last Wednesday to address a mixed gathering of young and old.

The Republican presidential nominee was greeted with cheers from the crowd and with numerous signs containing statements such as: "Throw the bums out of Washington"; "Go back to your herd Daddy Bird—Let's back Barry"; 'Equality for all and privilege for none."

Thanks Scranton

Goldwater commenced by endorsing Bob Johnson for the Senate and Dick Schweiker for Congress. Hugh Scott, seeking re-election to the Senate, and Governor Scranton were also the recipients of Goldwater praise. The Senator from Arizona thanked Scranton for his help in the campaign and said that he would go a long way in this country.

Goldwater stated that the issues of this campaign are not what they are generally considered to be and that they go much deeper. The press and too many other people feel that the people have accented socialism.

No Socialism

The primary concern of Americans, the Republican nominee continued, is the type of country we are going to turn over to our children. "By far the great majority of Americans don't buy socialism." "They don't buy the idea that the federal government should be all-powerful."

The concentration of power in the hands of government is dangerous as it would be in the hands of any few people. Political power must be diffused.

"Forgotten American"

Senator Goldwater then introduced his theory of the "forgotten American." This is the individual who works, pays his taxes and obeys the law, but who is being neglected by the power in Washington that caters only to minority groups. He did not mean any specific minority group but all minority groups.

Goldwater then went on to criticize the Supreme Court on their recent decisions not being based on law but on what they as individuals would like to see for the country. The Founding Fathers would never have foreseen the time when the executive branch has more power than the other two branches of our government.

The Republican nominee then declared that there is hardly a country small enough that won't pull our whiskers.

Communism

Senator Goldwater explained his former statement that we are soft on communism. He co-sponsored an amendment with Senator Ribicoff of Connecticut condemning the Communist persecution of the Jews. This amendment was opposed by Senator Fullbright because it was felt that we should not do anything that might offend the Communists.

Goldwater said that maybe soft was not the right word to use but if a man isn't tough then he is soft.

Goldwater ended by stating that this country will be better when the Secretary of Defense and Secretary of State realize that, "Only the strong can keep freedom as the weak always lose it."

Throughout the speech the Senator received sporadic applause and he was mobbed by the crowd as he proceeded to the motorcade taking him to Willow Grove Airport.

Whiskey Co. Team Promises To Be Best, Augmented By Frosh

The pride of the Villanova NROTC, the Whiskey Company Drill Team reassembled this season with 12 returning squad members. Augmented by 7 upperclassmen competing for spots, the team promises to be one of the finest in the group's history.

Succeeding Major R. Anderson as team commander is Major Black, USMC assisted by Gunnery Sgt. Mugliacci. The company itself is under the competent direction of John Moore with Arthur Franz as his executive, officer.

Two Platoons

This year will also see two freshman platoons commanded by George Atkinson and Tom Kelley. Other officers include Leon Robbins as first platoon leader and Roger Wellbrook acting as supply officer.

The Boston College-Villanova game will mark the team's first 1964-65 appearance. Initial competition begins with the Navy review in November. Later this fall the regiment will host the sixth annual Villanova Invitational Drill meet at which over 30 eastern and midwestern teams will vie for honors.

Placed Eighth

Villanova will be represented in meets at Boston, Pittsburgh, Maryland and Washington, the scene of the national competition. It was here last year that the Blue and White delegation placed eighth among all ROTC drill squads throughout the country.

The first team is comprised of approximately 20 volunteers from the ranks of the NROTC. Daily practice a 7 a.m. is required along with Tuesday afternoon and pre-meet parading. Such procedure continues until the spring review in May.

Literary Society Announces Poll On Modern Writers

The Literary Society, after a discussion at their last meeting, has decided to take a poll of the Villanova students in order to discover what books and authors are in vogue on the college campus.

In recent years, J. D. Salinger and William Golding have been prominent of the college literary scene. At the present time, no author enjoys the universal appeal of these men and the society, by its poll, hopes to find out the most popular writers (playwrights included) of the day.

All students interested in taking part in this literary taste poll should write the names of their favorite contemporary authors and the current books (extra-curricular) they are reading on a slip of paper.

The names of these authors and books can be placed in the Literary Society box in the SGA office or left in the Villanovan office in care of Tom Krause.

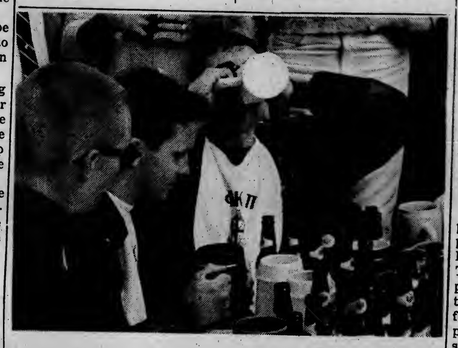
ALUMNI NEWS



The 1964-65 Annual Alumni Giving Drive will begin October 15 and end February 28. This year's goal is $100,000.

One notable addition to the drive is the special-gifts program which is geared to raise the individual size of the contributions of alumni to the annual Giving Program.

Villanova depends heavily on alumni gifts. Without the support of the graduates the University would be in serious difficulty.

Jim Gordon, Class of '51, supervised the packing of the most prized attraction of the World's Fair, Michelangelo's "Pieta". The job done by Koppers Company of Pittsburgh was to get the 6,500 pound complex-curve, fragile - edged, highly - polished patina to America without being scratched. This patina, transported from Rome to New York, was packaged in a wooden case and covered by a steel case. The fragile object is estimated at one hundred-million dollars.

FOLK SONG SEMINAR:

Many of the reasons for Odetta's acclaim by knowledgeable folk music fans are evident in her latest Dynagroove album. Here—in a cross-section of 12 great folk songs—her pure voice and emotional power extract the essential meaning of such ballads as "Troubled" and "Wayfarin' Stranger" as well as the humorous flavor of "Froggy Went A-Courtin'" and "Sea Lion Woman." Placement Director Moritz Reviews Recruiting Season

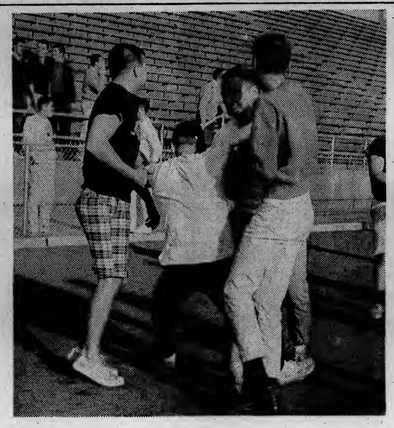
John A. Moritz, reviewing the results of the 1964 campus recruiting season at Villanova, stated it was the best in the eight years that he has been Placement Director.

Last September, 556 registrants (544 bachelor's and 12 master's degree candidates) filed resumés in preparation for campus interviews. This was the largest in the 14 year history of the Placement Office.

Highs

Other highs were also reached in the number of firms and government agencies (205), in the number of job offers (503), and in job acceptances (202 on campus and 70 off campus). Only the number of interviews has declined from 3,000, two years ago, to 2,745 last spring.

Mr. Moritz explained that this is in line with his philosophy to make the interview process more efficient by counselling students to sign for companies or government divisions for which they have the real desire to work and for which they would reasonably hope to be qualified.



Mr. Moritz also stated that he was gratified by the increased interest and response on the part of liberal arts majors and business majors other than accountants.

He is presently urging all seniors and graduate students to file resumés even if they intend entering graduate school or military service. These records will be of value in later years since the Placement Office also serves alumni.

Summary

The following gives a concise summary of the 566 registrants for the 1964 recruiting season:

Accepted jobs	272 or	49.0%
Military service	77 or	13.9%
Grad. studies only	125 or	22.5%
Grad. studies and job	28 or	5.0%
No commitment	40 or	7.2%
Peace Corps	1 or	0.2%
Did not graduate	10 or	1.8%

The guest speaker was William Smyser, a retired Foreign Service Officer and foreign correspondent, who has travelled in Southeast Asia.

Reception

A reception followed the debate during which time the members were able to talk with the guest and discuss the topic in an informal manner.

According to VPU President Bob McKelvie, 50 applications for membership to the VPU have been received in the first week of the fall term, bringing the total membership to approximately 90 students.

Speakers

Other speakers scheduled for this semester will include: Congressman Richard Schweiker, of Montgomery County, on November 30; and Congressman William J. Green, a graduate of the Villanova Law School, on December 14.

The next debate will take place on Monday, October 26. New members are welcome.

SAM Lists Speakers, Plans Field Trips In Upcoming Weeks

The Society for the Advancement of Management held its first meeting on Thursday, October 1.

A schedule of the Society's activities was distributed, highlighted by the anticipated guest speakers who will be featured in the coming weeks.

Among these six speakers, SAM will present Mr. Dalton, vice-president of the International Glass Workers Union on October 15, and Mr. Casey, personnel representative for Robert Blair, national vice-president of the International Typographical Union on November 12.

There will also be movies and field trips in conjunction with the lectures. A movie, "The Role of Supervisors in Today's Company," was presented on October 8. The option for a field trip to either Allenwood Steel Co. or Atlantic Refining Co. was offered to the students at the first meeting.

Plans are being made for a party to be held at the Knights of Columbus Hall in Ardmore on October 24.

In addition to the distribution and discussion of the schedule, the members received an opening address from their moderator, Mr. Nally.

John Mikusa will continue to edit the Leader, SAM's magazine.

Kuehnelt-Leddihn Addresses Conservative Club Meeting

Dr. Erik von Kuehnelt Leddihn — first guest lecturer of the year — presented by the Conservative Club, spoke Thursday, October 8 on the Topic: "American Foreign Aid viewed from the Receiving end."

Dr. von Kuehnelt-Liddihn initially stated that his lecture is concerned with explaining the underlying handicaps which a democracy, such as ours, faces in formulating a sound Foregin Policy.

He stated that, "America is a tremendous island in the World Ocean" — a continent, physically and ideologically isolated from the religious and socio-economic problems of old world Europe and Asia. Because of our mass ideological conformity — democratic and economic institutions, we are unable to fully understand the factual problems ecountered by other nations. In Europe and Asia, there is no Ideological conformity — no unified politico-economic sphere but a variety of diverse governments each with their own political outlook.

The Doctor stated that we have overlooked these basic ideological differences among nations when distributing our foreign aid. He stated that too often we have abetted nations who have promised loyalty to us, but who are actually ensalved with a totalitarian ideology.

The Doctor posed this question: How can a democracy formulate a sound foreign policy? For one thing, the policy must be constructed under the cloak of secrecy, that is, to be effective it rests on surprise. Also, he stated, that in our society a foreign policy faces the problem of discontinuity — with national elections every four years a thorough and far-reaching policy is practically impossible.

The Doctor concluded his lecture with an over-all view of the American scene. Stating, that intellectualism in government is frowned upon by the American public; that a "Bane of Amateurism" has seeped into the high administrative positions in our government. The Doctor stated that the best intellectual minds should hold responsible offices and wisely direct America in the composition of a sound Foreign Policy — one based on unbias knowledge and construed with a serene outlook. Then and only then, can the Free World prosper.

A Goldwater Victory Is Imperative

By Jim Brennan Executive Editor

"The good Lord raised up this mighty Republic to be a home for the brave and to flourish as the land of the free-not to stagnate in the swamp land of collectivism—not to cringe before the bullying of communism."

With these words Senator Barry Goldwater accepted his Party's nomination for the presidency and thus offered himself to the American voter as a major determent to increasing governmental interference in our individual lives and the creeping rise of socialism.

Senator Goldwater is a man frequently misunderstood or not understood atall by segments of the populations partly because of their own apathy in finding out what the man represents and partly, because the press fails to present his true views.

Let us set the record straight and see what the Senator stands for, and what he will do, when he is elected president.

Goldwater unconditionally supports the purposes the United Nations was originally intended to serve. He believes the U. N. is not all it should be, but that it is a useful forum, and that it can still provide machinery for valuable conciliation among nations.

Member nations representing only ten percent of the world's population can command fully two thirds of the votes in the General Assembly. Senator Goldwater believes that some form ot weighted voting may have to be seriously considered and cites that responsible authorities have suggested a system based on populations, on contribution to U. N. costs, or on some combination of factors.

What about the nuclear test ban treaty? Senator Goldwater voted against the limited nuclear test ban treaty because all of our past relations with the Soviet Union demonstrate conclusively that the Soviets will abide by provision of any treaty or any agreement only so long as it is advantageous for them to do so.

He voted against it because we have not acquired enough knowledge about the effects that high yield nuclear weapons might have, not only on our communications systems but on the operability of our nuclear weapons systems as well. We do not know enough about the effect of the electromagnetic pulses to defend and protect the systems we now have, much less to develop new ones.

He also voted against it because the Joint Chiefs of Staff indicated that there are military disadvantages inherent in its provision.

The basic requirement for an effective U.S. policy in Southeast Asia is the decision — and the will to back it up — that victory is our goal. Sound military tactics call for the interdiction of supply lines. We must not again, as we did in Korea, tolerate a so called "privileged sanctuary" from which communism feeds its military aggressor in Vietnam.

Goldwater is a man of honesty and interiety who does not associte with the likes of a Bobby Baker or Billie Sol Estes. He believes our government should act with restraint and not as a giant octopus with grasping tentacles that "takes from the haves and gives to the have nots."

If our country is to progress under the postulates set forth by the Founding Fathers and in the manner that they intended, then Senator Barry Goldwater should and must be elected president on November 3.

A Question Of Survival

Human nature being what it is, man very often needs an example to drive a point home. The more forceful the example, the greater the impact on the individual and society as a whole.

During the last Student Government Association meeting of the 1963-64 academic year, a motion was brought up and subsequently approved that the University Administration encourage those who operate cars and trucks on campus to be cognizant of the 15 mile per hour speed limit.

A notice to this effect was to be distributed as the school year commenced, but there still remained a disturbing amount of speeding and careless driving.

Unfortunately, the recent accident involving Robert Cowan, Student Council treasurer, has provided a sad example for drivers on campus. The speed-limit and no-parking signs were not erected to enhance the beauty of Villanova, for more attractive objects can certainly be placed in their stead.

They were implanted to remind faculty members, truck drivers and all others who would drive on campus that, because of the lead large numbers of students attending Villanova, because of the almost ceaseless activity on campus, (particularly around Dougherty Hall), and because of what seems to be an inherent obliviousness on the part of all pedestrians toward traffic, a set speed limit would have to be established and maintained.

The various paths that wheel about the campus have space enough for one and sometimes two-way traffic. For this reason, the No Parking signs do not mean "parking for just a few minutes" because of this or that. They mean no parking, period.

Parking space on campus is, admittedly, at a premium and the administration could take steps to enlarge and improve these facilities, but until then, the no parking signs should be taken at their face value.

The size of the roads on campus enables quick transportation from building to building and it is only co-incidental that they also permit vehicular traffic. Just as nearly all the school facilities on campus are for the students, so are the roads, and the sooner this is realized by all, the safer Villanova will be — for all.

In Defense Of SGA

In view of the anguished howls of the student body concerning the new attendance system, The Villanovan would like to set the record straight. This system, which limits cuts to twice the amount of credits in each course and holds the penalty of failure of the course for cuts over this amount, has been erroneously blamed on the Student Government Association. Students have regarded the SGA with disdain because of this piece of legislation. In reality, the Administration was solely responsible for this change. During the last school year, the SGA proposed a motion to abolish all compulsory class attendance.

This motion was based on the view that students who are old enough to attend college are capable of judging whether they should attend class. This motion was passed by the SGA and went as far up the chain of authority as Father President, before being vetoed. The Administration instead initiated their own attendance change which is now the source of those anguished wails. The SGA in no way encouraged or helped to implement this legislation.

Citizenship For All

With the re-convening of the United States Supreme Court, the recently enacted Civil Rights Act of 1964 will again find itself in the news.

Senator Goldwater's non-prejudiced but controversial stand against the act is based on States Rights, and it is on this theory that opponents of the act are expected to begin their attacks. This touchy issue can also be argued from another standpoint, one that is perhaps more important than federal versus states rights. It involves property rights versus the rights of citizenship.

The advocates of property rights believe that an individual should be able to sell, lease, or permit the use of his possessions to anyone he wishes. Any attempt by the government to legislate in this area is but a prelude to eventual governmental take-over and control of private property. This position is in direct conflict with the public accomodations section of the Civil Rights Act, which provides that an individual be admitted to any hotel, motel, or restaurant without regard to race or color.

Contained within this concept of citizenship rights are not those of religion, press, assembly, or trial by jury. Citizenship rights are more subtle, but they would include the right to eat, drink, and sleep where one wishes, no matter who the individual or where he is.

Under the guise of property rights, Negroes have been, and in some instances still are, denied the rights and privileges of American citizenship. Although guaranteed the contents of the federal Constitution, the American Negro is forbidden the rights of an American citizen.

The U. S. Government has never denied the existence of property rights. In fact, former Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, in Congressional hearings stated that certain individuals could be prevented from entering a business establishment because of dress regulations, but not on the basis of color.

In the final analysis, the question is not one of states rights, federal rights or even of the government attempting to legislate morality. It is a question of prejudice, being given a cloak of respectability known as property rights, in conflict with the rights of American citizens whose skin pigmentation happens to be a little darker than that of others.

Goldwater, Johnson, And Civil Rights

By Bill Clark

One of the gravest injustices of the 1964 presidential campaign may be found in the attempt that is now being made to smear Senator Barry Goldwater as a segregationist or racist. Equally as absurd, and perhaps even more difficult to accept, is the amount of energy being expended to whitewash the civil rights record of President Lyndon Johnson.

Like the man himself, the civil rights record of Barry Goldwater is a frank and honest one. Unlike many contemporary politicians, Senator Goldwater was deeply involved in the civil rights movement long before it became a popular political issue.

The Record

Barry Goldwater ran on a reform ticket for Phoenix City Council in 1949. As a member of that Council, Goldwater voted to desegregate the restaurants at Sky Harbor Airport. The same Barry Goldwater — 15 years later and now a U.S. Senator — was to publicly endorse a public accomodations ordinance for the city of Phoenix.

In the spring of 1952, as the Chief of Staff of the Arizona Air National Guard, Colonel Goldwater issued an order that banned for the first time segregation in that state's Unit. In doing so, Goldwater enabled Arizona to become one of the first states in the nation to integrate its Air National Guard.

At a mass rally on October 21, 1951, Barry Goldwater contributed $200.00 to the N.A.A.C.P. On February 7, 1952 he contributed another $200.00 to the Phoenix Chapter of the N.A.A.C.P. and remained a member of that group until its leaders began attacking him politically. Goldwater continued to assist the Negro cause by remaining as a member of the discrimination-fighting Urban League.

Long before the various Negro organizations began to demand quota systems in employment, the Goldwater Department Store could boast of employing 17 Negroes out of a total force of 400 employees. This meant, that in an area having a .5% Negro population, 4% of the work force was of the Negro race — a ratio far greater than that demanded by the most stringent N.A.A.C.P. quota system!

I ask, are these the actions of a racist?

The Negro Looks at Barry

The attitude of Barry Goldwater towards the Negroes can best be summed up by quotes from the editors of two Negro publications. Chuck Stone, editor of the national Negro weekly, Afro-American, wrote that if Barry Goldwater is elected President, "one thing is certain: the Colored people will have a sympathetic ear to their demands."

Edward Banks, Negro editor of the Arizona Tribune, wrote "He (Goldwater) has done a great deal for Negro integration in Arizona and should be judged on that record. Arizona is one of the most liberal states in these United States when it comes to race relations, and Goldwater's influence has been a major factor." Would a racist invite such praise from these editors?

Goldwater Speaks Out

In his own writings, Barry Goldwater has made his position on civil rights crystal clear. "As a merchant, I feel that a man in business who advertises for customers. . . cannot deny that customer regardless of race, creed, or color . . ."

In The Conscience of a Conservative, Senator Goldwater wrote: "It so happens I am in agreement with the objectives of the Supreme Court as stated in the (1954) Brown decision. I believe that it is both wise and just for Negro children to attend the same schools as whites, and that to deny them this opportunity carries with it strong implication of inferiority."

In the Yale Political of 1962 Barry Goldwater is quoted as saying, "Morally, I do not think segregation is right. I think it is wrong." Do these sound like the statements of a racist?

It is also interesting to note that the latest report of the Fair Campaign Practices Committee clears Sen. Goldwater of all charges of "racism." To date (the Senator) has done nothing to inflame the race issue," said the Committee, "even though exploitation (of it) might be to his advantage." Barry Goldwater, by all objective standards, is neither a racist nor a segregationist.

The Johnson Record

The record of President Johnson presents a sharp contrast to that of Senator Goldwater. From his earliest ventures into political life, Lyndon Baines Johnson has consistently followed a segregationist line.

Beginning with his opposition in 1937 to a House anti-lynching bill, following right on through to his vote on April 1, 1960 opposing the establishment of a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission, and through some 16 other civil rights roll calls, Lyndon Johnson has faithfully followed the segregationist line.

The important thing to remember though, is not that President Johnson has voted a segregationist line — this is certainly his right — but rather it is the fact that, after a lifetime of indifference or hostility to the civil rights movement, he is now masquerading as a friend and sympathizer of the American Negro.

It was in the Madison, Wisconsin Capital Times of February 1960 that Lyndon Johnson said, and I quote: "I am not now and never have been an advocate of civil rights. I don't think I ever will be." ! ! !

The Choice

On November 3 of this year, the American people will go to the polls to choose their president. In regard to civil rights, they may select a man whose interest and activity in the cause of human equality and freedom extends throughout his entire life; or, on the other hand, they may send back to office a man whose interest in civil rights is apparently measured by the number of votes attached to it. The record is clear. The choice is not difficult.

Goldwater's Foreign Policy

by Steve Freind

Despite the many varied personal denunciations that are running through the current presidential campaign, the most important issue for the American voter to reflect upon is foreign policy. While it is not the opinion here that Barry Goldwater is the war-mongering demagogue that he is being labeled, it is necessary to delve into his opinions on this critical subject to appreciate his inability to lead the nation in international affairs.

Communism Only Evil?

It is true that the dangers of communism are indeed grave, but the Senator fails to realize that other evils exist in international affairs besides the communist tide. In his acceptance speech at the Cow Palace in July, Goldwater stated that communism is "the sole disturber of peace." It is views such as this that accounted for the downfall of freedom in Korea and Cina. In both instances, the United States supported leaders who were not communists. Our vernment illogically deduced that if they were not communists, they must necessarily be good and able leaders.

Both leaders, Sygman Rhee and Chiang-Kai-Shek, proved to be despotic dictators. The oppressed people of these two nations, suffering under such barbarious leadership, regarded the United States as assistants in tyranny and held the American government responsible for their plight. Such discontent sowed the seeds for communist domination and an overtrow was inevitable. Thus, these two nations were overrun by communism due to he exact philosophy whic Goldwater now proposes to combat it.

It is Senator Goldwater's opinion that if a nation is not completely anti-communist, the United States should have nothing to do with it. He neglects to realize the important fact that nations, by their nature, tend toward a paramount feeling of nationalism. Neutral nations are not to be condemned for looking first after the welfare of their own country. In fact, the Republican standard bearer has said the exact same thing in reference to our dealings in the United Nations. In regard to this instance, Goldwater feels that our own interests should supercede the interests of the United Nations as a whole.

Test Ban Treaty

Goldwater believes that Communist nations should be ignored, that the United States should have nothing to do with them and that breaking relations with these countries should be seriously considered. A fine example of the fallacy of such a view in his vote against the limited nuclear test ban treaty.

When this treaty came into existence, the Soviet Union and Red China were already having their idealogical differnces. The approval of such a treaty was to Red China an excusable deviation by Russia from the hard communist line laid down by Lenin. The Sino-Soviet split rapidly widened and at the present these two countries are spending most of their effort trying to win the communist satellites to their respective sides.

These satellites have been quick to size up the significance of his rift. No longer can Russia dictate her will to the nations of Eastern Europe. Countries such as Hungary, Poland and Rumania are now more intent on the prosperity of their own nations than on the success of the Communist doctrine. Rumania has just signed a reciprocal trade agreement with the United States and the entire European Communist bloc shows signs of breaking the chains of Soviet domination.

It is pure folly for Senator Goldwater to assert that the only way to deal with the communist threat is military strength, constantly holding over their head the threat of war. The United States has a far greater tool than military strength in their economic prosperity. Krushchev himself admitted that "before we can achieve the goals of communism, we must adopt more of a capitalistic system."

True, the communistic threat must always be reckoned with, but it is not entirely impossible that this threat can be defeated decisively in an economic battle.

Russia quite clearly sees that the capitalistic economic system is far more efficient than their own.

Goldwater In Ardmore Large Warm Reception Covers Major Issues

By Steve Morrison

Ardmore might easily have been mistaken for a Polaris Submarine base last week when scores of pacifists turned out to greet Senator Goldwater in Suburban Square. Armed with the latest pacifist slogans, they succeeded in drawing quite a bit of attention. Slogans such as: "Stop the world, Barry wants to get off", "Bread not bombs", and one reading: "Stop violence, defoliate central park" were held high for all war-mongers to see.

The demonstration seemed to make them all very happy. After all, a happy day in any demonstrator's life is when he (or she) has a chance to display their wares to the public.

Peace-Niks

Frolicking about with their signs prior to the senators arrival, the Haverford students were especially careful not to get their cowboy boots scuffed or to become entangled in anyone else's hair. True intellectuals to the last.

When the rest of the crowd started chanting "We want Barry", the peace-niks were quick to respond with a chorus of "LBJ . . . LBJ."

The anti-war theme of the demonstrators did serve to illustrate the fact that Senator Goldwater's campaign has not been successful in acquainting the public with his platform. There are many people who still believe that he is a war-mongering maniac.

Part of the reason for this failure to inform the voters is due to a press with liberal tendencies. When Senator Goldwater appears on TV there is no chance of his being misquoted. Unfortunately, his air time is too often listed as simply "Republican National Committee" or "Paid political announcement —Republican." These labels are not too inviting for TV viewers.

Peace Through Strength

His platform on foreign policy is simply "peace through preparedness." Goldwater believes that "only the strong can preserve freedom." This idea stems from the belief that a strong nation is more likely to be free from attack than a weak one.

Although the United States is the strongest power on earth, our foreign policy has been too weak compared to the policies of our enemies, as any map of world communist influence will plainly illustrate.

Goldwater's conservative beliefs in a strong foreign policy are opposed to the liberal's belief in endless, futile negotiations and concessions to our enemies. There is wisdom in the conservative stand on foreign policy.

Many claim that World War II would never have occurred had Hitler's requests for more territories been turned down from the first. Once Hitler realized how weak his enemy was, he of course asked for more and more — always promising an end to his demands, and always threatening war.

Many also claim that World War III will never occur if we let the communists know that we are too strong to be conquered. Instead, our weakness has let communism creep into our own hemisphere. The so-called "safe" policy of appeasement has put us into a dangerous position.

A Freshman's View On Orientation

by Ed Whiteley

How many of the incoming, innocent Freshman knew three months ago what we were letting ourselves in for? Some of us had, in passing, seen part of the campus and some of the buildings. Some had probably even been on campus previously, while many others had no idea of the size or shape of the University.

It's Big

Well, we that had never really been here found out what it looked like. It's big! There are a number of rather large buildings on it and the campus grounds cover quite a bit of territory. We notice something else on our first day. After a quick glance around the campus we find there is something more than the material things we see.

There is school spirit at the University, although a little hard to recognize, as it is embodied in the form of the OC's This highspirited group of Sophomores, with their white hats and blue armbands, represent the well known Wildcat spirit. In the ensuing days and weeks of orientation they had the task of building the fire of school spirit beneath us. They were also to teach us the many and fine school rules and traditions, such as saying hello to the nurses and everyone else.

Villanova Favored

'Way back in the days when we had decided to favor Villanova with our presence and they so graciously in return accepted us, we had not planned on this orientation business. Those of us who knew no college people did not have the least inclination as to the enlightenment about to be dealt us in the form of Orientation, and the hard and sometimes cruel hand of the Orientation Committee.

How happy we all were the first day of our orientation when the OC's allowed us to wear those magnificent looking beanies and told us we were to roll our pant cuffs up twice. This was a big day in our lives, and I'll just bet that everyone went right home wearing his or her beanie, that was just a little too big and the bowties, which were too small.

And since nobody had told us how to fix it we were a dark purple by the time we reached home. On reaching home we rushed in to show our parents and friends our glamourous adornments, and to tell them what a great school Villanova was — to let us go around all day with such attire.

Laughter

And, my friends, what did our parents and friends do? They laughed at us. They laughed at our beanies and bowties and made rude comments about our name buttons. Now right here we should have felt offended, but somehow we weren't. We felt a little humiliated, even a little silly. This is when some of us realized, a little late, that the regs we were wearing set us apart from the crowd as FROSH. Frosh — that foul sounding word emanating from the all powerful mouths of the local OC's.

Seriously though, I am behind the Orientation one hundred per cent. I personally think that, on the whole, the Orientation Committee has done a great job instructing us ignorant Frosh in the glorious ways of Villanova.

Civilian Dress

I would like to point out, though, that the OC's seem to have fallen down the last week of Orientation. There were many Frosh, prior to Muff Day, who had actually discarded their regs for civilian dress and they further mingled with the upper classmen by trespassing on the sidewalks and even cutting through the Quad. I am sure the OC's of next year will be more rigid with discipline and be on better guard for these nefarious crimes.

I would like to mention a few items regarding the lectures we Frosh were compelled to attend The first two of these lectures no doubt were excellently prepared speeches but they went for the most part unheard. The speaker's voice sounded as if he were just constantly talking without stopping, and when the words finally stopped reverberating we heard them as one jumbled mess. This mistake was remedied, however, in time for Dr. Mortimer Adler's lecture.

Dr. Adler's speech brings another point to my mind. Dr. Adler's lecture ended at approximately 9:25 p.m., lasting one hour and five minutes. Finishing this lecture he began a question and answer period. At 9:30 myself and several other Frosh left, including the gentleman with whom I rode back to the University after having gone home from school a few hours earlier. It is a half-hour drive to school from my house and longer for others. This would place the time at 10 p.m. at the earliest I could get home. The point is that we did have homework that night and we did have school the next day. Not knowing when Dr. Adler's answer period would end we chose the course we thought right and left. We meant no offense to Dr. Adler and if it appeared that any commuters did offend him, I apologize, but we had to get home sometime!

Last, best

The last of the compulsory series was, I believe, the best. The first thing that goes through most of your minds is "that's because there was a girl in that one". True. True. But this is not the only reason. The last forum was the most important and the most informative. It was the most important because it involved the life and spirit of the school.

It was the most informative because the speakers made it so by being concise and brief with no verbosity or overemphasis. The speakers told us what the'r organizations were and how to find them, and because of the last of the compulsary series I found the Villanovan and hope to have a long stay both here at the paper and at the University, naturally.

For example, only three per cent of Russia's farms are privately owned, yet last year they produced more than 46% of the Soviet's agriculture.

While strong precautions must be taken against communist advancement, a peaceful displaying of the fruits of democracy will prove greatly beneficial.

Communism is very real. It will never disappear merely by ignoring it. It must be dealt with in a mature, prudent fashion, using the gifts of liberty to their fullest advantage. As John F. Kennedy said in his Inaugural Address, "Let us never negotiate out of fear, but let us never fear to negotiate.

A Liberal Approach For Poverty Restores Dignity To Individual

By Bob Elschner

Today, in American society, poverty is viewed as an unnecessary evil that deprives the individual of his right to function properly. In a society such as ours where the individual must strive to perfect his capabilities in order that he may contribute to the betterment of his fellow members; it is realized that an individual lacking the material means cannot fulfill his obligation and persue his hopes and ideals.

With emphasis on education as a means to a fuller, richer life both spiritually and materially, the poor will not survive.

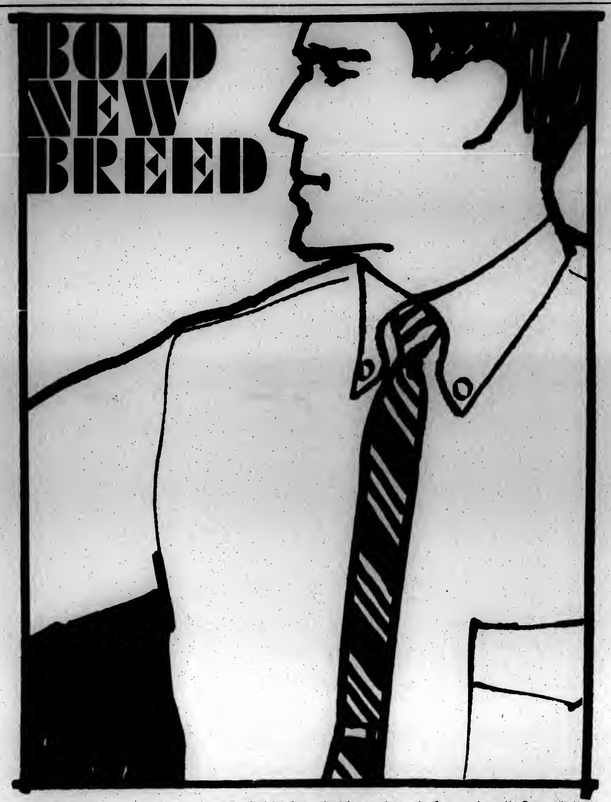
Basic Required

About 8 million families in the United States today have an income of less than $2,500 a year. In 1958, 14.3 per cent of families and single individuals in the U. S. had incomes of $2,000 a year or less and 22 per cent made less than $4,000 a year — the minimal salary for basic necessities. Nearly 7 million people depend on public assistance for all or part of the income they must have for basic remedies.

Under conditions such as these, does our federal government have any obligation? The liberal position is that it does. Under the democratic state, men have always attempted to improve and perfect human society, either personally or as a community or political endeavor. The social and political aspects of men such as Plato, Aristotle, Aquinas and Jefferson have all reflected this opinion.

Roosevelt

President Roosevelt during the era of the New Deal expressed the liberal ideal, "We have come to a clear realization of the fact that true individual freedom cannot exist without economic security and independence."



This is not a question of handouts or of taking from the rich to give to the poor, as dissenters might purport. It is rather the question of restoring to the unfortunate the dignity that is essential for one to live in our society, and at the same time to instill in him the responsibility that he has toward that society. Thomas Jefferson has said, "If a nation expects to be ignorant and free, in a state of civilization, it expects what never was and never will be."

Liberal Programs

If we believe that the state exists for the individual, then how can it neglect the poor? Poverty is irreconcilable if such a precept is upheld. For if poverty exists, then the state has not fulfilled the role for which it was created.

The liberal programs providing for measuring security against uncertainies of employment, of disabling accidents, of sickness and old age, and legislation to assist families in acquiring adequate housing and education for children, and the recent poverty program fostered by President Johnson, are the elements required to meet this need.

An' All That Jazz

By Barry Bornstein

WHERE IS JAZZ?

"Jazz is dead." "Jazz is a minority music." "Jazz is finished."

Chances are, that if you had caught wind of any of those contemporary eulogies for jazz, you'd be ready to light a candle or even trade in twelve Coltrane or Ramsey Lewis albums for one Rolling Pebbles Album or one Hairy Insect Album. Don't! For Jazz is here. And there's more to that than what strikes the retina. For, as we see it, the present and future of jazz lies right on the college campus—with Villanova being the most fertile field.

A recent comment from Downbeat on the collegiate jazz festivals proclaimed that "it is quite plain that jazz is no longer a minority music," and the resurgence of jazz on the collegiate campus is the reason. A survey of the larger jazz companies shows that jazz sales have been climbing steadily. Here in Philadelphia, the only Jazz station, WHAT-FM, has recently increased to 24 hours—another sign. These are only some of the indicators. So save your matches and hang onto those albums. More sermons later . . .

Well Barry Goldwater is finally starting to make sense—Now don't wave the YAF Flag in my face or look for birches in my backyard—but just look at the headlines: "If Elected, Goldwater Says, 'I'll Send Ike To Vietman" — a practical solution to the Eisenhower problem.

Caught Wynton Kelly and his trio at the SHOWBOAT last week—and if there ever was a left hand that was sadistic to keyboards—he owns it.

Jazz in town this week:
Pep's—Cannonball Adderly.
Showboat—Herbie Mann.

To those of you students who sported signs at the Goldwater Rally in Ardmore last Tuesday saying "Barry Loves Bombs"—I have one comment for you—I DO NOT!

This week's Hot Horn Award goes to the 17 Xavier University students who successfully staged a boycott of Cincinnatti's new Playboy Club, and picketed there for 3 days. However word has it that Publisher Hugh Hefner has resorted to dirty tactics and called out the S.P.C.A. to halt this undue cruelty inflicted upon bunnies.

Despite a sudden rush on sales—there are still a limited number of Jazz At Villanova albums left. They're in the Student Activities Office — second floor Dougherty Hall.

Collegiate Indecision Engenders Adult Vacillation And Irresolution

By Jeff Radowich

Practically all of us, at one time or another, have seen a New Year's Eve party. The atmosphere is joyous and the joy is contagious.

The revelers remain happy until the morning after, when the relentless light of reality restores its equilibrium.

Too often, unfortunately, the custom of making New Year's resolutions also follows a depressing pattern: sincerity conquered by the temptations of everyday living.

There's something pathetic in the spectacle of adults making and breaking the same determinations every year. It shows a despicable dearth of moral strength and self-reliance.

Analogous to this situation is the twice-a-year fervor of us college students.

Inevitability

We have all heard, and made, the same firm decision to study more this semester, to bring up our average, to fulfill the expectations of our parents.

Freshmen are admonished by the Blue Key to "get a good start"; upperclassmen are urged by their Deans and counselors to "settle down and study." A wealth of advice is available on this topic.

Yet our resolution disintegrates; our backbone breaks under the pressure of daily stress. Self-mastery is forgotten in the ecstasy of little or no academic discipline.

This inevitability in us is just as pitiable as it is in our adult counterparts.

For, as we all know, our generation will inherit the earth and re-mold it in our own image and likeness. The collegiate crowd is being relied upon to lead this reformation. Yet, as should be obvious, irresolution is incompatible with leadership.

The Nub

The obvious objection to this line of reasoning is that youth is always immature and unstable. This objection is not valid.

If your admitted goal in life, in the largest sense, is self-perfection, you must acquire the means of self-perfection during your formative years..

As Dr. Mortimer Adler put it, you must acquire in college the skills of learning in order to become an educated man.

The nub of the problem; therefore is a lack of perception concerning the real nature of our four year stay here at Villanova.

The World's Future

As the beachhead of our adult life, the academic, religious, economic and social habits we form will either impede or facilitate our invasion and eventual domination of the hostile territory, that strange combination of conflicting urges which is the human being.

For it must be clear that we struggle, not against life, but against ourselves. Existence is a series of daily skirmishes with the enemy, the success of which is a function of how well-equipped for battle we are.

The enemy is well-equipped with vacillation, weakness and irresolution. Our weapons are constancy, moral strength and self-reliance. The time is now; the battleground is our minds; the stake is the world's future.

The Autumn Leaves

By Sam Osokow

Last Friday night I had the pleasure of coughing up three bills to take my sweetie to the Student Government's Autumn Leaves Dance.

Before I go any further, allow me to give the decorating committee a little praise. Instead of coming to a drab field house, by their use of a gigantic bed sheet we came to a circus tent. So congratulations on a job well done future Clyde Beattys.

Theme

It took me a while to figure out why they chose the name, Autumn Leaves, for the dance. One of my top secret informers told me how this came about.

Some weeks ago an enterprising member of the Student Government Association got the bright idea of selling all the dead leaves on campus to the decorating committee on some pretense.

The decorating committee, knowing it had been duped by a mind on the par with that of Billie Sol Estes, persuaded the Student Government to throw a dance.

Name

This accounts for the name and the excess of dirty leaves hanging from that big bed sheet. I, for one, am glad there weren't any banana peels laying on the grounds.

On the card that night they had two completely different bands, which alternated every half hour. Both of these bands put down a couple pounds of sound.

The first band was composed strictly of Spanish - American war veterans, who played the kind of music that appeals to Fred Astaires. However, they sounded mighty fine. They really did.

The second band was composed of first and second graders from a nearby elementary school, who all bore a striking similarity to Ringo Starr. (However, I was later informed that they preferred Sally Star.) These children played strictly rock and roll and they had everyone in the tent working out.

In other words the first band had class, while the second had brass; consequently, it seemed like all the dudes that went to the dance liked them as much as this one did.

Sasparilla

I just hope they got rid of all those old tin cans of root beer and sasparilla, that they made somebody in the band plug after every number. I wonder who put the "out of order" sign on the water fountain.

In bringing this sample of epic prose to an end, I must say that a good time was enjoyed by all because of, or in spite of, depending on how you look at it, the Student Government Association.

Sounds Of Note

by Bill McCloskey

Look for Philadelphia's WRCV to return to Cleveland and KYW to take over the 1060 spot on the AM dial here. The FCC ordered the swap in a decision on a lengthy case. Indications are that KYW, which has some of the highest Cleveland ratings, will return to Philadelphia with a Rock and Roll format to give WIBG a fight for listeners with that particular taste. It won't be hard to switch from station to station, the pair will be neighbors at 990 and 1060. The last challenge WIBG had was from WIP. The management there quickly saw the light and attacked from behind, five years ago, to slowly take over the daytime number one slot with their hip middle of the road policy.

It's our understanding that WIBG-FM may go Jazz when the FCC forces them (and other simulcast stations in major cities) to separate programming next August 15.

WWVU covered Senator Goldwater's local visit with a news staff of five. In addition to their own reports, the station also covered the Ardmore proceedings for the almost 80 stations in the UPI/Audio chain and WXUR Media.

St. Alice's in Upper Darby is featuring the "The Imperials" an up-beat combo, this Sunday at their college and over 18 dance. (Take it from a weekly observer, the girls have improved of late. fellas.)

Sailing Club Races In Fall Championship On Schuylkill River

By Jerry Bruderle

The Villanova Sailing Club races this weekend on the Schuylkill River as the elimations for the Fall Championship at Annapolis get underway.

Villanova will be racing against teams from Drexel, Georgetown, Haverford, Lehigh, Navy, Penn, St. Joseph's and Swarthmore. Races will be held both Saturday and Sunday, and three schools will qualify for the finals. The champions'p races will be held on November 21 and 22, with Navy as the host team.

Last Home Race

After this weekend, there will be one more home race, providing the weather holds up. Last Saturday and Sunday, the Middle Atlantic Intercollegiate Sailing Association championships had to be postponed at both Monmouth and Princeton, N.J. due to tthe strong winds.

Commodore Joe Linsalata has hopes of a fine season with the addition of 4 Sophomores from last year's Freshmen team which won the M.A.I.S.A. freshmen title. In fact, Linsalata feels that Villanova could again take the Freshmen championships. Harvey Ludlam and Bob Guarini are two experienced sailers and could keep the Frosh on top.

Experience Return

Last year, the varsity had a number of disqualifications due to inexperience, but that should be taken care of this year. Jay Hollenbach, Rick Holwell, Jay Glenn and Eric Moore are experienced and capable sailers. They'll have to be good to qualify because Pennsylvania, Princeton, and Rutgers all have fine teams and will be hard to beat on the Schuylkill Navy alawys has one of the strongest teams in the East.

Right now the Sailing is trying to get new members to join. Anyone interested will be instructed on rules and tactics, which often mean the difference in a close race. These classes will be geared for beginners, so that a lack of sailing knowledge should not keep anyone away. So far these meetings have been fairly well attended but there is room for more.

The Sailing season runs in the fall until the championship in November, and starts again in the spring around the end of March.

Athletic Department Offers Football Book Featuring 1964 'Cats

This year, for the first time, the Villanova Athletic Department has made available to the public its Football Fact Book, which is normally reserved for members of the press and radio-TV media.

It contains complete and up to date records of all Villanova teams and stand players of the past and present. Coach Alex Bell also gives his views on the campaign. Photos and sketches of the top 40 players on the squad is another feature of this book, plus a rundown of the Wildcats' opponents this year.

Price of the brochure is only $1.00. These books can be purchased at the Athletic Ticket Office in the Field House.

Joe Kulharich remained complacent, though. His star-studded tenure at Notre Dame had prepared him for such tragedies. (They claim that during Joe's stay at Notre Dame, hardware stores in South Bend enjoyed unparalled prosperity in selling rope. Kuharich, it is reported, retaliated by using isometric contraction to strengthen his neck).

Company

Kuharich didn't really start to worry until the plane ride home. Then, anticipating the reaction of the loyal Philadelphia citizenry, he decided that discretion was the better part of valor. At International Airport, Joe hurriedly purchased a ticket for the West Coast. Stopping at the desk to pay his fare, Kuharich discovered that it wouldn't be a lonely trip. Gene Mauch was waiting in the lobby.

Delaware Preview

By Al Lupcho

Last year, coach Dave Nelson presented to the University of Delaware, its finest team in the history of the school. Last year's edition of the Blue Hens romped over its eight opponents on the way to achieving the UPI National Small College Championship, the Lambert Cup, and the Middle Atlantic Conference crown.

This year, the Blue Hens bring 2-1 record into the confines of Wildcat Stadium. Their only loss, a big upset to little Gettysburg, broke a 13 game winning streak. Fourteen lettermen are back to insure a mighty front line and a solid, experjenced backfield.

Leading the Hens into battle will be senior captain, Ron Bianco. Ron, a sprited team leader, doubles at offensive end and defensive corner back. The Blue Hen line must be respected and is considered one of the best lines in small-college football. Lettermen John Gibbons and Bill Spanger are returning tackles and Herb Slattery will fill in at a guard post with Bert DiClemente.

The ever dangerous backfield is led by triple-threat quarterback, Tom VanGrofski. Powerful Mike McCrann is back at fullback and halfback posts will be filled by lettermen, Bill Hopkins and Paul Mueller.

There is no doubt that coach Dave Nelson, author of the now famous "Winged-T" offense, will bring an upset-minded team to do battle with the Wildcats. They can make amends for their only loss by defeating the unbeaten Wildcats. Villanova has been victorious in three out of the four previous meetings with Delaware.

Wildcat Rugby Team Battles Manhattan To 0-0 Deadlock

By Bob McIntyre

Villanova's rugby club played to a deadlock tie, 0-0 on Saturday morning, against a strong team from New York, the Manhatten rugby club.

Wind Big Facor

The main factor in the egg-shaped score was the north west wind blowing in across the north goal, at about 20 m.p.h. Manhattan had the wind with them for the first half but the furthest they could penetrate was to the 20 yard line, and the same thing happened to the Cats during the second half.

Defence

Villanova and Manhatten both fielded very strong defensive units and they proved why they are rated tops in their field as neither team ever got any real offensive drive moving.

The Cats move up to the land of the Nittany Lions next week to face a tough Penn State club Their schedule after that meeting goes as follows:

Schedule

Oct. 31—First Troop (Home)
Nov. 7—Jefferson Medical School (Home)
Nov. 8—Lehigh (Away)
Nov. 14—Open
Nov. 21—Phiadelphia Rugby Club (Home)
Nov. 28—Seven Aside Tourn. (New York)

Villanova Harriers Defeat St. Josephs In Season's Opener

by Steve Freind

Led by Dave Hyland's record breaking performance, Villanova's cross country team opened its campaign on a successful note by trouncing St Joe's' 19-42. Hyland, a senior from New Brunswick, N.J., blazed over the five mile Belmont Plateau course in 26:46.0 to eclipse Vic Zwolak's 1963 record by 26 seconds. Sophomore Lou Kotekas finished second, also shading Zwolak's mark with a 26:48 clocking

Overall, the 'Cats placed seven of the first ten finalists. Tom Sullivan notched third in 27:17.0 and the Ferkoo brothers, Mike and Marty, finished six and seventh. Bob Cubbin and Jim Orr rounded out theVillanova scoring, placing eighth and ninth respecively.

aerial for 35 yards and a touchdown. He also showed the effects of game experience as his ball handling and faking were greatly improved over past performances. Bellotti came on late in the game and directed the 'Cat offense to five straight first downs. He looked particularly impressive on rollouts, scrambling for 39 yards on four carrics.

Defense

As usual, the Wildcat defense sparkled. Atkinson, John McDonnell and Mike Strofolino led the 'Cat charge which limited the Titans to 53 yards overland. Detroit fullback Fred Beier, who finished thirteenth in rushing nationally last year, was limited to 34 yards in 11 attempts. The Titans found the air route little better, connecting on only 10 of 31 passes for 129 yards while having three aerials hijacked.

Freindly Foolishness

The Genius Of Philadelphia

By Steve Freind

The city of Philadelphia is noted for many things. There's Independence Hall with its Liberty Bell, Fairmount Park with Sonny Liston and the northern section with its playful riots. But perhaps the City of Brotherly Love is best noted for its ability in trading away her athletes at the most opportune times.

Take Don Cardwell. A few years back, the Phillies braintrusts decided that Don had seen better days so they shipped him to Chicago. Cardwell made the Philly brass look like prophets by promptly hurling a no hitter in his first outing with the Cubs.

Then there's Jack Sanford. After a few good campaigns with the Phils, it was deemed that Jack's sore arm meant the end of his career. Off to San Francisco went Mr. Sanford, to a twenty win season and a pennant.

The list goes on and on. Curt Simmons is currently pitching in the World Series after notching 18 regular-season triumphs for the Cardinals. If memory serves correct, this is the same Curt Simmons that was sent out to pasture five years ago on an outright release. The Phillies did get something in return, though—gas from their fans when Curt proceeded to demolish them with as much regularity as Goldwater's contradictions.

Another Chapter

Sunday saw another glorious chapter written in our city's logbook of great exchanges. This time it was the Eagles' turn to display their swapping prowess. Sonny Jurgeson, the Birds' wayward quarterback, had gone to the Washington Redskins in return for the Skins' bible-toting tosser, Norman Snead. (Not a bad exchange, scotch for milk). In the first four contests, the Eagles and Snead had not exactly set the world on fire. They had managed only to break even and their passing attack was about as potent as their baseball brethren's bats in late September. (Nevertheless, they could still breathe).

Philly fans were beginning to realize why Snead received more boos in his stay at Washington than Bobby Baker. (Snead claimed that his failure in Washington was due to the fact that he played in the new Washington stadium, built by one Matthew McCloskey. Seems he was always catching cold in the graft draft).

The Skins, however, had fared even worse. Jurgenson had failed to assume the role of the great redeemer that Coach Bill McPeak had cut out for him. In their four outings, Washington managed to keep its record unblemished by a single win. The Eagles would have to go some to make the Snead-Jurgeson trade look bad, but then Philadelphia teams always were great in the clutch. (Especially when clutching their throat).

The Eagles knew that it wasn't their day from the very start. The sight of Sonny Jurgenson taking the field sober is enough to shatter the morale of any team. The red headed fireballer, looking trimmer than ever before. (his waist had shrunk to a remarkable size 39), proceeded to demolish Jerry Wolman's enthusiasm by heaving five touchdown strikes.

Intramural Program Includes Football, Swiming, And Golf

By Jim Proud

The Intramural Football League has once again been expanded and now is composed of 63 teams. The Intramural Department wishes to announce that the games rained out the first week of the season will be played on the fourth and fifth of November, if the weather complies.

The annual swimming and diving championships will held on the fifteenth of this month in the University pool, in the basement of the Field House. The meet will begin at 4:30 with applications being accepted until 3:00 the same day.

The golf tournament has also been fixed as to time and place. It will be held at the Valley Forge Golf Club on the afternoon of Thursday the twenty-second of October. Applications can be picked up at the Intramural office this week.

The Cross Country meet was held last week and the winner was the same as last year. The leading harrier was Mike Mulvey, a Sophomore, in a time of nine minutes and twenty-one seconds. Second was Gerry McAteer and in the runner-up position Tom Perlitz.

Connell's Corral Stampedes Again

by Steve Freind

Employing one of the most blistering ground games seen on the Main Line in years, Villanova's unbeaten Wildcats raced to their fourth straight victory, hammering Detroit's powerful Titans 34-0 in a Homecoming Day spectacular. The game was decided up front as the 'Cats line ripped their heavier opponents to shreds, springing the Pony backfield loose for 259 yards. The Detroit line, averaging 227 lbs. was unable to cope with Atkinson and company, as Bell's Bombers rambled to five first half touchdown and coasted the rest of the way.

Connell Again

Once again, Dave Connell set off the Villanova offensive explosion, racing 15 yards at 9:52 of the opening stanza to start off the day's scoring. Five minutes later, Connell struck again, flipping a six yard touchdown strike to John Kelleher, who tied a Villanova record by snagging two scoring aerials. For good measure, Connell ran for the conversion and the 'Cats had a 14-0 lead at the end of the first quarter.

After the Titans were forced to punt from their 42, Connell put the rest of his stable in action. Mostly on short bursts by Joe Santomauro, the 'Cats reached the Detroit 34 before Tom Brown went to work. Brown, the watch pocket fullback who chewed up 62 yards overall to boost his rushing average to 7 yards a crack, bolted up the middle through a gaping hole for 34 yards and a score. Jim Case added his first conversion of the day and the 'Cats led 21-0.

Four minutes later, the Bombers were in the scoring column again as soph quarterback Billy Andrejko rifled a 33 yard aerial to Kelleher. Case again converted.

Villanova added its final tally with four minutes left in the half on a 2 yard plunge by Chip Bender, set up by Tom Ferrainolo's interception. Ferrainolo, a sophomore, was one of the outstanding performers on the field the entire day, recovering two fumbles along with his interception and setting up two Wildcat scores.

Second Unit Stars

One of the brightest spots in the 'Cats romp was the performance of the second unit. At the beginning of the campaign, Bell felt that the 'Cats would have to acquire depth in order to enjoy a successful season. During the first three games, the green team was able to move the ball, but their defense needed improvement. In the Detroit tilt, however, there was no noticeable letdown when the first unit was off the field. This added strength should prove invaluable in the season homestretch.

Among the top performers for the 'Cat subs were soph quarterbacks Bill Andrejko and Jerry Bellotti. Andrejko enjoyed a perfect passing day, connecting on his only

Tiger End

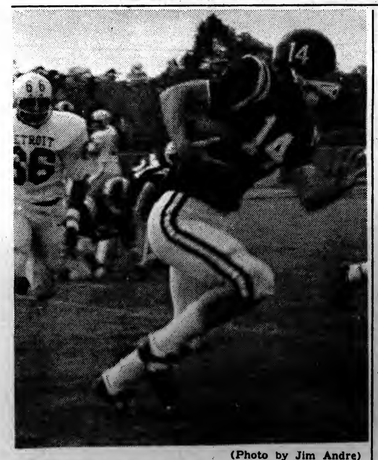
The official information on John McDonnell reads, ". . . . makes a habit of throwing opposing backs for losses." Zorro may come "Out of the night . . ." but he has nothing on McDonnell who half the time seems (to the oppsition's ball-carrier) to come from nowhere. (A mintue and a half to go in the third period.) The ball is hiked. Suddenly, an unexpecting Titan quarterback is it, knocked for a 14 yard loss. Tackle — McDonnell quoth the announcer. You could almost hear the next Detroit huddle—"Nice blocking guys!" "So who can block that guy!" Ah, the woes of a quarterback who faces such a line.

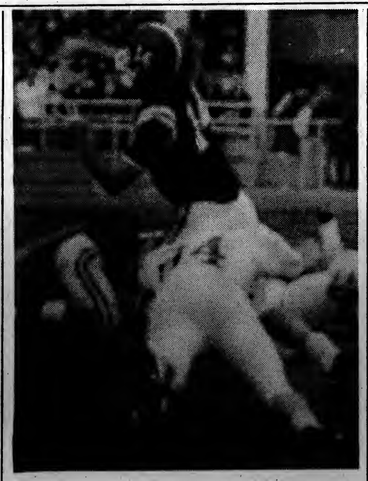
Like Last Year



Last year McDonnell sparked the victory over the Titans by an interception-touchdown. One of the Cats top defensive linemen, John is an excellent tackler and a red dog expert. On offense, his blocking ability is unquestioned and although not an outstanding pass receiver he has the hands when the situation arises.

Challenged only by Mike Strofolino for the position of team orator, John has already put in rally appearances and is planning a speaking tour. Pete Retzlaff beware!

Former Opponents Team Up



The 6-0 foot 200 pound end came to Villanova from St. Thomas More High School in Philadelphia. In Phiadelphia's Catholic League, he opposed several of his present teammates, and joins one of them now as team co-captain. A great competetor, whose performances are as consistent as they are outstanding, John is a natural team leader.

Coach Bell expresses his feelings by saying, 'If I had eleven players who all had McDonnell's attitude, I could beat any team, anywhere." Besides his cavortings on the gridiron, John is a dean's list student. This guy McDonnell dosen't do badly for himself, eh? I hear the tiger licking his chops at the thought of the juicy morsels awaiting him next Saturday, an offensive end — defensive back — team captain, a triple-threat quarterback, and a hard-hitting fullback. Eat 'em up Cats!

RUNNING. Quarterback Dave Connell prepares to elude Detroit defender enroute to 15 yard touchdown run in first quarter in Saturday's Homecoming action. John Kolmer supplies the blocking.

PASSING. Connell unloads 10 yard completion despite the efforts of two Titan linemen.

RESTING. After a hard day's work Connell watches the closing minutes of the game from the sidelines. 'Cats romped for fourth straight win to stay unbeaten.

Villanovans Elect Johnson President In Student Mock Presidental Poll

By Tom Bruderle

President Lyndon B. Johnson was elected President of the United States in Villanova's mock Presidential poll held, last week over Senator Barry Goldwater. Although the entire student body was eligible to vote, a little more than a third of the students actually participated.

The official count gave Mr. Johnson 946 votes and Senator Goldwater 565. Twenty-four were listed as "undecided" while eight others were declared invalid.

The President rolled up majorities in all four classes against his Republican counterpart with the freshmen giving him his largest plurality, 112 votes. The closest contest was in the sophomore class where Mr. Goldwater lost by 67 votes.. The freshmen class had the largest turnout followed by the sophomore, junior and senior classes.

The class breakdown is as follows:

Class	Johnson	Goldwater
1965	194	91
1966	204	125
1967	208	141
1968	312	200

Thirty-six seminarians also voted with the President overwhelming the Senator, 28 to 8.

Colleges Not All Given

As the voters received their ballots, they were asked to list the college they were in as well as choosing their candidate, listing their party affiliation and giving a brief reason for their vote. Unfortunately, not all students listed their respective college and an accurate tabulation of the college selections cannot be given.

Nevertheless, nearly two-thirds of the voters did comply and some indication of the rela-

Variety Show, Concert, Game Highlight Parents' Weekend

By Joe DiStefano

Villanova students invite their parents to the annual Parents' Weekend on the weekend of October 30 to November 1. The Blue Key promises that it will be even better than last year's festival.

The Variety Show on Friday night, October 30, under the direction of John Casey, will begin the weekend. There will be an address by University President the Rev. John A. Klekotka, OSA, and by the chairman of the weekend activities, John Smock. Included in the fine entertainment will be the Glee Club, the Band, folksinger Jim Croce, the Nurses' Glee Club, and Villanova's folksingers, the Spires.

Registration

The next morning there will be registration in the Field House. The parents will receive a favor as remembrance of the weekend. After registration the parents will have an opportunity to talk things over with the Deans of the various colleges.

After the more curricular activities of the morning, the parents will have a special opportunity to watch one of the most popular extra-curriculars of the University, as the Wildcats play the Xavier Musketeers. The Student Government Association President Tom Furst will welcome all at half-time.

Concert

In the evening the parents are invited to relax and enjoy a concert at 8:15 in the Field House. The concert will be given by the Schola Cantorum of New York.

The next morning at 11:45 the festivities will close with a Solemn Mass and an address by Father Klekotka.

With the emphasis on quality not quantity, this should be a great opportunity for parents to see Villanova's campus, and to have an enjoyable time.

Conservative Fulton Lewis III Highlight Parents' Weekend

By Walt Baginsky

"Liberalism vs. Conservatism" will be the topic of the Villanova Forum debate as Fulton Lewis III and James A. Burkhart cross swords on Wednesday October 28 in the Field House.

Fulton Lewis III

Eight p.m. is designated the commencing hour for this third in a series of cultural events offered by the Villanova Forum for the 1964-65 school year.

This no-holds-barred debate offers to provide the Villanova scene with a novel and exciting means of airing current political issues on both sides of the political spectrum. The University is honored to have two such articulate, clear-thinking young men of conviction purport their belief on the Main Life..

Fulton Lewis III, an eloquent advocate of the need for conservatism in America today, is currently National Field Director and a member of the Board of Directors of Young Americans for Freedom, the Nation's largest conservative youth organization.

Mr. Lewis is known not only for his contributions to the National Review Magazine, Human Events and the New Guard Magazine, but also for his appearances on national television programs with David Brinkley and David Susskind. He also frequently substitutes for his father, Fulton Lewis Jr., on the latter's news commentary program emanating from Washington, D.C. He was a Research Director for the House Committee on Un-American Activities of the U.S. Congress and served as narrator and technical director of the controversial film, "Operation Abolition."

An ardent spokesman for the liberal stand, Professor Burkhart, who teaches political

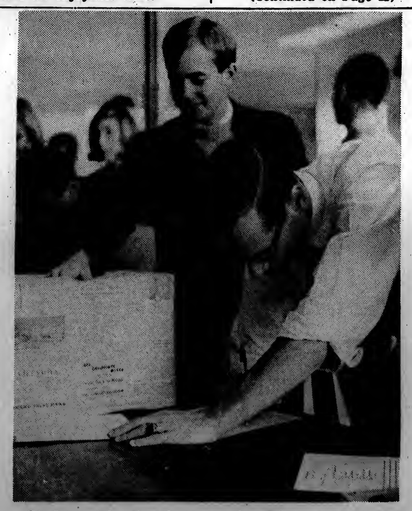
Mr. Banmiller Speaks To Student Congress, Two Motions Passed



By Tom Krause

The Student Congress meeting of October 14 resulted in the passing of two motions: one concerning the compiling of an IBM class listing to be sent to the student activities office, and the other, the sponsoring of a fund-raising drive to benefit the John F. Kennedy Memorial Library.

Mr. Paetrus Banmiller, chairman of the student liason committee of the Alumni Association, spoke to the SGA members on the advantages of his organization. He stated, "Alumni contacts are important. You can get help from the alumni in many ways." He suggested that all seniors attend the buffet supper to be held on October 22 by the Alumni Association.

President of the SGA Tom Furst introduced the committee chairmen who gave reports on the various activities in which they are engaged. Rusty Miller, Dave Moore, and Jack Ryan

Belle Air Editor Williams Presents New Staff, Theme

The 1965 Belle Air has announced its theme, a new look and a new staff. The Editor-in-Chief Bob Williams has also announced some important news concerning the senior section of the yearbook.

The theme for 1965 edition of the Belle Air is: "As We (the class of 1965) See Villanova." Williams said that this will entail a complete revamping of the book compared to past editions. In his words, "The 1965 Belle Air will present an entirely new concept in Villanova yearbooks."

He continued by saying that this new look will be presented by the use of professional photography, and a minimum of captions and copy. This concept will be presented through the use of modern layout and large expressive pictures.

Staff

This year's staff which will aid Williams in producing this edition include the following editors: Faith Connor—managing editor; Dave Moore—business manager; Jim Whalen and Mary Price—senior co-editors; Al Verdi and Tom Sebastin — co-University editors.

Other editors are: Maryanne Roland—nursing; Gene Bove—fraternities; Jack Kelly—theatre; Tom Dabney — activities; Bill Tucker — undergraduate; Roseanna Boylan — social; Al Sallee—sports; Andria Carro — typing; Mary Kay Swift — exchange; and Bill McCloskey — copy editor.

Williams noted that all history forms are due October 22, and all senior pictures must be taken at Carl Wolf studios no later than October 30 or no picture will be shown in the yearbook. He added that no credit will be given to those seniors who do not fill the forms out for any activities in this year's book.

Young Republicans To Attend Rally At Convention Hall

The Villanova Collegiate Young Republicans will attend a rally in Convention Hall in Philadelphia to hear Senator Barry Goldwater speak at a $100-a-plate dinner. Balcony tickets are on sale at the price of $2.

Transportation will provided for those interested in attending the affair. Anyone needing a ride should visit 20 Sheehan Hall before tonight.

The Young Republicans have announced the selection of a new moderator for their organization. Mr. John Stephenson, professor Law School, and a graduate of Princeton, Harvard and Yale, will take over the duties of moderator.

Professor Stephenson addressed a rally of a few hundred Republican supporters on presidential preference election day last Thursday in one of his first actions as moderator. Later that evening he spoke before the Young Republicans at their meeting.

In later developments, Chairman Don Franz has lodged a complaint against one of the poll workers in the election for wearing an LBJ button. The complaint has been registered with the Student Government Association.

Local campaigning for the national election will also be carried out by the club. Among their activities will be the distribution of campaign literature in the environs. Those interested in this work are advised to contact Franz. They have also been active in Philadelphia headquarters for Goldwater and Miller.

Concerning guest speakers, the Young Republicans are now in the process of obtaining a noted lawyer from New York City. His talk will treat of Goldwater's views on federal aid to Catholic schools. This interesting topic will probably be discussed in the last week of October at the next Young Republican meeting.

CCD Outlines Plans For Fall Semester; O'Rourke Moderator

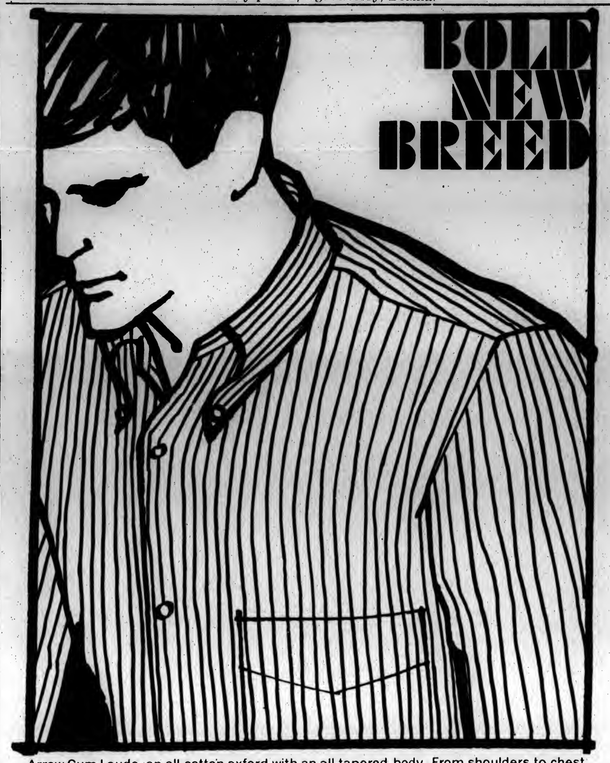
The CCD has outlined its plans for the fall semester. The organization headed by Father John O'Rourke OSA is composed of 12 Villanova students and 30 students from Rosemont and Chestnut Hill.

The plans contain weekly trips to the Pennhurst Institution for the mentally retarded to help give basic instructions in religion. Also the organization will help the public school students in the area.

A prospective plan is to undertake a series of inter-faith discussions whereby a group of Villanova students will invite groups from other schools to share religious concepts.

The Pennhurst trips are Tuesdays 2:30 to 5:30 p.m.

Literary Society Associates With Concept In Book Survey



The Literary Society will hold a meeting Thursday, October 29 at 10:30 a.m. in 210 Vasey Hall to discuss the preliminary results of a literary taste poll conducted by its members. At the present time the society is involved in a survey in conjunction with Concept magazine in order to determine what Villanovans read and why.

Resident and day students from all divisions of the school are being polled regarding their taste in literature and periodicals. Also, they have been polled on their extra-curricular reading habits.

The poll consists of questions concerning the recent books students have read. Also, they are asked what type of books they prefer, e.g. History, Drama. Since it is an in-depth poll, the results should truly represent the Villanova students' interest in reading. An article is also planned in Concept which will reveal the final results of the survey.

Anyone who has not been contacted by a member of the society or Concept, and who wishes to participate in the poll, should leave a note in either of the two organization's mailboxes located in the SGA office on the second floor of Dougherty Hall. Polls are also avilable from Tom Krause in the Villanovan office across the hall from the SGA office.

The results of this poll will help in defining certain books to be discussed at symposia.

Villanova Playbox Presents Brecht's 'Mother Courage'

The first local production of Bertolt Brecht's dramatic masterpiece Mother Courage will be presented by the Villanova University Playbox October 30-31, November 6-8, and November 13-14.

Epic Chronicle

Bertolt Brecht is best known, perhaps, as the foremost exponent of the "epic" theatre, a form of presentational theatre which makes use of narrative devices, including song, to "show" a story without a pretense to realism. In Mother Courage, a chronicle of the Thirty Years' War, Brecht probes the horrors of war and the terrors of greed.

Carol Hodgson, a recent graduate of the University of Hawaii and presently a graduate assistant in the theatre Department at Villanova, plays the inimitable Mother Courage, who, in her relentless struggle for survival, pulls her trades wagon through Sweden, Poland, and Germany, following the war, providing her livelihood.

Cast

Her three children Eilif, Swiss Cheese, and Catherine, whom she loses one by one in the course of the action, are played by Dennis Ciesil, Ed Hagan, and Judy Stone. Already familiar to Playbox audiences are Jack Black, Ken Resinski, and Mitzie Smythe who also play principal roles in the production. Others in the cast include Paul Norton, Paul Buckley, Milton Brutten, James Mason, Bob Walsh, Alice Ciesil, Mike Sutherland, John Crosson, and Mary Moesel. The production is directed by Richard A. Duprey and designed by Thomas F. Nevins.

Box office hours at the Villanova Playbox are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday. Tickets are available at $2 for general admission and $1.25 for students. Performances are start at 8 p.m.

Librarians Slate Speakers For Annual Fall Conference

By Steve Buck

Villanova's Fifth Annual Fall Library Conference will be held on Saturday, October 24, at 9 a.m. The conference, sponsored by the Department of Library Science, offers a wide selection of topics, capable speakers, and enthusiastic panelists representing every phase a school librarianship.

Speakers

The keynote address will be delivered by Sister M. Claudia, librarian at Marygrove College, Detroit, and president-elect of the Catholic Library Association. Talks will also be given by Mr. Judson Newburg, reading consultant of Delaware County Public Schools; Sister Mary Margaret C.R.S.M., librarian of Mater Misericordiae Academy; Mr. James McGlade, audio-visual director of Council Rock High School; and Mrs. Mary Y. Parr, formerly of the Villanova Library Science Department, now assistant professor at Pratt Institute in Brooklyn.

Dr. Howard F. McGinn, Chairman of the Library Science Department, expects approximately 600 students and 200 librarians from a five state area to attend the conference.

The day's activities will begin at 9 a.m. with registration in the Field House. The key-note address by Sister M. Claudia will also be in the Field House, beginning at 10 a.m. After this session, a series of lectures and panels will start in Bartley Hall. Mr. Newburg's lecture on the theme of "Helping the Non-Reader" will be delivered at 11 a.m. Sister Mary Margaret will speak on "How to Make a Library Effective", at 1 p.m. Mr. McGlade's lecture on "The Importance of Non-book Materials," will start at 1:45 p.m., and Mrs. Parr will discuss the "Teaching Role of the Librarian" at 2:30. All lectures will be delivered in 110 Bartley at the designated times.

Various panels will also be held throughout the day. The topics of the discussions will be "What Audio-Visual Means To Me," "Our Library — Used or Abused," and "Enlivening the Library Club." The panels will be held in 115 and 209 Bartley Hall.

Incomparable Schola Adds Musical Touch To Parents' Concert

By Tom Dabney

The renowned Schola Cantorum of New York will perform at the annual Villanova Parents' Weekend this year. This world famous choral group will perform at 8:15 in the Field House on Saturday, October 31, presenting a company of 27, composed of mixed voices and instrumentalists.

The Schola Cantorum was founded by Gustav Mahler in 1909 and has played a continuing role in the musical life of New York City. It derives its name from a fifth century Roman choral group, noted for its high choral singing standards.

Director

The group has been under the continuous direction of Hugh Ross since 1929, who is generally considered one of the foremost authorities in the field of choral music and direction.

The Schola Cantorum has to its credit over 64 first American performances and 22 world premieres. Included in these firsts are a long list of distinguished honors.

Among these honors were the opening of the Philharmonic Hall at Lincoln Center. Other notable performances include appearances at annual United Nations celebrations, The Telephone Hour and Leonard Bernstein's program. They have appeared in concerts conducted by such greats as Toscanini and Stokowski.

Tours

This fall, the Schola Cantorum in its tour of eastern and southern states will feature works of Bernstein, Handel, Puccini, and Folk Songs.

The New York Herald Tribune has said that the "Schola is a fine organization . . . and are always worth hearing." With this in mind the Student Government Association and the Blue Key chose this group to provide the final touch to the weekend. They urge students and their parents to attend this affair for the superior quality of the artists and their performance.

In another accolade, the New York Times had this to say of a performance given by the Schola. "It was a rare experience of performing forces and all creative elements in the cantata itself fusing into a work of art."

The renowned Schola Cantorum is shown performing at a rehearsal in New York City. They will be at the Field House on October 31.

Jerome Melamed Will Speak At Political Union Debate

The Political Union will debate President Johnson's poverty program on Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall. The guest speaker will be Jerome Melamed, Research Director of the Knit Goods Local of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, AFL-CIO The meeting is an open affair.

The poverty program is the one major law passed by the Kennedy-Johnson Administration which is thought of as a specifically Johnson measure. While the civil rights and tax cut laws were passed under President Johnson they are usually identified as Kennedy measures.

The poverty program has received broad support from labor and liberal Democrats. Senator Goldwater and many Republican have opposed it, the Republican nominee referring to it as "phony."

Mr. Melamed has been active in union work for some years. He has a B. S. degree from Temple University and an M.B.A. from the University of Pennsylvania. He is a member of the Board of Directors of the Southeastern Pennsylvania Chapter of the ADA.

The Political Union's first fall debate found the Union opposing by a slim majority "Resolved: This Union Favors the Interdiction of supplies from North Vietnam by whatever means are required." The turnout of members was the largest in the two year history of the Union. Proponents argued that it was senseless to allow the communists to have a sanctuary in North Vietnam and Laos from which they could transport supplies to their forces in South Vietnam.

Oppenents Argue

Opponents urged that the resolution might imply a large-scale long-time American military effort in Vietnam and might even trigger war with Red China. The guest speaker, William Smyser, a retired Foreign Service Officer, opposed the resolution.

Opponents of the poverty program tend to argue that with it the federal government is undertaking responsibilties which should be left to state and local government or to the private sector of the economy. Proponents argue that there is "structural unemployment" in the economy which requires positive governmental measures such as job-retraining, public works and similar measures unless the nation is to be content with having a substantial segment of the population condemned to very low income.

It is also argued that the poverty program is especially important in assisting Negroes to find decent and remunerative employment..

Letters To The Editor

To The Editor,

Having read the October 14 issue of the Villanovan I could not help but take special note to the article entited "A Freshman's View on Orientation." I believe that orientation was a necessary evil but I think Ed Whitely looks at it as if he wished it never would have ended. I don't think that Mr. Whitely could have said that he was behind orientation 100% during the orientation period. He also says that he thought the OCs fell down in their jobs. I think you know as well as I that he was as glad to see the OCs relax their authority as I was. I wish when Mr. Whitely spoke about "us ignorant Frosh" he would have spoken for himself.

A Very Oriented Frosh

To the Editor,

I would like to congratulate you and your staff on the fine edition of the Villanova last week. It was indeed edifying to see such controversial matter treated so well here at Villanova.

Your endorsement of Lyndon B. Johnson for President of the United States was well phrased and timely. The defense for Barry Goldwater was also very interesting.

I cannot help but be cognizant, however, of the manner in which the distinguish Senator's military views are aways displayed. It would appear that Mr. Goldwater is our military messiah, whether we need one or not. Since the armed forces nor our nuclear warheads are constitutionally vested with the power to distribute one another I am pleased to see that you concerned yourself first with the sanity of our elected first mover.

Regarding your editorial on speeding on campus, it was high time this matter be brought to light. Often it was puzzling to determine whether or not certain of the faculty were interested in our lives here or our lives hereafter.

Again congratulations on a fine job..

E.F.K.

To The Editor,

An editorial, constructively written and presented, can be of great help in endeavoring to rectify situations where reforms are needed. Yet I'm somewhat surprised that the two major media of the students, the Villanovan and WWVU have had neither the aduacity nor the gall to present editorials deprecating the noise, yells and screams which occur everytime a girl, inadvertently or purposely, walks through the quad.

The noise, screams, . . . yells, musical nises nonsense which is initiated by several boys, but which is joined by many, is very disruptive and immature. I was recently disrupted by such an occurence, while attending a meeting in Bartley Hall.

There are many night classes that probably have been disrupted, somewhat, by such happenings. This childish and un-Christian-like demeanor by the Sheehan and Sullivan students reflects very badly on the University. So you children in Sheehan and Sulivan grow up, will you?

A concerned and enraged Villanovan

To The Editor:

Glad to see that the Villanovan has finally gotten hep and has started to dig jazz. I know there are a great many who, along with me, react in the same way. Anyhow, I just wanted to compliment you on the jazz section, both columns, "All That Jazz" and the record review, really swung and that's what we need. Keep up the good work,

T. Murphy

To the Editor.

To the Editor

I am writing concerning the editorial for October 14, 1964 entitled "Lyndon B. Johnson.

I ask what good is the test ban treaty? The Soviet Union has broken every one before when it was to their advantage to do so.

The fact that we have increased our number of nuclear warheads by 150% is very impressive. I ask is this enough? How does the total number compare with the Soviet Union?

Who is getting the benefit of the tax cut? The average citizen? It is more like the big corporations.

I also ask which of the two candidates has worked harder for civil rights? Who is responsible for getting civil rights legislation in his own state? Who is the man who voted against every civil rights bill when he was member of the House and Senate? President Johnson used the same argumenas presented by the South this year when he worked for the defeat of civil rights legislation.

President Johnson's administration has been filled with corruption. He tells the Senate of the United States when and who it may investigate..

The United States needs a man of great moral convictions and leadership. One who will stand upwith courage at the threats of the Soviet Union, especially now that the new leaders are in power. We need a man who will respect the principles that have made this country the symbol of freedom. The United States must not quit until freedom is shared by all. Barry Goldwater is dedicated to these ideas.

Self-Education

Sir Francis Bacon wrote in his essay, Of Studies, "Reading maketh full man." There is an old saying uttered by a sage philosopher which states: "Don't let studies interfere with your education." However, this statement should not be taken literally. What he meant was that the reading which one does on his own is usually that which most affects his life. Studies are very important but not the sine qua non of the educative process.

Education is not acquired by osmosis and spoon-fed information is quickly forgotten by the student. In Dr. Mortimer Adler's lecture last month, he stated that a college diploma is not indicative of an education. It is only the first step in a long road which may eventually lead a man towards Truth. Extra-curricular reading should be an integral part of the college student's schooling. Self-education is the key to the education of a truly learned man. Father President, speaking along these same lines in his opening address to the day students, exhorted them to find knowledge by themselves and to concern themselves with the significant issues and controversies of the day.

It is a well-known fact that many prominent businessmen and politicians are often self-made men, honed by the give and take of an executive board meeting or the party caucus. But their success can not be attributed solely to their repartee or their ability to analyze the psychological factors determining market trends. Some of these men may have never glanced at a book of literary criticism or a sociological tract delineating the nature of man.

The truly learned man would probably question or scoff at the motives of these latter-day Philistines. But this is not to say that these self-made individuals show disdain for education; for they would have to realize the importance of ideas, and great ideas come from great books.

Louis Untermeyer will address the Villanova Forum on December 3 on the topic, "What Americans Read and Why". In conjunction with this talk, Concept and the Literary Society are conducting a survey in order to discover the reading habits of Villanova students. If education is the primary concern of our students, then the written matter they peruse will reflect this attitude. The results should be interesting.

We do not urge students to throw away their textbooks or to begin reading voluminously in surrealistic literature to the detriment of their studies. But the hope remains that leisure time will be directed towards improving the intellect, whether by reading, or by discussing the overriding issues of the present, or by meditating on the nature of man or the future of the world. The shape of our destiny lies with us. The educated man will better be able to solve the problems confronting him. Read something on your own; you may even enjoy it.

What is student responsibility The dictionary says it is the accountability or realiability of a person for his actions. In short, it would be the ability to answer or respond for one's conduct and obligations — thus, it narrws down to one's trustworthiness..

As students at Vilanova this should be of paramount concern to each and everyone of us. It tngenders the idea and attitude, not only of pride in our alma mater but also in the concept that this is our school and that we do not wish to discredit it. If the student feels that others should not mar the name of his alma mater, then he must realze that it is his primary and personal responsibility to make sure that he does nothing to mar his name. .

The student, in assuming this duty which he merits by the very fact that he is a student at Villanova, must set a code of ethics for himself that would typify any Villanovan anywhere at anytime. This code must be first and foremost in conjunction with all Catholic moral beliefs and practices. Secondly, it must be in conjunction with that of any lawbiding citizen . . . an ethics characterized by honesty, forthrightness and intergrity; of such a nature that any person, no matter whom it may be, could copy it and be a credit to the institution which he represents.

In two weeks the Big Five Student Body Presidents, at my invitation, will meet at Villanova to establish a code of co-operation and conduct for Palestra basketball games.

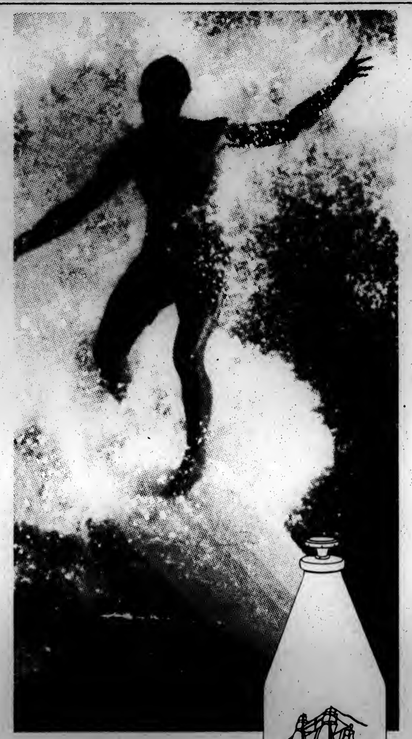
When an unnecessary campus auto accident occurs it is difficult to tell who experiences more pain — the student injured or the driver of the car. An accident can occur at 1g MPH as easily as it can at 30 MPH — Thus the emphasis should be on care. I would hone that all prsons having to drive on campus will take a very sober view of Bob Cowan's accident.

The Story Of Little Red Goldiwater

By Rusty Miller

One fine day not too long ago in a very real place not too far from here Little Red Goldiwater was skipping through the forest which she could not see because of (all) the trees. She was going to visit her grandmother who was sick.. Her grandmother had a strange affiction known as hoof-in-mouth disease. It was a disease which affected one's speech. You said things on the spur of the moment that you didn't really mean but once they were said it was too late. Well by and by granny had bars on her windows to keep her in . . . away from all the other people.

This was a very contagious disease and Goldiwater had caught it from her gran but she kept telling her mother that she wasn't sick, that people just misunderstood her!



Well, as she was skipping along she was being watched by a hunter, a cross-eyed hunter named Blyndon (alias the Birdman). Blyndon knew in his digestive tract that Little Goldi was not really a little girl at all; she was a mean ole wolf (in disguise.) He KNEW that mean ole wolf had a mean ole bomb and he was really going to blow up poor nutty granny's house. You see, cross-eyed Blyndon had ears like an ole hound dog and he KNEW he could hear a mean ole bomb ticking in Goldies' basket.

Poor old Blyndon liked to think of himself as the solid, dependable hero type. He was always ready to make the world safe for little girls to pick daisies and poor old grannies to eat ice cream cones. Well, old Blyndon had a fault, a tragic flaw type fault. He liked to get credit before he had done anything. So, instead of following Little Goldie, that is the wolf, and stopping her from using the bomb as he KNEW she would, he ran off to tell everyone how solid and dependable and heroic he was.

Well, some of the people old Blyndon told his story to were smart enough to know that Little Red Goldiwater wasn't what Blyndon claimed she was, there were, however some who believed him and actually though that this little girl or wolf of whatever she was would really blow up poor nutty granny's house. Now all the people loved poor nutty granny ever though she had her defects, so, they hurried out to her house to check.

By the time everyone reached Granny's house it was too late. Goldiwater had come and gone. They found granny just as she always was. Somehow they were not too satisfied with poor cross-eyed Blyndon that day.. Some argued that it was a good thing they had played safe and come out but most of them felt they had been taken, that he wasn't what he claimed he was.

An' All That Jazz

By Barry Bornstein

Heeding the call of our innermost spirits echoing the need for the pure sound, last Friday evening we made our pilgrimage to Jazz's east coast mecca—New York. Our diet called for an observance of Getz, Gilberto, Mann, aud Powell, a program of unique contrasting experience.

Stan Getz was holding sway at Carnegie Hall, the capitol of music's eminent domain in the U.S., and if there is such an observable phenomenon as "playing up to the occasion," Stan Getz recorded such a performance that night. Like a master-sculptor who deftly moulds the whole essence of his image through the clay, so Stan Getz took every note, enveloped it, caressed it, meditated on it, breathed life into it, and when its entirety had been realized, propelled it into the beyond. There is no greater one.

Bright Young Gem

For as true as it is that Jazz is a form of expression, then in its ultimate, Stan Getz expresses. Between his audience and himself there is boundless communication. In Stan's current group shines the brightest young gem in Jazz today, Gary Burton. This 21 year-old Berklee School Grad is the master of his vibes—to such an extent that he remains incomparable in our minds. His solo My Funny Valentine was inspired eloquence. Also on the bill with Getz were the Gilbertos, Astrud and Joao, whose bossa-nova-based music has reached the nth degree of popularity. "Girl From Impanema's" light and airy tones filled the hall and completely inundated its listeners.

My hegira moved onward from Carnegie to Birdland, Herbie Mann and Bud Powell. Herbie was his usual dynamic self, especially on his favorites — "Comeln Home Baby", and "Summertime", with his hot flute reaching high. Bud Powell was a sight for sore peepers and a cure for wanting ears. Back from six years in France and a bout with t.b. and heaven knows what else, Bud proved to be his old creative self. His portrayal of Like Someone In Love" had his audience on their feet. The only detracting factor was his lack of good backup. A better base man and drummer would have enriched the mood. However, it was still great to hear Bud, and a fitting end to an enriching hegira.

The Grey Sidelash

By Jeff Radowich

Not too long ago, Philadelphia's reputation as the city of brotherly love was painfully shattered by the Negro riots in the northern section of the city. These riots followed the pattern established in Harlem, Rochester, Elizabeth, Jersey City and Dixmoor.

According to most political pundits, these riots help the Republican aspirant for the Presidency, Senator Goldwater, because of what is euphemistically labeled "the white backlash."

It seems that many white Americans felt the Negro has made great strides towards total equality in these past years, and perhaps he has. These fair-skinned denizens of the land of opportunity are disgruntled, therefore, by what they interpret as further dissatisfaction on the part of our darker brethren. "I mean, let's face it," they seem to be saying, "Wasn't the Civil Rights Act passed? What more do they want?"

Discrimination

But, as Doctor George Stigler, president of the American Economic Association, pointed out: "We want to widen employment opportunities for unskilled youths — especially Negro youths. The present method is by direct legislation — laws which say that no one can discriminate against an applicant for a job. This all sounds fine; nevertheless, discrimination continues to exist."

There are numerous other authorities who can easily document this wide divergence between stated public objectives and the actual results of measures adopted to implement those objectives.

But the effectiveness of any Civil Rights legislation is a secondary issue to this commentary.

Dregs

The raison d'etre of the alabaster countermovement is a misconception of what these riots actually are.

Numerous theories have been postulated as to why these disturbances erupted. Almost all authorities on the subject agree, however, that these violent insurgences were not racially-oriented. They were the product of hooligans, the fomentation of the dregs of the society.

This is extremely important. For it is manifestly clear that the ghetto Negro responsible for these dishonorable turmoils is not typical either of the race or of the aspirations of the race. A fact little noticed is that every single Negro leader of any consequence deplored the outbreaks for what they were: despicable defiance of civil authority and order.

Thus, the actions of this reprehensible riffraff do not justify indicting all Negroes.

Hillbillies

For example, there is no reasoning young man or woman who identifies with the recent disturbances in Seaside, Oregon, or in Hampton Beach, Rhode Island.

No sensible Caucasian condones the manner in which the hillbillies live.

Every race, society and civilization has its senseless scum. But the whole is composed of the sum of all the parts.

It is therefore obvious that this so-called "white backlash" has no logical foundation.

A Slash At Simpletons

By Ron Javers

I'm sick of them. Sick of the blabbering, muck-raking, name calling, mud-slinging would-be-patriots collectively termed Right-Wing Extremists.

These inveterate rabble-rousers have had their say; they have been given a hearing, and now the American people must quietly return them to the security of their couches and padded cells.

Unfortunately however the extremists cannot be dismissed as easily as we would wish. They are a peculiar strain of weed nourished by the twisted, twining roots of rumor, hearsay and fear. Their doctrine is unflinching, their discipline fanatical, and their continued existence turns a cold light on the apathy of all Americans of good will.

Who Are They?

Who are the extremists? They are bankers, politicans, laborers, bartenders or beatnicks. They come from all social strata and from all regions. They attack everything from fluoridation to the income tax. They have leveled their asinine sights on such notables as: General Dwight Eisenhower ("a dedicated conscious agent of the communist conspiracy").

President John F. Kennedy ("a communist agent, assassinated only because he was falling behind schedule for the effective capture of the United States in 1963.")

One Indiana textbook official even went so far as to call Robin Hood a Communist! The list is as long as it is amazing. The extremists find a red skeleton in every closet and a commie under every rug.

Tribute

One of the most outstanding tributes to the idiocy of the right-wing extremists is their amazing gift for oversimplication. All the problems of a nation can be solved with one line answers. Everything is either Black or white, never grey. ("if you're not with us - I mean 100 percent with us - then you're 100 per cent against us".)

Rumor

There is nothing an extremist enjoys better than a good rumor. A rightist candidate for city office in Phoenix announced that the Reds were "planning to blow up state capitols at a given signal." Apparently either the "signal" hasn't yet been given, or somebody goofed!

A New York City group was warning that "Communists are secretly liquidating God-worshipers with tasteless poisons". So watch yourself!

Another rightist gang in Texas claimed proof that up to 15,000 Chinese Communist troops were training in Southern California in 1963.

Probably the finest gem in the rightists rumor-mongerer's collection was a little ditty started by a group called "The Texas Voters for Enforcing the Constitution" (whew).

It consisted of reports that "a United Nations task force of bare-footed Africans" was preparing to invade the state of Georgia.

Ridiculous you say? Preposterous and unbelievable as it sounds this rumor was accepted as fact by hundreds of thousands of sadly deluded extremists throughout the country. It appeared in many of the conservative "Newsletters" and Right Wing publications such as the Santa Anna Register (circ. 76,000), Independent American, the Weekly Crusader, and something called On Target, the official organ of a group called "the Minutemen."

The current leaders of the Extremist groups in the U.S. are reminiscent of characters found in novels of the science fiction type. Their phantasmal world is full of spies, infiltrators, and secret agents. Some of these men are as unbelievable as today's comic strip heroes.

One of the leaders carries the intrigue so far as never to sign his name to any documents. He is Troy Haughton of San Diego and known to fellow conspirators as minuteman "930".

Mr. Haughton indeed does lead a most diverse and exciting life, as evidenced by a few convictions for indecent exposure in 1957, and for carrying a concealed deadly weapon in 1964. Mr. Haughton cheerfully dismisses both these actions as "harrassment".

Is A Sino-Soviet Split Good? Blessing Or Danger - In Disguise

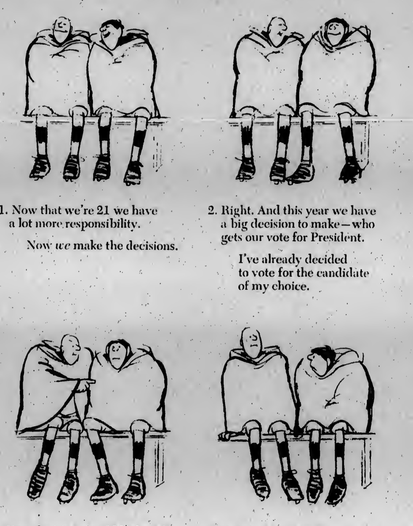
By Steve Morrison

There has been a great deal of talk lately, about the possibility of a final and complete split between the Soviet Union and Red China. This speculation has arisen as a result of numerous stories being circulated that depict the two communist nations as practically on the verge of war with each other.

Speculation is not entirely unfounded, since there are definite signs of disagreement between Peking and Moscow. Of primary importance in this dispute is the question of which communist tactics are to be used in the overthrow of capitalism. (Note that I say "tactics to be used in overthrowing captialism" instead of whether or not capitalism is to be overthrown.)

Soft On Capitalism

Ironically, China believes that the Soviet Union is becoming too "soft on capitalism" and that a more aggressive plan of military strategy should be used.



On the other hand, Russia is comparatively moderate on this issue. Believing in the soft-sell tactics that have been working so well, Moscow feels no need of going to the brink of an all-out nuclear war with an enemy who seems to be yielding ground. Whether or not these opposing views will actually result in any "actual" split between the two powers remains to be seen.

What will the result of such a division be, if it should occur? Many feel that this would be a great setback to Communism. This could well be the case, but it does not follow that this split would help world peace even though it would weaken communism.

More likely than not, such a split would tend to confuse our strategy. Instead of dealing with a single communist power, we would be confronted by two, one weaker than the other, one more aggressive than the other, but both dedicated to world conquest. In addition, Red China would be in a more advantageous position to obtain a seat in the U.N. if it became a separate power, totally independent of the Soviet Union.

If Russia were to turn Red China loose on the world, the hopes of peaceful-coexistence with communism would be obsolete.

In short, it is hard to realize any real advantages to a break between the two major communist powers. Although this break might lead to a series of breaks in other nations behind the Iron Curtain, the disadvantages seem to strongly outweigh the advantages of such a schism of the East.

Now we make the decisions.

2. Right. And this year we have a big decision to make—who gets our vote for President.

I've already decided to vote for the candidate of my choice.

3. Your decision should be based on what the candidate stands for. For example, does your man's fiscal policy square with your philosophy on the matter?

I hope not. I never could handle money.

4. Then how do you expect to go out into the world, support a wife, raise children, and be a two-car family?

I wish I knew.

5. Let me give you a piece of advice that will help you off to a good start.

I'd sure appreciate it.

6. Soon as you get a job, put some dough into cash-value insurance, the kind they call Living Insurance at Equitable. It gives your wife and kids solid protection and it automatically builds a cash value you can use instead for retirement or whatever you like.

A Liberal's Thoughts And Comments-- Candidate Goldwater's Conservatism

By Tom Bruderle

As Senator Barry Goldwater presses his attack on the Johnson Administration's budget and spending policies, he will begin to place a heavy emphasis on the balooning national debt.

In leveling his thrusts, he will probably make use of the unscientific method of judging the Government's debt as something similar to that of a small merchant. In so doing, Goldwater becomes guilty of the fallacy of composition, i.e. what is true of a part is for that reason, true of the whole.

Federal Debt

The Arizonan passionately decries the growth of the Federal debt but, in a thriving economy, is it something to be overly-concerned about? Must it be liquidated as soon as possible?

The debt we have today is due primarily to World War II. Because this country was conducting the war on two fronts, heavily aiding its allies and carrying on typically expensive day-to-day business operations at home, the Federal government faced a shortage of funds and soon ran itself into the red. Congress refused to raise taxes and the Government was forced to borrow money from its citizenry.

Ancient Figures

Although these figures are now ancient, statistics released in 1956 are helpful in determining who "holds" the national debt. Of the 280.2 billion dollar debt announced, individual citizens "held" 66.3 billion dollars or 23.7 per cent while commercial banks "held" another 21.6 per cent. Other "holders" include Federal Reserve banks, U. S. Government investments and accounts, insurance companies, state and local governments and mutual savings banks.

Some anti-deficit spenders argue thusly: "When we borrow rather than tax the true economic burden is really shifted to unborn generations who will have to pay interest and the principal on the debt."

When money is needed now and consequently borrowed now, it is the present generation which pays, not a future generation. World War II was financially conducted by those Americans who lived during the war, not by those then or now unborn.

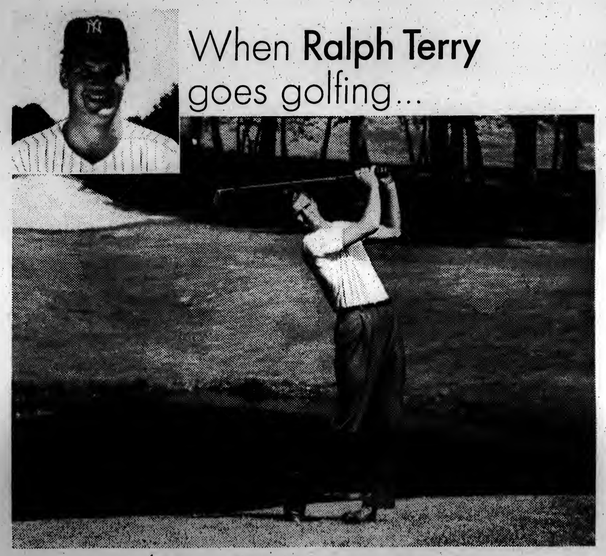
Paid When?

It is true that the interest on the debt will have to be paid by future generations, but in 1962 this interest amounted to only 2.1 percent of the national income.

The debt, itself, should be of no great worry as it is both owned and owed by the American public. It is a case of Peter paying Paul; in other words, a part of Peter's income tax is allocated by the Government to Paul, whose war bond purchased in 1944, matures. At all times the debt stays within the country.

What many critics of the budget and its recurring imbalances often neglect is that just as the debt is rising, so too is our national income.

Productive, Powerful



The American economy is a constantly growing thing. Economically, we are the most powerful state on earth and we have yet to achieve our full potential. As far as productivity is concerned, there is no indication that man-hour efficiency and new techniques have begun to slacken off.

This might explain why France and Great Britain, during the crucially formative years of the neophyte capitalistic system and the Industrial Revolution were able to go on decade after decade since their budgets were not in balance even half the time.

Whereas the public debt has leaped from 40.4 billion in 1939 to nearly 325 billion in 1964, the public debt-ratio to the rising gross national product (the sum total of goods and services produced) has gone from approximately 40 per cent in 1939 to a whopping 115 per cent in 1945 back down to approximately 35 per cent in 1962.

Experience Used

Using the experience of the French and English and comparing it with American statistics of the last 20 years, some economists believe that with this country's growth factor, with a three or four per cent increase in the national income, the public debt could be increased 250 billion dollars in 25 years without its relative percentage increasing at all.

Jim Croce's Cultural Tour

By MaryAnne Rowland

When James J. Croce, a Villanova senior, taught himself to play the guitar four years ago, he never dreamed his musical ability would be the ticket to a month's goodwill tour of Turkey, Yugoslavia, Lebanon, Tunisia and Nigeria. The Philadelphia Folk Song Society, of which Jim has been a member for the past four years, sent him an invitation to try out for a goodwill tour of the Mediterranean and Africa sponsored by the United States National Student Organization.

Auditions to select the troupe were held at the University of Illinois, in New York and in Philadelphia, where the Philadelphia Folksong Society helped set up the finals in a local coffeehouse.

Selected As Finalist

Jim was selected as one of ten semi-finalists. He then was interviewed by USNA's International Staff concerning knowledge of the United States and foreign affairs, as well as for personality and attitude. Jim pronounced the five hour interview "invigorating". On the basis of this interview plus the musical audition Jim was selected to join Eugene J. Uphoff, 22 of Boulder, Colo. and the University of Minnesota; Susan Levin, 22, of Champaign, Ill. and a Fine Arts graduate of the University of Illinois; and Robert H. Knott, 22, of Memphis Tenn. on the cultural tour.

The four performers left August 2 by plane for the Ninth International Cultural Festival in Istanbul held by the National Union of Students of Turkey. The 17 nations represented at this festival played to a packed house. The "American Folk Quartet", as Jim and the group were called, also made an impromptu appearance at a gypsy camp. They enjoyed switching instruments with the gypsies and sampling one another's style of music.

Continued Tour

From Istanbul they moved on to Yugoslavia, stopping at Belgrade, Sarajevo, Dubrovnik, Split and Zagreb where they appeared in university communities and at some 300 festivals. Beirut was the next stop, where they gave a performance at American University and appeared on Lebanese radio. This was followed by a trip to Tujis to sing at the university there. At this time Jim, using rather devious methods, met actor Peter O'Toole. He snuck up to a group of Turkish reporters and Just blended in . . . he was real cool". Then on to Northern Africa where the group performed in honor of the Nigerian Olympic team at a dinner given by all the embassies in Nigeria. They stopped in Ehaha, Liberia and Senegal on the way home. They landed in New York September 13.

Comments On Trip

Jim comments, "The tour was very successful. People seemed to be very much interested in American music. We did a crosssection of American music types: blues, ballads, ragtime, spirituals, freedom songs etc. The people joined in singing." He made many new friends and met a lot of interesting people. The students in these countries asked a lot of intelligent questions about America.

Villanova Courses Helpful

"My Villanova courses in Sociology and the Philosophy of Communism in particular got good application in helping me answer the student's questions," Croce states. Jim sums up the tour with the statement, "We just had a lot of fun. We saw just enough of each place to make us want to go back and see more".

Villanova Freshmen Form Largest Class In School's History

By Matt Dorm

Villanova University's 1964 freshman class is not only the largest the school's history but is the best qualified academically and has the widest geographical representation, the University's Office of Public Information reported this week.

One in every three of the first year men is a former high school honor student, the records indicate. Twenty-one were finaliists in National Merit Scholarship competition in their senior year in high school. .

One In Four Admitted

Due to a thirty percent increase in applications for this year's freshman class, students were carefully selected. Approximately one of every four who applied was admitted. The result was the exremely high academic status of the Class of 1968.

Twenty-four states and the District of Columbia are represented among the first year class. Among the states are: California, Texas, Michigan, Ohio, Nebraska, Georgia, Mississippi, Tennessee, Maine, Illinios, Florida, Missouri, and North Carolina.

Also enrolled as Villanova freshmen are students from Syria, Ireland, Peru, Venezuela, Netherlands Antilles, Canada, The Philippines, and Puerto Rico.

Approximately 1,500 freshmen entered Villanova this fall boosting overall undergraduate enrollement to 4,500. The University was forced to discontinue accepting applications early last spring.

A Look At Goldwater And The Republicans

By: Prof. John G. Stephenson, III
Professor of Law
Villanova Law School
Moderator
Villanova Young Republicans

In my opinion, the position taken by the Republican party for the 1964 campaign will go far to advance representative government in America. It is a stand which puts the party on the side of conservatism in domestic affairs, and recognizes the fact that we are face to face with an enemy that wages war even when we are at peace. The traditional approach of offering [illegible] every special group has been laid aside. Instead we find an effort to polarize the party to unify the surge of conservative thinking which is seeking an expression throughout the country. The two parties have become so divided between conservatives and liberals that it has been impossible to state the issues in recent campaigns in terms of the real choice of policy which has faced the nation. Now it is possible to state the underlying philosophy of the conservative movement and to present it to the people for a reasoned choice.

This has not been done without alienating a very vocal element of the Republican party.

It is not easy to win away the conservatives in the opposition, many of whom enjoy key positions in Congress by virtue of seniority. It is particularly difficult in a year when a great national tragedy has drawn a curtain over criticism of the first three years of the present administration and has left too little time in which to judge the final year. In spite of these difficulties, an effort is being made to take the issues to the people in the way intended by the architects of our form of government.

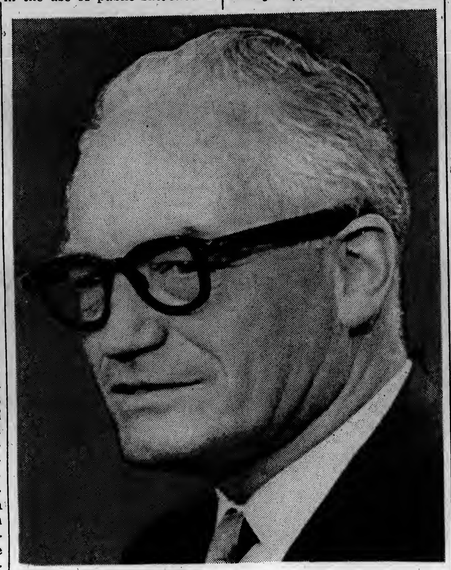
The liberal press has viewed this effort to polarize the parties as a threat to the two party system. Actually the two parties began with a cleavage based on the issues of the day, but became divided into liberal and conservative camps as membership continued to be based on family or section or age of first voting. The result has been that there has been no organization equipped to define and debate the issues. Those who would prefer that it remain this way may distrust the ability of the voters to choose wisely. In this respect, the Republican Party has based its hope for success squarely on faith in the processes of self government.

In domestic matters, the choice is between the free enterprise system and welfarism. Each presents a contrasting approach to the solution of social and economic problems. The free enterprise system was born in revolt against the rigid class system in our mother country. It demands a fluid society in which each citizen shall be allowed to attain that stattus which his capabilities and industry make possible for him. It relies on the initiative of the citizens to produce, using the laws of supply and demand to channel production where it is most needed. It demands that government lay down the rules of competition, outlawing what would be injurious to the social welfare. The free enterprise system has always taken care of the needs of the less fortunate members of society through public and private institutions. It demands of government that it maintain a stable system of exchange and guard against inflation.

In contrast, the welfare concept has its birth in socialism on the continent. It demands not equality of opportunity but equality of status. It makes production the concern of the state through public ownership of industry and agriculture or through public ownership of industry and agriculture or through public planning and control. In a demand for universal security, it undermines private ownership of productive facilities through taxation.



A campaign should be based upon the record of the party in power; but because that party has been divided between a liberal administration and a more conservative legislative representation, one must look at administration proposals and not legislative results. Important welfarist measures have been asked by the president, only to be modified or defeated in a congress in which the party has had a substantial numerical lead. The medicare program was defeated, and farm proposals were forced to a referendum in which they were resoundingly defeated. In the administrative departments which are for a time insulated from legislative intervention, welfarism has had more success. The N.L.R.B. has thus virtually repealed the salutary provisions of the Taft Hartley Act which was designed to prevention socialization of the labor market.

The medicare issue is an important one. It is recognized that the benefits under the existing social security system are inadequate to meet the hospitalization needs of many retired persons. A free society will take care of these problems through general taxation, meeting the existing need. The welfare approach is a system of compulstory insurance to take care of everyone, whether he neds help or not, and thus to restrict the choice of savings programs for those who would otherwise be able to take care of themselves while making a substantial contribution to the formation of capital.

The tax reduction measures of the administration offered a choice between fiscal responsiblity and controlled inflation. While there was general agreement that the steeply graduated income tax was operating to prevent capital formation, the dispute centered not around reducing the taxes, but around the issue whether this could be done without reducing government expenditures. The course of fiscal responsibility would have demanded a reduction in deficit financing during a period of comparative prosperity.

The Republican candidate opposes burdening the social security system with compulsory universal insurance to cover all the medical needs of old age, favors a transition to a free market economy in agriculture as rapidly as this can be done without disappointing reasonable expectations based on the present system, and he promises tax reductions that will be matched by reduction in federal spending.

The cause of freedom has long demanded that our colored citizens be accorded an equal opportunity to achieve the place in our society which their individual capabilities justify. This has required that all publicly enforced discrimination be abolished, whether it be in the franchise, or in public education, or in the use of public facilities. It does not, however, demand that negroes be forcibly integrated with whites, or that the colored citizen be accorded by law and not by his own achievement, an economic and social status equal to that of everyone else, nor does it demand that the rest of society be reduced, in compensation for past wrongs, to the status of the poorer negroes. Many individual colored persons have achieved high economic and social position, and have won acceptance in the otherwise white community, and more will do so as public discrimination is removed. Those who believe in the welfare state will, of course, find this unacceptable; but the path of forced integration, chosen during the Reconstruction period, has already proven to be the way of upheaval and disorder, leading to the long resistance which has for nearly a century delayed progress in this field.

The Republican candidate has always supported the cause of the negro as well as other minority groups. His vote against the Civil Rights Bill of 1964 was based on the fear that it would be used to direct forcible integration, and thus to defeat the proper objective of giving the negro an equal opportunity to participate in a free society. This attitude should insure a vigorous enforcement of the act with justice to the negro and consideration for the freedom of all other citizens, a progrfam which offers prmise f achieving success.

The conduct of foreign relations is peculiarly within the powers of the president. While the Senate must approve all treaties, there is a natural reluctance to reject any treaty which has already been negotiated, as was true in the case of the test ban treaty. The last four years have seen a shift away from the policy of recognizing world communism as an enemy conducting war by subversive methods even in time of peace. We have returned to the position, proved wrong in China, that the communists are simply "agrarian reformers" concerned with problems of domestic economic policy, and we have sought treaties and accommodations looking towards peaceful coexistence. Lest we disturb progress in this mistaken direction, we abandoned the Cuban patriots at the Bay of Pigs and threw away the opportunity to deal with the Cuban situation before the island became a Russian base. We were caught off balance when the Berlin wall was trown up and when Russian missiles were installed in Cuba, failing to take decisive action in either case. This last week, the explosion of the Chinese atomic bomb and the change of leadership in Russia have left us similarly bewildered.

The nuclear test ban treaty, which is regarded as a great triumph by the administration, has hindered the development of our military knowledge of this new weapon. The military experts who testified before congress said that political considerations outweighed military ones when they did not protect ratification. Whether the political consideraions were a belief that treaties could be negotiated with Russia putting an end to the cold war, or that it was expedient to pay attention to the "better red than dead" sentiment on he far left, subsequent events have not justified the action. The Republican candidate is a man who knows that freedom cannot be preserved without risking war with a power bent on destroying it; and he is also a man who knows that freedom is well worth a calculated risk.

Senator Goldwater is a man who has turned from a successful career in business to devote himself unselfishly to public affairs. He is a man devoted to good government and the principles of American freedom. He is acquainted with the weapons and methods of modern warfare in the best tradition of the citizen-soldiers who have been the foundation of our military strength since the days of the Revolution. A man whose family reflect his fine character, he is obviously one to inspire respect for law, order and decency. This is particularly needful at a time when our social fabric appears to have been undermined by lack of respect for men who govern.

Senator Goldwater is respected by his opponents, who disagree bitterly with the principles for which he stands, acknowledging him to be a man of principle.

When they say that he is "trigger happy," are they not really saying that they think it is better to take a soft approach towards the communist enemy? When they call his views antediluvian, do they not really tell you that in their opinion the [illegible]t jtnute- t nisdish wne n do principles on which he Republic was founded are inadequate for modern society, and must give way to modern socialism? When they call his views "extreme", do they not show how far to the left they have actually drifted, consciously or unintentionally?

These considerations emphasize the fact that this is a campaign based on fundamental issues, no matter how much the politicians want to avoid them: issues of freedom against welfarism, fiscal responsibility against planned inflation, and strength and firmness against accommodation and compromise in the preservation of world peace. It is hoped that the voters will find time to listen to the candidates themselves, and to judge which party is better able to lead the next four years.

In your hearts, you know he's right.

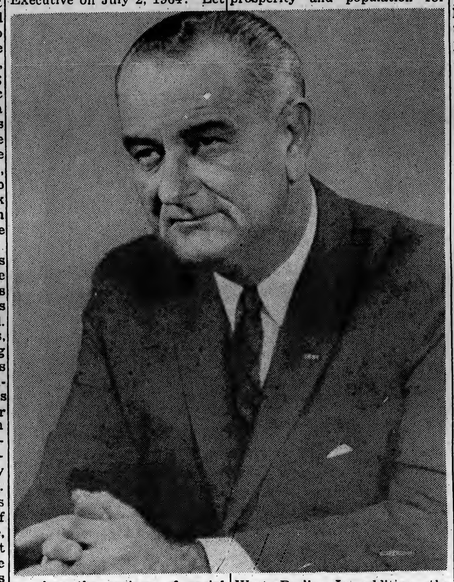
A Look At Johnson And The Democrats

By: Professor John Murray, Jr.
Professor of Law,
Villanova Law School
Faculty Advisor,
Villanova Law Review

The problems of any society, a fortiori the complex soicety of the sixties, cannot be remedied by a monistic approach. A pluralistic approach with its attendant flexibility is the only mature basis for decsion-making if there is to be any hope of success. Herein lies the strength of the Kennedy-Johnson administration, the ideas which Lyndon B. Johnson has pledged to carry on. The Johnson program is an approach to problems rather than answers, the answers promised by his opponet.

The basis of the Goldwater attack on current administration policies is a lack of definiteness which Senator Goldwater promises to remedy by suggesting a definte answer for each current problem facing the United States, ranging from Vietnam to agriculture. But even in the short space of a few months, Senator Goldwater has matured; he has learned that his monistic approach in virutally every area needs modification; it requires flexibility. Not only are flexible answers more platable to the electorate, but it is submitted, Senator Goldwater has also found that in having to think about these poblems more than superficially, such answers are more papatable to himself.



Yet the contradictions in his positions are so patent that he can answer his critics in this area only by burping that he has been either misquoted or villified. As November 3rd approaches, Senator Goldwater is becoming more aware of the electorate's cognizance of his political immaturity. All of the fallacious lables which he and his partner use to characterize the Johnson administration have failed to diminish the incredibly large support for the Johnson-Humphrey ticket which continues to grow. Paradoxicaly, the voter who was promised a genuine choice if Goldwater became the nominee, finds that he has no choice at all. It would be a relativey simple task to add to the voluminous literature advocating an anti-Goldwater vote. Legitimate excerpts from the Republican nominee's political rhetoric in the baroque manner would amply support such a thesis

It seems more important, however, to suggest that the Johnson program is a rational, mature and quite definite approach to the complex problems of our society of the sixties. In this effort, the utterance of Senator Goldwater will be suggested only occasionally to emphasize, by contrast, the sophistication of the Johnson appoach.

Civil Rights

Against a backgound of Republican inaction, the Kennedy-Johnson code is a dramatic manifestation of the present administration's progress in the quest for equality of opportunity. The multiple attack on this scar on the nation incuded: (1) executive action to end racial discrimination in federal housing; (2) desegregation of more than 300 public school districts; (3) desegregation in airport, rail and bus terminals throughout the country; (4) sponsorship of a constitutional amendment to abolish the poll tax; (5) appointment of more Negroes to high government posts than ever before; (6) the elimination of job discrimination in government and in private industry doing business with the government; (7) the passage of a monumental piece of legislation the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Moreover, the attitude of the Administration is manifested in many ways which are not well publicized. One example is the attitude of the Justice Department which filed briefs in 1963 and 1964 urging states to remain neutral in sit-in demonstrations and contending that the States could not use criminal trespass statutes to preclude such demonstrations (which arguments were accepted by the United States Supreme Court). Perhaps most important were the unambiguous urgings of the Chief Executive on July 2, 1964: "Let us close the springs of racial poison. Let us pray for wise and undestanding hearts. Let us lay aside irrelevant differences and make our Nation whole."

The words and the record speak for themselves. This is a clear, rational and definite policy which has already accomplished more in a few years than the total accomplishment of previous years. It seems obvious to suggest that in the hearts of all Americans there is a desire for this program to continue and not to be stalled by someone who complains that our society is run by minority groups. It is the coincidence of choice by minority groups which govern a pluralistic society. Unfortunately, the Republican candidate seems unable to comprehend this fundamental truth.

Foreign Policy

The suggestion by Senator Goldwater that the Administration's posture around the world is a picture of indefinite fear and lack of direction or purpose, more accurately describes the posture in 1961 when the Kennedy-Johnson administration began to pick up the pieces. In 1961, the European alliance was sluggish, NATO was floundering without purpose, and, in Berlin, there was an increasing lack of confidence in United States determination to protect that citadel of freedom. The significant build-up of NATO military forces, the passage of the Trade Expansion Act, the strengthening of the machinery of coordination in Atlantic Community Aid by aiding in the organization of OECD, the greater use of the North Atlantic Council to each agreement on basic Western foreign policy issues and a strong administration attitude as manifested in statements by Presidents Kennedy and Johnson have given purpose where there was none and established hope and confidence in the present and future of Western Europe.

Berlin has remained free and the reassurances of both presidents have resulted in greater prosperity and population for West Berlin. In addition, the Soviet challenge to Berlin has decreased because of the clear determination of the Kennedy-Johnson administration to fight, if necessary, to maintain a free and strong Berlin. There could be no mistake that this country would not negotiate out of fear any longer. By 1961, United States prestige in Latin America had deteriorated to such an extent that its Republican Vice-President was mobbed in Latin capitals. Working with the councils ofCAS and the strengthened Alliance for Progress, the Johnson Administration has managed to instill a strong feeling of partnership in making significant progress remedying the urgent problems of the hemisphere.

There is ample evidence that the Communist tide has been turned in Latin America. Venezuela has overcome Communist attempts to transfer power and Brazil turned back a dangerous Communist trend. As for the alleged weakness in this Administration's Cuban policy, the argument always ignores the complete lack of policy which permitted Castro to take over in 1959. Our strength in the Cuban missile crisis has precluded Castro from turning Cuba into the showplace of Communism which he originally predicted. This Administration's efforts have excluded the Castro regime from the OAS and effectively isolated it from the rest of the hemisphere. In addition, the ban on trade between this country and Cuba has placed the Cuban economy in a state of chaos.

In Southeast Asia, the Administration policy is clear and definite, notwithstanding the ambiguous attacks by the Goldwater-Miller partnership. The policy is flexible, but there can be no doubt of this country's determination to assure the independence of South Vietnam. Throughout the entire world, the Kennedy-Johnson efforts have created an image of a strong America dedicated to peace and freedom. In their hearts, all Americans will agree that this is a significant improvement on the American foreign policy image of 1961.

Nuclear Armament

In terms of missile development, the following quotation seems appropriate: "I think we are proceeding exactly right in the development of our missiles . . . I wouldn't suggest anything in the way of step-up. I think we are proceeding exactly the way we should." This statement was made by Senator Barry Goldwater on March 18, 1964 (Issues and Answers). The increase in the strength of the United States nuclear deterrent between 1961 and 1964 has been almost incredible. Not only quantitatively, but qualitatively, the present Administration has created the strongest nation in the history of the world.

Whether one speaks in terms of deliverable megatons more hardened and dispersed ICBM's, more mobile nuclear forces (eg. 22 Polaris subs today; 41 expected), combat-ready troops, tactical fighter strength, special guerilla forces. Air-lift capacity or in other military terms, today's America has more than enough strength to bulwark its promises to its friends around the world that peace and freedom will be secured. There is no exaggeration in the statement that when the Democratic Administration inherited the problem in 1960, our defense posture was on the road to becoming second to Russia. This Administration has far exceeded the hopes of those of feared such a tenuous existence.

Today, as an American, one can feel safe, secure and proud that our voice of peace and freedom will be heard and respected throughout the globe. Meantime, the Senator from Arizona spends all of his time on what is essentially a fictitious issue, a broader permission in relation to the orders of field commanders in the use of tactical nuclear weapons. One should not be too severe on Senator Goldwater for choosing such an insignificant issue (wherein his suggestion may not differ essentially from current Administration policy). After all, he has so little from which to choose.

Miscellaneous

There are any number of other issues which could be presented as evidence of a clear, definite and mature Administration approach to the problems of our complex society. In Space, the War on Poverty, Youth (the Peace Corps) and many others, this Administration has shown a clear and consisten t policy. That is why this campaign has been described by so many as being without issues. Senator Goldwater has the burden of proof of suggesting issues and he finds that burden impossible to sustain. He opposes the Kennedy-Johnson record, a record which has created maximum U. S. prestige throughout the world and has inspired the confidence of our friends and the respect of our enemies. Like President Kennedy, President Johnson is not satisfied with this achievement. We must continue to war against intolerance both at home and abroad. We must continue to attack poverty at home and abroad. We must continue to develop our moral consciousness so that our society, which is inextricably a part of the world society, may continue to preserve, develop and perfect all of mankind.

In order to accomplish these purposes, a nation must be aware of its purpose and destiny. Thomas Jefferson's suggestion that a nation cannot be both ignorant and free is especially true today. The importance of education cannot be overestimated but, at this point, let us compare the remarks of Barry Goldwater with those of President Johnson. On October 3, 1960, Senator Goldwater remarked, "The government has no right to educate children. The parents, you and I, have that responsibility. The child has no right to an education. In most cases, the children will get along very well without it." (Speech at Jacksonville, Florida). On January 6, 1963, President Johnson said, "America's committment to education as the 'Guardian Genius of Democracy' is a committment which has not yet been made and is not now being kept. We cannot long afford to continue on this course." Speaking of the revolution in education, which he foresaw in accordance with Democratic hopes for the future, President Johnson considered the subject again in June, 1963: "I believe we have come to a time when the century in which we live should hence forth be known as the Century of the Educated Man."

STEP FORWARD WITH FORD MOTOR COMPANY

An Open Letter to the 1965 College Graduate from Donald N. Frey, Assistant General Manager, Ford Division of Ford Motor Company

Donald N. Frey was awarded a bachelor's degree in metallurgical engineering by the University of Michigan in 1947 and a doctorate in 1950. One year later, he joined Ford Motor Company as manager of the Metallurgical Department in the Scientific Laboratory. In 1962, Dr. Frey was appointed assistant general manager of the Ford Division with responsibility for all engineering, product planning and purchasing activities. He is 41 years old.

America's automobile industry is in the midst of a challenging era, with prospects of an even more exciting and demanding tempo in the years to come. Ford Motor Company is determined to achieve leadership in all phases of its operation. This leadership promises to bring lasting success to the company, its employes and its stockholders.

It will take people to accomplish this objective. Engineering, finance, styling, marketing, product planning, sales—all require people with the knowledge, judgment and personal drive to avail themselves of the unprecedented opportunities offered by a great industry.

The automobile business is growing. More cars are being bought now than ever before. With increases in population and consumer buying power, even more will be bought in the future. Realizing this, Ford Motor Company seeks to attract college graduates who have the capacity to grow with the company and the market.

Right now, our plans call for employing about a thousand of the best 1965 graduates we can find, with all types of educational backgrounds. We need specialists, but we also need persons with broad liberal-arts training who can handle a wide variety of assignments. Actually, in our company, many graduates grow into jobs totally unrelated to their degrees. They have discovered that Ford offers intellectually challenging opportunities for those with the ability to seize them. We invite you to make the same discovery.

Contact your Placement Office and arrange to see our representative.

An Equal Opportunity Employer

Cliché's Of Socialism

By Brenden Brett

Aristotle, some twenty-three centuries ago, developed the idea of the middle way or, as he thought of it, "the golden mean". He used the term to describe certain virtues which consist of an intelligent moderation between the extremes of two opposite vices.

One concludes from his reflections that courage lies midway between cowardice and rashness; liberality between stinginess and extravagance; ambition between sloth and greed; modesty between a milquetoast type of humility and the strutting dictator's kind of pride; frankness between secrecy and loquacity; friendship between quarrelsomeness and flattery; good humor between moroseness and buffoonery; self-control between indecisiveness and impulsiveness.

Ecclesiastes

A century or so later the idea was given a perverse twist in Ecclesiastes — descending perilously close to the modern view: "In my vain life I have seen everything; there is a righteous man who perishes in his righteousness, and there is a wicked man who prolongs life in his evildoing. Be not righteous overmuch, and do not make yourself overwise; why should you destroy yourself? Be not wicked overmuch, neither be a fool; why should you die before your time?"

In the twelfth century the eminent rabbi, Maemonides — again on the high road — was counseling his followers to choose the golden mean. His middle way, like Aristotle's, was the ideal route which leads between two extremes of opposite vices.

Intellectual Sloppiness

In our day, "middle-of-the-road" is more an excuse for intellectual sloppiness than a guide to moral discipline. There is nothing golden about it and it does not qualify as a mean. For instance, there is no middle way between monogamy and polygamy. Nor is there any golden mean that can be derived from subdividing a single vice. Halfway between the theft of a small amount and the theft of a large amount is robbery all the way, no matter how you slice it!

In the jargon of our times "I'm a middle-of-the-roader", has only political connotations. It means, when the drift is socialistic, that its advocates waver midway between a modicum of socialism and whatever extreme of socialism happens to be in popular favor. Thus, the middle-of-the-roader always finds himself wherever the currents of opinion dictate; he has no other basis for judging where his stand should be. The more extreme the socialistic view, the deeper will he be engulfed in socialism.

Confusion

Quite obviously, there is no virtue in being a political middle-of-the-roader. This position sounds something like the golden mean, but there the resemblance ends. What we have is a confusion of sound with sense. The former is not even a reasonable facsimile of the latter. Middle-of-the-roadism is but a platitudinous position riding inexcusably on the reputation of a splendid philosophical conviction.

Author Ryan Questions Catholics: "Are Parents Doing Their Jobs?"

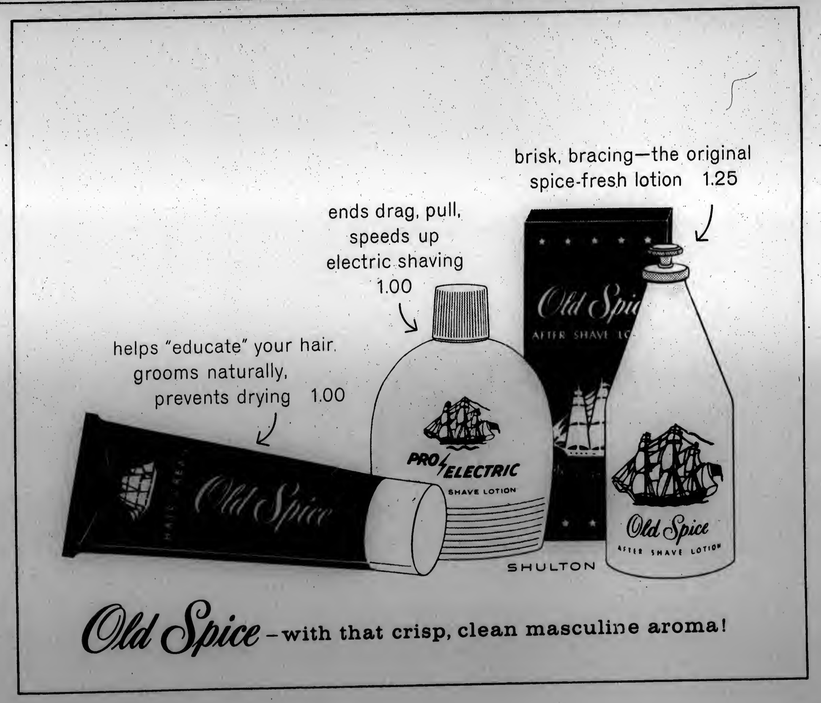
by Tom Krause

Mary Perkins Ryan, noted author, liturgist, and catechist, addressed the Villanova Forum on October 15 on the subject of her book, Are Parochial Schools the Answer. A crowd of 1000 people heard Mrs. Ryan discuss her interesting thesis in the Field House under poor acoustical conditions.

Her thesis is: Catholics should carefully think over what the policy of the Church should be in the future regarding education. Mrs. Ryan posed this question: "Are parochial schools the best answer for Catholic formation?"

She mentioned that the job of today's education should be to create a dialogue with the Church of God and the Church of our brethren. In the early days of the Church, adults got into general education as a necessity. Now the Catholic Church is committed to religious education of her children.

Poor Shape



The Confraternity on Christian Doctrine, an official Church organization, lacks the manpower, money and prestige that Catholic schools have. Newman clubs on secular campuses are in poor shape.

Mrs. Ryan stated, "The only hope for vitality (in education) is a great concentration on the part of adults. A good example of what we need is a committed Christian community." She feels that it is possible for society to work out a more human and catholic system of education.

In questioning parents, she asked them how much they were doing to educate their children. She encouraged students to learn how to enter into the dialogue of the Church and to help themselves in the formation of religious education.

Question Period

In a stimulating question and answer period, Mrs. Ryan outlined her program by suggesting how her theories could be put into practice. When asked about her own children's schooling (she has five), she admitted that at times she was unduly critical of the schools they attended. But she felt that parents should stick to Catholic schools unless they prove to be inferior to secular institutions.

Naval Commander Discusses Service Programs, Training

The Naval Information Team, a by Lieutenant Commander Sneed and Lieutenant Mathews, spoke to interested men on the various aspects of the Naval programs on October 12 and 13. These officers were here primarily to recruit candidates for the Naval Reserve Officers' Candidate School.

At this school, the college graduate receives a concentrated training course in naval science. Successful completion of this program merits for him a commission as an ensign in the Naval Reserve. After a three year period of active duty, the trainee may apply either for a commission in the Regular Navy or to return to civilian life.

If he should receive a commission the ensign becomes either a Line officer, a member of the Supply Corps, or an officer in the Civil Engineering Corps.

As a line officer, the graduate is in the field of naval service in which he might be considered the "all around officer." As a junior line officer he is trained under the supervision of experienced senior officers in the technical aspects of his assignment and in the broader realms of naval science. This training and the responsibilities he assumes, develop his ability to make correct decisions at the proper time, and the young officer eventually advances into areas of a naval career where gravel responsibilities are his.

The new line officer is also being trained by his senior officer and his commanding officer so that he soon can take his turn as officer of the deck. This is in addition to his duties as the division officer or head of a department, and is important to his future promotion and qualification for command at sea.

A newly comissioned officer may serve in the Supply Corps, the business arm of the Navy. As a Supply Corps officer, he serves in all types of naval vessels as well as in Navy supply centers, control points, or supply depots both at home and on foreign shores.

Finally, the officer assigned to duty in the Civil Engineering Corps can look forward to duty with a group of highly trained engineers responsible for the planning, design, construction, and maintenance of the naval shore establishments all over the world.

Any senior interested should file an application with a Naval Recruiting Station before the second semester. During this time the candidate is under no obligation to any branch of service and he is not eligible for the draft. However, if the trainee should wait until graduation to act, he will be eligible for the draft during the entire time the application is being processed.

The requirements for the OCS are simply that the prospective candidate pass the physical and mental exams, be a graduate of an accredited college or university, and be between the ages of 19 and 27 (except in the case of a Law Specialist, for whom the age limit is extended to 33 years of age.)

A return trip is tentatively scheduled for December 9 and 10 when the representatives will again answer any questions about this and other Navy programs.

The following is a breakdown of the candidates' appeal to those who did list their colleges.

Because of the possibility of party switching (crossing party lines to vote for a candidate) political speculators have closely followed elections on the local level as well as opinion polls to observe this occurrence.

In additon, the strength of the independent boc is also closely examined. An analysis of these two circumstances seeks to find a pattern of behavior for these Phenomenon.

The reason given by those Republicans and Democrats who jumped their repsective parties and those voters listed as independents and who voted for a candidate were remarkably similar. The reasoning was not because of the nuclear or civil rights issues but from another direction.

Those Democrats who voted for Mr. Goldwater (71 along with 36 slated as "other" or independent) cited not his stands on these two topics but rather his policies for dealing with communism and the rest of the world. Continued reference was also made to the Senator's honesty, sincereity and integrity as a criterion for judging presidential timber.

On the other hand, Republicans and independents who voted for the President, 104 and 50 respectively, spoke of his foreign policies, experience, congressional record and alleged inconsistencies by the Arizonan.

Underlining these patterns were strong and prevalend beliefs that the cause for switching parties, was that the selectee was "the lesser of two evls" a theory that had not been present to any notable extent in any of the national polls.

Mayor Theodore R. McKeldin Speaks To Law School Group

Speaking as a quest of the Order of Coif before an overflow audienece in Garey Hall on Friday night, the Honorable Theodore R. McKeldin, Mayor of Baltimore, spoke on "What is Good Government." The Mayor began by presenting Father Klekotka with the flags of Baltimore and Maryland and a book he had written.

Mayor McKeldin began by saying that Politics is a means, to an end. This means should be an ethical one; it should be realistic. He said, "Now in the heat of the election campaign, we must look to the future and be guided by the past. We must not look too far in the future or be enslaved by the past."

He said our foreign policy should be one of alertness. We should realize that we are not the only nation that is powerful and we should not force our ideas on others.. For what is good for the part is not necessarily good for the whole.

The Mayor went on to say our chief defense is in our domestic policy. As a nation we believe in the rights of man, not armed might.

Mr. McKeldin then said this year the voter must make the decision. He must chose between appearance or reality.. He must affirm or repudiate the principles of democracy. In obvious reference to Barry Goldwater, the Mayor said that some would have us revrse these principles; that some fanatics would have us divorce ourselves from reality.

The Mayor then made a strong statement on States' Rights. He said that no rights ever existed without duties. If state neglects duties, then it forfeits its rights. If a state repudiates its duties, then it repudiates its rights..

In a question and answer period afterwards, Mayor McKeldin said that the main issue in the campaign is the race issue and we must decide in favor of civil rights for all. .

Student Council Proposes Drive For Kennedy Library

commented on the Forum lecture series, student union affairs, and the SGA dance held on October 2, respectively.. President Furst also described the condition of Robert Cowan, treasurer of the SGA, injured in an accident on campus a few weeks ago. He has since been released from the hospital..

Debate and discussion on the motions then began. Under old business, mention was made of the presidential preference election held on campus last Thursday. Also, implementation of the motion creating a used-book exchange which will operate at the beginning and end of each semester will be carried out to completion.

Motions

Regarding the Kennedy fund-raising drive, the makers of the motion Steve Freind and Rusty Miller tabled it at the Congress meeting on September 30. The motion, as it was first introduced, proposed that the SGA to sponsor a fund-raising drive — the profits of which will be donated to the John F. Kennedy Memorial Library Fund.

It was later amended so that the profits would consist of the return on the sale of the book, Four Days, and the sale of tickets to the campus showing of the movie "Battle of the Presidency" held on October 21. However, after discussion, these proposals were found to be unacceptable and the motion was tabled.

New Drive

Freind removed the motion from the table and suggested a book to be comprised of essays written by those who were close to John Kennedy, along with ads procured from local merchants. The motion, which was passed, was amended to read as originally written, in order that implementation could be effected in the best manner possible.

The other motion, introduced by Tim Coyle, was unanimously passed. It was moved that the IBM office be requested to compile a list by class of students with addresses and forward same to the student activities office.

Concept Magazine Conducts Psychological Reading Poll

Concept, a journal which canvasses the University to find its most interesting and enlightening topics to relate to the student body, is again churning toward another anticipated publication.

With the success of last year's edition still fresh in the minds of Villanova students, the staff of the Concept is striving toward an even better magazine to present for the persual of the students.

To realize ths goal, the conceptors are digging deep into Villanova's resources to obtain their articles. Among these articles will be a poll of Villanova students questioning what they read and why.

Because most student's reading time is occupied with required studies, he disires that his limited time spent in independent reading be both profitable and interesting. Through this poll, the Concept hopes to give to Villanovans the chance to learn which books and magazines they will enjoy the most.

Teacher Efficiency

Another topic regularly heard in campus discussion is the efficiency of the teachers. The opinion of some students: "He sure knows his stuff. . .if he could only teach," and the question "Why" will be answered by as competent a panel as Villanova can offer.

This panel will consist of the eight professors who have received the teaching awards over the last four years. These awards are presented to the two professors who are voted the most efficient teachers by both their students and their fellow educators. Each of these eight professors will submit an article on efficient teaching for the coming edition of Concept.

Other articles will deal with the work of the Villanova students in Mexico—VAMP, and with an up to date bibliography on Civil Rights in connection with Martin Luther King's appearance at the Villanova Forum.

Student Material

These topics and others will be included in this edition of the Concept. If students have any material that might be of interest, they are asked to submit it to the student council office. Otherwise, look for the Concept when it comes out. It is expected to be published before December.

Freindly Foolishness

Main Line Success Story

By Steve Freind

If you happen to be traveling in the northwestern section of the country, you might be able to hear a strange rumbling. No, it's not Barry Goldwater cutting off the seaboard and setting it adrift in the Atlantic. Neither is it Gene Mauch butting his head against Connie Mack Stadium. It's the sound of Villanova's unbeaten Wildcats breaking up every opponent in sight.

In five contests, Bell's Bombers have riddled the enemy defense for 149 point while displaying the tightest defense since the Alamo. In the process, they've succeeded in making more than a few experts look silly. Take, for example, the remarks of an astute sports scribe from Boston College. He confiuently forecasted that Holy Cross would throttle "an unusually weak Villanova squad"—undoubtedly the finest prediction since the Literary Digest went with Alf Landon in a landslide. If memory servecs correct, the Crusaders ended up on the short end of a 32-0 score. It is not known whether the B.C. writer issued a retraction in his next column, but it's probable that he will be able to assert his talents by writing an obituary in two weeks.

Only last week,, the Associated Press learned the folly of underestimating the 'Cats, prognosticating a 25-7 Delaware victory.. As the titlt began, the question was not whether Villanova would triumph, but rather would Delaware have enough gladiators left to complete the game, as the 'Cats rock-ribbed line unmercifully hammered the Hens.

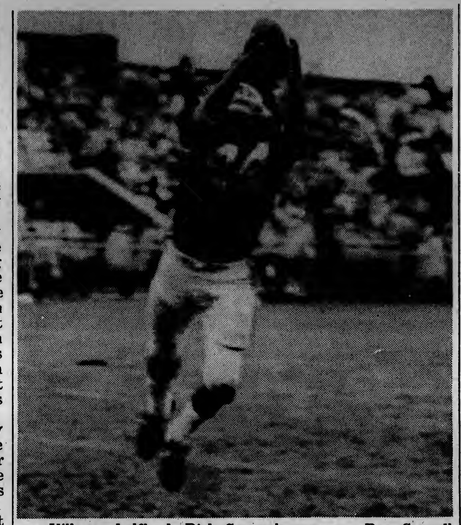
True, ,these predictions bbordered on the ridiculous, but even the Wildcats most avid supporters find it hard to believe that the Blue and White is sporting an unblemished record at the half-way mark. It's interesting to try to analyze the reason for the success story on the Main Line.

Talent

To begin with Alex Bell has some tremendous talent in his stable. There's Al Atkinson, the quiet co-captain who makes a habit of camping in the enemy backfield. Last year, this writer went out on not too weak a limb and flatly stated that Atkinson was the best lineman in the country. Watching his performance this year, this opinion has only been strengthened.

The rest of the line is not far behind. The forms of John McDonnell, Mike Strofolino, Tom Smith, Roger Agin, Emmett Michaels and Jack McDonald can constantly be seen gang tackling opposing backs, scooping up fumbles and harassing enemy passers. Welded together by Lou Ferry and Joe Faragalli, this savage seen forms the backbone of a defense which has yielded only 2.6 points per game.

There's not much else that can be said about the Pony Backfield that hasn't aready been stated. Dave Connell and his colts have rambled through every foe for huge chunks of yardage, giving the 'Cats their most explosive offense in years in the process. Backfield coach Joe Rogers can take a lot of cerdit for the best herd of back seen on the Main Line in quite a while.



Particular mention must be given to Connell. Words cannot describe the lift he has given to the 'Cats grid hopes. Rarely has an athlete taken as much criticism throughout his high school career and yearling college season. Rarely has an athlete proven his critics so wrong. It's a safe bet to say that the 'Cats would not be where they are were it no for Number 14

More Than Talent

But there's more to the 'Cats success than talent—a lot more. It's that intangible something that sends a wave of electricity through the stands when they take the field, hacneyed term known as desire, considered trite by many, but the basic ingredient of a great team. It's that something that makes Chip Bender stand in the locker room and praise the play of fellow soph Tony Ferrainolo, that makes John Kelleher talk for a half hour, about the way the defensie line hits, that makes Mike Buono play with a broken hand.Go into the locker room after a game and you can feel it. Sure, it's trite, it's old fashioned, but it's great. It's the reason why the 'Cats won't be beaten this year, simply because they don't want to be beaten. It's the reason why that Boston College sportswriter will be proven wrong in two weeks.

Perhaps the 'Cats spirit was best displayed last week by John McDonnell. The usually quiet co-captain walked into the locker room after the Delaware game and yelled, "We're on our way, baby." He's right—the 'Cats are on their way. They're on their way to an unbeaten season and a trip down south.

It has been said that Jacksonville is beautiful in December. For those who are not aware, Jacksonville is the site of the Gator Bowl.

Villanoa halfback Dick Sernyak snares a Dae Connell aerial in Saturday's action against Delaware. Sernyak scored two touchdowns in 'Cats rout of the Hens.

'Kittens Drop Two; Lose To Bullis Prep, West Chester Frosh

By Buzz Langan

Villanova's freshmen football team, hampered by injuries to many key players and a lack of experience in the defensive backfield, has gotten off to a slow start, and must win both its remaining games to break even.

On October 9, the Wildkittens journeyed to West Chester, only to be denied 32-27. Ed Bolniger scored the first touchdown of the season for the Wildkittens, racing 60 yards off tackle as Villanova took an early lead. After two Ram counters, Dan Cranly took quarterback Jack Lignelli's pass and simply outran the Ram secondary for a 43 yard score.

Just before the half ended, this combination clicked again for a 57 yard pass and run as Villanova took a 21-13 lead to the locker room.

This lead was short lived, however, as the Rams blocked a Villanova punt, recovering on the Blue and White 15 line and going in for the score. The next time they got the ball, they drove 80 yards to take a 26-21 advantage.

Villanova returned the compliment, with Bolniger going off tackle for a one yard tally. With the ball at midfield, and about two minutes remaining, Villanova appeared on the verge of its first 1964 victory. From punt formation, the West Chester fullback then threw a 50 yard scoring pass to beat the Wildkittens.

Last Saturday, the Frosh fell to Bullis Prep's highly touted varsity 39-12. Trading scores on the opening and ensuing kickoffs, the Wildkittens were down 18-7 on Joe Greco's score. Late in the half, Jerry Render took Lignelli's flip for a 15 yard score, just before the quarterback was injured.

After the first two games, it would appear that the Frosh have a strong interior line and quick backs.

Wildcat Pistol Team Presents RNA Trophy To Father President

By Bob McIntyre

Last Wednesday afternoon in the office of the President a cup representing the RNA Inter-Collegiate International Pistol Team Championship, won last season, was presented to Father Klekotkta by the pistol team.

All-American

Also a plaque commemorating the RNA pick of George Sinclair to the All-American Pistol Team was presented to Father President.

Ten regular varsity members return this year to keep the tradition of Villanova's fine pistol team intact. The captains for this year's squad are Marty Brennen ad All-American Anthony Moscia.

Bright, Outlook

The captains say that after this year basic Markmenship course, mainly for freshman, was very promising and this years squad could be the best ever.

The teams on this years schedule include some of the best in the country: Air Force Academy, Army, Navy, Coast Guard Academy, and many others.

Villanova Harriers Win First Two Meets; Hyland Stars For Cats

By Jerry Bruderle

Dave Hyland captured two first place finishes on the Fairmount Cross-country course this past week and established a record in doing so. Dave covered the five mile course in 26 minutes and 46 seconds in a meet against St. Joseph's on October 10.

This was 28 seconds faster than the course record set last year by former Villanova star and Tokyo Olmpian Vic Zwolak. Zwolak set his record of 27:14 against the Quantico Marines and in doing so he defeated Marine ace Billy Mills. It was Mills who, last week in Japan, scored the upset of the 1964 Olympics by winning the ten thousand meter run.

Villanova took seven of the first nine places in defeating the Hawks 19-42. Lou Kotekas, who took second place, also broke Zwolak's record, finishing only two seconds behind Hyland. Tommy Sullivan placed third.

Mike Ferko finished sixth, followed his older brother, Marty in seventh. Bobby Cubbin finished eighth, and Jimmy Orr took ninth. Villanova's total of nineteen points was four above the perfect score of fifteen..

Hyland Again

Hyland took first place again on Saturday against the Quantico Marines in leading Villanova to a 22-34 victory. Dave had to hold off a strong stretch run by DelGrado of the Marines to gain the triumph.. DelGrado finished only one second being Hyland's time of 27:10 in the rainy weather..

Kotekas and Sullivan tied for third, over thrity seconds ahead of the next Marine. Marty Ferko finished sixth. Jimmy Orr placed eighth and Mike Ferko finished tenth..

The climax of the Cross-Country season arrives next month with the IC4A and NCAA championship meets coming on sucessive weeks. The IC4A meet will be held at Van Cortland Park in New York on November 16. Last year Villanova placed third after winning the title two years ago.

Xavier Preview

By Jim Proud

Last year the Wildcats were defeated by the Sophomore-laden Xavier eleven by 27-0. The star of the game for the Musketeer's was SophomoreX halfback Walt Mainer.

In the '63 season Mainer was the leading ground gaining Soph in the country with a total of 744 yards. This year however, Villanova will not have to cope with his running abilities because he tore a cartledge in his knee in the Cincinnati game..

The Musketeer's are not a one man team however and will bring a strong team into Goodreau stadium on the 31st.

The are strngthened by returning lettermen in the four backfield positions. Quarterback Joe Wyzkoski is the best signal caller in recent years to lead the Xavier football team.

Wyskoski, who would rather run than pass, is backed by Sophomore Carrol Williams when coach Ed Biles wants to throw. He has thrown for 135 yards with 8 completions in 18 tries.

Since Mainer has been injured his right halfback Roger Thesing has been doing most of the ground work. He comes to Villanova sporting a 6.6 yards per carry average.

The Musketeers also have a strong defense. In their game with Ohio University they scored all of their points as a result of their defense. They won by the score 23-19 when they turned two fumbles and an interception into scores.

In the series between the 'Cats and Xavier, Villanova holds a 4-2 edge, never losing a game at home.

Villanova Rugby Club Defeated By Lions In Rain-Marred Game

By Joe Sumilas

The Villanova Rugby club lost Saturday morning to a strong Penn Sate team 11-3. The Villanova team, with many of its first string players unable to make the trip were no match for the powerful Penn State squad.

Scoring

The Wildcats, hampered by bad weather and poor officiating were able to score only once. The lone tally was registered by Bert Lambino on a field goal. Denn LaHiff also scored on a penalty kick, but it was nullified.

Strength Big Factor

Play was extremely sloppy on both sides, but the size and strength of many ex-football players on the Penn State squad paid off. The Wildcats inability to cope with this size, the inefficiency of the refs, and the bad weather added up to a dismal morning for the Rugby club.

The Villanova Rugby club plays its next game at home, this Saturday at 2 o'clock,

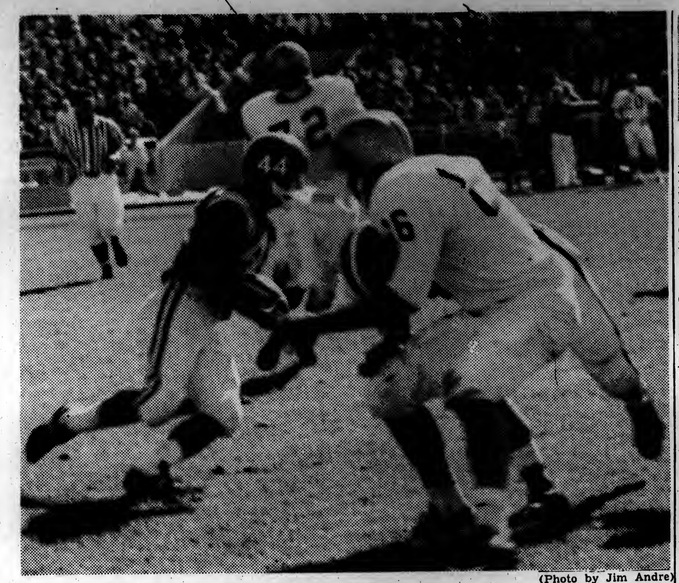
Bell's Bombers

Recently an article appeared in Sports Illustrated entitled, "The Seven Magnificents." It gave an account of the fearsome defensive line which is now the main reason for a drive to defensive supremacy in the country being carried on by Florida State University. That article has inspired this author to the realization that anyone who has witnessed but one of the five football contests in which Villanva has been overpoweringly victorious will believe that our own forward contingent must be rated among the best. A visit to the office of Ken Mugler, director of sports information and publicity for the blue and white, led to the discovery of some interesting statistics which serve to further assert the capabilities of our forward wall.

As of October eleventh the Cats were eighth in the nation in rushing offense, having gained 237 yds. per game, and in the same bracket defensively, having allowed a mere 66 yds. per game. A more startling figure was the 3.3 points per game which the local block busters had allowed, leaving them tied with the mighty Texas at fourth in the nation.

Highly acclaimed on the national scene have been the Wildcat co-captains, Al Atkinson, right tackle, and John McDonnell, right end. Atkinson, a twenty-one year old senior who hails from Monsignor Bonner High, has been named to the All-East team several times. A mid-west sportswriter has gone so far as to name him the best tackle in the country. Many agree that he is practically assured of an All-American berth. McDonnell may be on the same road, as the defensive play of this twenty-one year old senior, who played his high school ball at St. Thomas More in Philadelphia, has been consistently magnificent. He has also caught four passes for 89 yds. and a touchdown, and intercepted another for 4 more yards.



However, a line is composed of seven men, and the other five berths have been somewhat sensationally manned also. The play of Tom Smith, our twenty-two year old senior tackle from Austin Prep in Michigan, seems to indicate that he has an undying love for enemy backfields as he usually finishes every play in that position. Our guard-linebackers, Mike Strofolino from St. Francis Prep. in Brooklyn, and Jack McDonald from LaSalle High in Philly, have a nasty habit of either plugging or opening holes in opposing lines. Both are twenty year old seniors.

At the pivot coach Bell has flexibility due to the presence of a through the middle powerhouse in big Roger Agin, a twenty-one year old junior from La Salle, and an artistic pulling blocker in Chappy Moore, a twenty-one year old senior graduate of Bonner. The left end post is more than amply filled by Emmett Michaels, a twenty-one year old senior from Portage Area High, who has snagged a pass for 16 yds. and a touchdown, as well as intercepting another for 36 yds. and a six pointer.

Although the backs do the bulk of the ball carrying, as they have quite efficiently up to this point, they can go only as far as the line will take them. In this case it seems as though their goal may be a third post season bowl in the space of four short years.

Bell's Bombers Half Way Home Crush Hens For Fifth In Row

By Steve Freind

The track was wet but the Ponies kept running as Villanova ran its unbeaten string to five, hammering Delaware 34-0 on Saturday before 10,700 rain-soaked fans.. Slogging through the Blue Hens' line for 279 yards, Bell's Bombers left little doubt that they are a serious contender for best-in-the-East laurels. The 'Cats also hit the airlanes for 81 yards as Admiral Dave Nelson's boys were sent home with one of the worst defeats in their history.

As in every game this season, Dave Connell got the Wildcats started on the touchdown parade, flipping a five yard scoring strike to John McDonnell at 10:45 of the opening stanza. The Villanova tally was set up by Joe Santomauro's brilliant 34 yard punt return. Santamauro, playing his finest game in a blue and white uniform, was by far the classiest back on the field, scoring one Wildcat touchdown and electrifying the crowd with a beautiful 79 yard punt return which was nullified by a clipping penalty..

'Cats March 96

Early in the second period, after thwarting a Delaware drive on the four, the 'Cats marched 96 yeards to rack up their second marker. Connell supplied the main spark in the drive, chewing up 48 yards in three carries, including a 35 yard jaunt down the sidelines. Dick Sarnyak traveled the last five yards to the Delaware end zone. Jim Case added his second conversion and the 'Cats had a 14-0 lead.

All-American Al Atkinson, turning in his fifth straight stellar performance, set up the 'Cats third tally by recovering a Blue Hen fumble at midfield. On the first play Connell rambled 19 yards to the 31 but was forced out of the game with a sprained ankle. Sophomore Jerry Belotti entered the game and kept his passing record perfect by firing a 31 yard touchdown aerial to John Kelleher. Kelleher, who has now grabbed three scoring tosses in the past two games, hauled in the pass at the 15 and carried two Hen defenders into the end zone. Case's kick was wide and the 'Cats carried a 20-0 advantage into the locker room.

Sernyak Scores

After taking the field in the second half, Connell's Corral wasted little time in ringing up another score. On the fifth play from scrimmage, Sernyak faked into the middle of the line, cut to his right and raced 50 yards into the end zone. Connell, back in the game after having his ankle iced, claimed Sernyak's run was one of the finest he has ever seen. "Dick had blocking for the first 15 yards, then he was on his own," Connell said. "He really took off." Case again converted and Villanova led 27-0.

Sernyak also set up the 'Cats final tally, recovering a Hen fumble on the visitors' 39. Bill Andrejko, another of the Wildcats stable of fine quarterbacks, engineered a drive to the 7, where Santomauro knifed off tackle for the score. Case added fourth conversion and the 'Cats had their second straight 34-0 victory.

Bell was extremely pleased with the victory. "It was a real team effort," he said. "It's hard to single out any one man, but Santomauro really played a game. And Connell, well he's been great all season." Bell rewarded the 'Cats performance by calling off Monday's practice.

As usual, the Villanova defense was brutal. The 'Cats limited Delaware Halfback Bill Hopkins, who entered the game with over 450 yards rushing and a 9 yard average, to 62 yards in 20 carries. Overall, the Hens rolled up 223 yards, 118 on passing out most of the Delaware ground was gained between the twenty yard lines. Going into the game, the 'Cats were tied with Texas for fifth place in total points allowed. By holding their opponents scoreless for the third time this year, the 'Cats lowered their average to a scant 2.6 points per game.

Dickie Bird

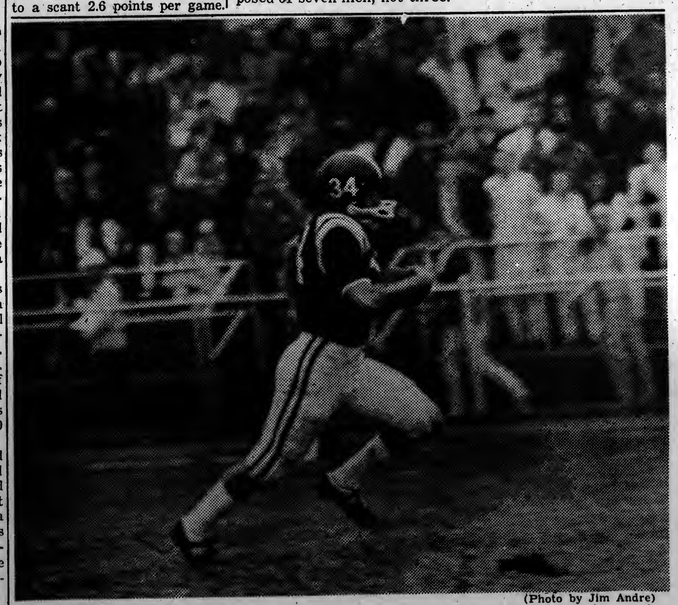
by Rusty Miller

Week after week this column seems to be an advertisement for Philadelphia Catholic League football and (much to my dismay) more specifically Monsignor Bonner football. I remember my freshman math teacher asking whether Villanova was a boarding institution for Long Island waifs or a day-hop college for Bonner. I've often wondered if you couldn't stretch that one further and ask if Bonner's gridiron grads aren't automatically Villanova's future frosh.

Four Friars

Actually, for those who share my position as a graduate (and I use that term loosely) of one of the other Catholic League schools, things are not as bad as they might appear. In reality there are only four former" Friars" on the team. It just happens that they are all (shall we give them . . . better than average?) ball players.

The third in my series . . . It is ironic that in high school Dick Sernyak played in the shadow of his halfback teammate. Now, that former teammate is forgotten in football circles but whenever Villanova's gleaming record is being mentioned, the name Sernyak is unavoidable.



The "Bird" is not a great football player, but he is a "better than average", one who gives everything he has. Though he weighs only 180 pounds he runs like a fullback. Dick, like his teammate Tom Brown, is the perfect compliment to the Wildcat's quick, mobile line. Not a good broken field runner, he usually looks for the daylight and steamrolls ahead. A good hard runner, he falls to no shoestring tackles and if he finds running room, he heads for the uprights like a homing pigon.

For the season he has totaled 45 yards on 203 carries and has scored 18 points. The 21 year old senior from Havertown is also a frequent target of the 'Cat's fine passing quarterbacks, especially on the short pattern. He has nabbed 4 passes for 99 yards.

The "Bonner Boys" seem to be headed for another championship (bowl-type) season.

* * * * * * * * *

Earlier in the season it was noted in this column that the left side of the Wildcat line had turned in a less than satisfactory performance against our first opponent. Since then, the right side has received much publicity — and deservedly so. However with the insertion of Tom Smith at tackle, the left side has come up to expectations. It is time to recognize that Villanova has a solid, outstanding line composed of seven men, not three.

Lyndon Johnson Elected President

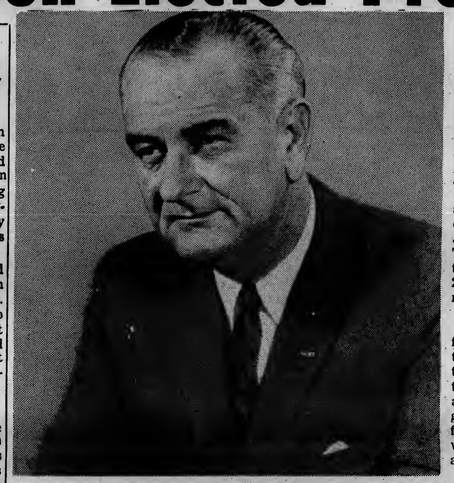
By T. Paul Bruderle

Lyndon B. Johnson has been elected the thrity-seventh President of the United States. His election thus assures the Democrats of at least four more years in office.

Mr. Johnson became the first southerner in the nation's highest office since President Andrew Johnson nearly 100 years ago. The President had taken over the reins of office on November 22, 1963, following the assassination of John F. Kennedy.

Record Turnout

A record turnout of voters flocked to the polls yesterday as the Democrats evidently maintained their pluralities in both the House of Representatives and the Senate. Also up for grabs were the seats of twenty-five of the nation's governors as well as numerous other positions at the state and local levels.



Very early returns from across the nation showed no definite trend toward either party, but as the day and night wore on, indications became increasingly strong that Mr. Johnson and his Vice-Presidential running-mate, Hubert H. Humphrey, would be the chief executives of the U.S.

Front Lash

The Republicans had been counting on mass voter defections from the Democratic Party and the support of the politically powerful independent bloc to insure a GOP victory.

Speculation was rampant, however, that the reverse was true as large numbers of Republicans voted for Mr. Johnson, a recent political phenomena termed the "frontlash."

Such a "frontlash" could bring about a reorganization of the upper structure of the Republican Party in which former Vice-President Richard M. Nixon and Governor William Scranton, of Pennsylvania, could play major roles. Both men had been touring the country attempting to mend party fences.

SGA Passes Seven Motions In Legislative 'Battle Royal'

A lively meeting of the Student Congress last Wednesday had a little bit of everything. Filled debate and con fusion on the rules of parliamentary procedure, the meeting supplied the SGA members with nine motions for con sideration.

Some of the confusion arose because to the Congress tried to rush through the motions. Since there was a Villanova Forum debate later in the evening and many members wished to attend, they desired a short meeting.

In committee reports, Bill Bates, student union chairman, asked for all organizations' cooperation in the distribution of posters and flyers throughout school. Posters should be placed in the committee box in the SGA office.

Brian Banmiller, chairman of the Spirit Committee, reported on the meeting that he and Tom Furst, president of SGA had with their counterparts in the Big Five schools. .The purpose of the meeting was to establish a spirit of goodwill among the participating schools at the Palestra.

First Motion

The most polemical motion, which gave rise to some misunderstanding, was the first on the agenda. Proposed and amended by Brenden Brett and Bill Manfred, the motion as passed reads: the SGA will initiate the policy of having two polling places for class elections. These places are Alumni Gym Bartley Cafeteria.

There were some charges of "railroading" among the Congress after this motion was passed with debate limited to ten minutes. In trying to facilitate matters, President Furst called for a vote on the original motion (which proposed three polling places) instead of the admendment. A roll call was necessary and the motion as amended was passed by a simple majority.

Three motions were made and passed by the legislative team of Steve Friend and Jim Griffin.

The first permits students to list books which are needed but unavailable at the Library and to form a committee to assist tthe Library staff in implementing this policy.

Stack Privilege

By the second motion, the SGA will make public, through the Villanovan and other campus media, that open stack privileges are available to those students who apply to the dean of their respective schools and receive permission for this privilege. The other Friend- Griffin motion states the SGA will support the concept of voluntary student directories compiled by and for the individual classes of Villanova.

Dave Moore, executive vice-president for student affairs, tied for the most pieces of legislation passed with three. Most significant and controversial was his motion that the SGA investigate the feasibility of recommending that the various department heads adopt a specific policy regarding the choice and duration of the use of textbooks.

Finally passed by a roll call

'Le Chanson de Paris' Keys Weekend For Sophomore Class

By Jeff Radowich

A new and exciting spirit will invade the Villanova campus this Friday night when the Class of 1967 engages in the traditional Sophomore Weekend.

Promising the most lavish production in the Sophomore Cotillion's history, the Steering Committee has planned the decorations around the theme, "Le Chanson de Paris," the Song of Paris.

Spouting

Fountains spouting gaily-colored water, park benches strewn attractively about the Fieldhouse, pictorial representations of famous Paris landmarks, all this and more will be utilized to provide the setting for the annual fall spectacle.

To complement the romantic atmosphere, the crystal tintinnabulations of Johnny Austin and his twelve piece orchestra have been obtained. Mr. Austin's past performances have established him as an artist in his own right, while his musical magicians have distinguished themselves wherever they have played.

Queen Crowned

The highlight of the weekend will occur wen the Sophomore Class Queen is crowned during the evening dance.

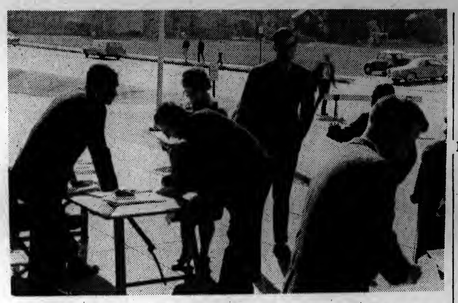
But, of course, college students will be collegiate and thus the semi-Liverpoolian "Critters" have been engaged to provide mood music for the breaks. This group comes to the Cotillion fresh from a successful run at the VFW Hall in Conshohocken.

A special Cotillion Procurement Committee has been set up for the resident Frosh who desires the company of a "vivacious and beautiful female" from that school on the other side of the tracks. Those wanting the services of this committee can contact same through those selling Cotillion tickets in the Pie Shoppe.

Saturday will find the Sophomores and their dates at Goudreau Stadium, where Lou Morda has promised his classmates that the Wildcats will demolish the upstarts from Boston College. A "bloc" of seats has been obtained on or about the forty-yard line.

After every Villanovan has treated his woman of the hour to a delicious meal at Hojo's, there will be a variety of parties from which he may choose his Saturday night entertainment.

Due to Administrative policies, there will be no Sophomore Class Party as such this year. Rather, various organizations have been urged to sponsor parties Saturday night.



Thus, all the ingredients for a memorable weekend are present: romantic dance, successful football game and good party. The only missing elements are you and your date.

Reverend John Kelly Gives Soph Retreat In Field House

The annual Sophomore retreat begins tonight, Nov. 4, for residents and continues Thursday and Friday Nov. 5 and 6 for all sophomores.

The retreat will be given by the Reverend John Kelly C S P Father Kelly is from the Paulist Information Center in New York City.

Attendance cards may be procured in the Center Lounge of Dougherty Hall between 9:30 and 4:30 p.m. today.

Blue Key members Paul Dixon and Prentiss Yancey are shown assisting in the parents' Weekend Registration on the Field House steps.

Belle Masque Drama Society Presents Three Short Plays

The Belle Masque Drama Society has scheduled three short modern plays to be given on November 20, 21, and 22, in the Villanova Playbox. These plays are; Eugene Ionesco's The Lesson, Notes Pervalis' Masks of Angels, and Murry Shisgal's The Typist.

Casting took place last week with a promising turnout of 45 people auditioning for only ten parts. Roles in Masks of Angels went to Mimi McFalls, Rickie Hobdell, John McPeak, and Al DeCottis from Villanova; and Bonnie Marie Lucas from Cabrini College. Miss Lucas played the role of the daughter in last years' production of The Desperate Hours.

The cast in The Lesson includes Jerry Bober from Villanova, and Carolyn Hoskins and Ronnie Luccia from Immaculata College, and Thea Foglietta from Cabrini..

The Typist contains only two characters who will be played by Carol Mattisse from Immaculata and Joe Tollan from Villanova.

The plays are under the direction of three graduate students in the Theatre Departmen, Ken Risinski, Mary Moesel, and Denny Ciesil, and are under the supervision of Dr. Barry, professor in the Graduate Theatre..

All three plays reveal certain moral deficiences of modern man and belong to the tradition of the "absurd."

Traditional Red Mass Opens Law School's Academic Year

The Red Mass — traditionally celebrated to ask the blessing of the Holy Spirit upon the students, faculty and alumni of the School of Law — was offered on Friday evening Oct. 30 in the Villanova chapel.

The Pontifical Mass was celebrated by the Most Reverend Joseph M. Yuen, Bishop of Chumatein, Honan, China. The Very Reverend John A. Klekotka, O.S.A., President of the University, acted as arch-priest. The Reverend Robert J. Welsh, O.S.A., Dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, served as deacon, and the Reverend Philip F. Barrett, O.S.A., Dean of the College of Commerce and Finance was the subdeacon. The Reverend Marshall J. Halphen, O.S.A., was Master of Ceremonies.

Sermon

The Very Reverend Charles J. Lavery, C.S.B., the President of St. John Fisher College, Rochester, New York, eloquently delivered the sermon. The music of the Mass was sung by the Villanova Singers, under the direction of Mr. Herbert Fiss, with Dean Harold Gill Reuschlein of the Law Schoool serving as organist.

The mass is known as the Red Mass for two reasons. The vestments of the clergy and the altar cloths are red which has always been associated with the Holy Spirit. Likewise the robes of the English judges were red, and in the popular mind this fact was associated with the mass which the judges attended as a group, attired in their robes.

Supper

After the mass, which was well attended by the students of the Law School, its alumni, and the Board of Consultors and their wives, a buffet supper was held in Garey Hall honoring Bishop Yuen and Father Lavery.

Graduate Theatre Slates Brecht Play 'Mother Courage'

The Villanova University Playbox will present three more performances of Bertolt Brecht's Mother Courage on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, November 6-8. Curtain time is 8:30 p.m.

The play follows the struggles of Mother Courage, a war-time provisioner, who accompanies the military forces during the Thirty Years' War. Realizing that war profits are her only means of survival, her primary concern is for her trades wagon without which she and her three children cannot hope to live.

"Mother Courage," perhaps Brecht's greatest dramatic achievement, presents a forceful commentary on a life terrorized by war and threatened by peace.

Final performances of the Villanova production will be given November 13-14. The box office is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday. Reservations can be made by calling LA 5-4600, ext. 454.

Junior Class Holds Conshohocken Party With The Defenders

The Junior Class will hold its class party in conjunction with Boston College weekend on Friday, November 6 from 8-12 at the Labor Lyceum in Conshohocken. Tickets for $3.50 will go on sale in the Pie Shoppe from November 3 through Nov. 6. Directions to the Labor Lyceum will be available.

Continuous music will be provided by "The Defenders" with vocalist Adam Wade and "Bobby and The Orbits." "The Defenders" played at Senior Parting Festival last May, and "Bobby and the Orbits" have recently played at the Peppermint Lounge and the starlighters Club both in New York City.

Liberal Burkhart Debates Lewis Substitute Bauman

By Bob Fennel

A small crowd, possibly one of the smallest in the Forum's History, gathered ast Wednesday in the Field House to hear conservative Fulton Lewis III debate liberal James A. Burkhart on the topic, "Liberalism vs. Conservatism."

After a 30 minute delay, Rusty Miller, chairman of the debate, announced that Fulton Lewis III would be unable to attend and had delegated Mr. Robert E. Bauman, executive director of the Young Americans for Freedom Foundation, to speak in his place.

The rules for the contests were laid down by Mr. John Robert Cassidy, moderator for the debate. Each speakers was to give a 20 minute initial speech after which each would give a 10 mminute rebuttal. Following this there was a question and an swer period. Questions were alternately directed at each speaker, who was given two minutes to answer. His opponent was then given two minutes to give a rebuttal.

Burkhart Speaks

Mr. Burkhart's initial speech followed strong liberal lines. He first defined Liberalism as an ". . . approach, not a solution to human ills and problems." He commented that the basis for liberalism is individual freedom. He then stated that freedom in the liberal sense had positive aspects such as education and economic well being.

He took the liberal position of using government as an instrument for working out a better way of life. Burkhart said that in an industrial society such as ours, ". . . I feel there has to be positive aspects that will protect the individual against impersonal forces. Government is one of these agents."

According to Burkhart, one of the main problems of our time is poverty. But, in the past quarter century, this has been met with technology the organization of a fiscal policy and captain investment.

Conservative Speaks

Robert E. Bauman taking the conservative position immediately condemned the "strong central government's power," and the evils of social security. He said that American conservatives are united in their opposition to the growth or federal government power. He said that conservatives reject the policy of "appeasement and retreat from the communists." According to Bauman, we must advance on the Communists while they are in a state of confusion.

He denounced the Liberals who ". . . . believe the soverienty of states to be an anachronism." The conservatives are concerned with the limits rather than the power of government.

Mr. Bauman drew an occasional applause from portions of the audience as he attacked social security by drawing examples to his own personal experience. He told of his "poor" father who could not better his economic position for fear of losing his social security benefits.

Rebuttals

Burkhart's' rebuttal was based on the fact that Bauman failed to recognize the state, corporate or even private powers as dangers.

Bauman retorted with a statement that reapportionment was necessary and that our present system of checks and balances must go. He referred to examples in his own state, Maryland, where deadlocks often occur when one house is able to overrule the other in the legislature.

Attorney Frieri Lectures Villanova Political Union

The Villanova Political Union will debate the controversial issue of "School Busing" on Monday evening, November 9, at 7:30 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall. The guest speaker will be Joseph J. Frieri, founder and president of the Parents' and Taxpayers' Association of Philadelphia, a group formed to oppose "busing."

The debate resolution reads: "Resolved, this house opposes the use of busing as a technique for achieving racial balance in the schools." Supporters of the resolution argue that busing violates the traditional concept of "the neighborhood school", and is, at best, a bad means to achieve a good end, a more integrated society.

Opposition

The Parents' and Taxpayers' Association opposes the "temporary busing" policies of the Board of Education, arguing that they are illegal and that they will lead to permanent busing. Conservative Party members are expected to support this general position.

Proponents of busing stress their belief that "integrated education" is a desirable goal which is being frustrated by patterns of residential segregation. While they agree that "busing" is a delicate subject which may trigger a "white backlash" they feel that under present conditions it is an acceptable technique for fostering integrated education.

A Leading Role

Mr. Frieri, a Philadelphia attorney, has played a leading role in opposition to "busing" appearing on television stations and before civic groups as a spokesman for his group's beliefs. A graduate of Temple University and its Law School, Frieri is a World War II veteran. A resident of Roxborough, he grew up in South Philadelphia.

The October 26 Meeting of the Union found the majority of members supporting the Johnson Administration's poverty program after endorsement of it by Jerome Melamed of the ILGWU, AFL-CIO and a number of Liberal and Moderate Party speakers. Conservative Party members are looking for revenge in Monday night's debate.

SGA Activities Committee Begins Semester Projects

The Student Activities Committee of the Student Council has taken three projects as their areas of special concern for the current semester: the Student Registry Service; the Senior Car Privilege, and Weekend Guest Permissions.

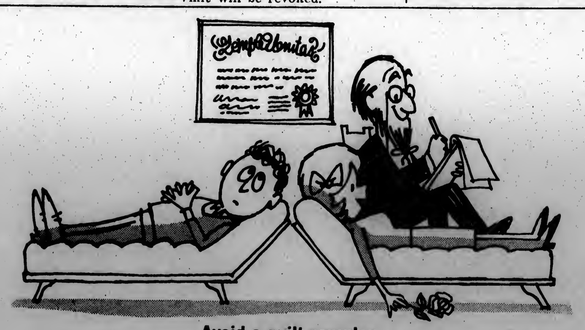
Student Registry Service

Any student wishing to register for the Student Registry Service may do so now and at any time in the future year in the Student Council Office. Members of class steering committees, class officers, presidents of all organizations, chairmen of all committees (either class or S.G.A.), and Student Government Association members are urged to fill out the forms.

This register will include information concerning the location of the student at any time during class days and will be invaluable in aiding all students in contacting presidents, officers, and S.G.A. representatives of organizations and classes.

Guest Permissions Available

All students are reminded that male weekend guests are permitted to stay in the dorms. Any student wishing to have a guest for the weekend may get permission for him to stay in an on-campus dorm and eat in the cafeteria.



The host must find a student who will not be on campus over the weekend and get his permission to use his room and matric number. The host must then apply in the S.G.A. office.

All students are encouraged to make use of this service of the S.G.A. Office hours for this will be from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. Monlay and Thursday afternoon.

Senior Car Privilege

All seniors having car permits are reminded by order of the Dean of Men that their cars must be parked in the center of the main parking lot. The area outlined with yellow paint is set aside especially for this purpose.

The cars must be parked in this area, must display the sticker and must be parked properly within the lines. If these rules are not observed the permit will be revoked.

Used Book Exchange Sets Meeting Place To Buy Or Sell Books

The Used Book Exchange, an innovation on the Villanova campus, will provide the opportunity for students who wish to either buy or sell books to have a common meeting place. Bill Manfred and Ward Willians, co-chairmen of the Student Activities Committee, saw this bill passed at an S.G.A. meeting earlier in the year.

The program will go into effect Monday, Nov. 9. The student may go to the S.G.A. office and fill out a card with the name of the book he wishes to sell, along with his address or phone number.

Any student wishing to buy a used book may inquire concerning the availability of such books in the Student Government Office 1:30-4:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday of every week.

T. A. Bolan Speaks To Young Republicans Regarding Federal Aid

A former U.S. attorney who prosecuted internal security cases in the 1950's and is presently legal counsel for St. John's University, spoke before the Villanova Young Republicans and said that Johnson administration's plan for federal aid to education would "put our nation's private and parochial schools in jeopardy."

Thomas A. Bolan, a founder of the New York State Conservative Party who also lectured at the St. John's law school for four years, declared before an audience of Villanova students that federal aid to public schools only would cause the erosion and ultimate destruction of private and parochial schools. He said that his would happen because private schools would not be able to compete with public school salary ranges augmented by federal aid.

Bolan said that Senator Goldwater is against federal aid to education, but for liberal tax credits to aid parents of school children.

"His feeling," said Bolan, "is that if there must be aid, then both public and private schools should share equaly.. The hyoscrisy of the administration is hat is has consistently balked at any kind of aid where the federal government does not control the purse strings.

Spirited Congress Conclave Deliberates On Nine Motions

vote of 21½ to 20, this motion resulted in a questioning of the alternate vote, arguments over the need for an investigation, and a change in the first vote taken (20½ for — 20 against). Other motions were passed with less commotion; one establishes a Student Registry Service containing all pertinent information on at least the president and the SGA representative of all SGA-recognized organizations.

The third moves that the Student Government request a general Bulletin Board be established in all areas deemed necessary by the Student Union Committee of the SGA.

An admendment to the SGA constitution (Article VI, Section 3, Part C) was also introduced at the meeting. In effect, it will seat the Blue Key in the Congress and will award the organization a half vote. The motion will be voted on in two weeks.

Before the meeting closed, President Furst proposed that the Student Government Association affiliate for one year with the American Student Government of the USA. Furst explained the benefits of this national organization, saying "It is a clearing house for ideas and projects of Student Government." This motion will also be voted upon at the next Congress meeting. .

Alumni Representative Charlie Zaccaria makes his point known to all SGA members as he expounds during last Wednesday's stormy session.

COUNTERPOINT

What's Wrong With Our Band?

The Villanova University student body was treated to a rare display of talent on October 17. The Delaware-Villanova Football game was a thing of beauty, especially if one was for Villanova. At half-time he received a fine comparison of what is and what could be.

The University of Delaware band performed a magnificent show, musically excellent and certainly pleasing to the eye and ear. Their intricate formations required as much effort and practice as did our excellent football team; they also had spent at least four days at a special fall Band camp, learning their intricate footwork, half-time and pregame shows and much music. They also had an excellent spirit, a true devotion to their fine organization and above all pride in their school.

Another Band

There was another band at the half-time show. This Band was one half the size of the Delaware Band. They did not march as well as the Delaware Band; and their formations were not quite as intricate, but they were crowd pleasers. Their sound — Excellent — their enthusiasm — Excellent — their pride — Tops —their determination—as much as the Villanova football team.

It is quite true that the University of Delaware has a Music Department. However, it is also true that only seven members of this 88 piece band are music majors. In other words Delaware which is a school slightly smaller than our University, has managed to enroll approximately twice as many in their band on a strictly extra-curricular basis. The band members at Villanova practice for a shorter time each week than do the members of the band at the University of Delaware.

Why Is It

Villanova is one of the top-ranking schools in the East. Villanova's football team ranks at the top. Why is it that the band cannot boast this top category? The talent is here. We know for we have checked applications for three years. With no exaggeration at all we state that if we could add twenty or thirty more musicians to the ranks of the top musicians we already have, our pride would not only be one of the Main Line, but of the East.

How can all of this be remedied? The answer lies in you, the student body of Villanova University. There is absolutely no question in our minds that Villanova will have the greatest as it already has the greatest of everything else. Pride is there, enthusiasm is there, fine musicians are here, but, help is needed.

Answer

The answer is that with more cooperation from those of you who already play and have had experience in marching or concert music, this determination will prove itself. Membership will increase only if you, the students, contribute your talent.

We are now embarking upon our concert season. A fine itinerary is promised, excellent music is to be played, and the pride and determination are still there. All we really need is some help from you. Make everyone connected with Villanova as proud of our Band as they are of Villanova itself.

Letters To The Editor

To the Editor,

I would like to have you note, as an item of conversation, that the Dean of Academic Affairs saw fit to reject, as a reason for missing class, attendance at the speech recently delivered by Senator Goldwater in Ardmore, Pennsylvania.

Apparently, listening to a political dissertation by one of the two most important political men (the other being President Johnson) in the country is insufficient cause for legally missing class.

In my opinion, listening to a presidential nominee and seeing him in an election year is as intrinsically a part of a liberal education as any course offered at this university.

To the Editor,

It is generally conceded that the class attendance system that Villanova formerly employed was on the level of a parish parochial school. The system under which we presently labor has the air of a good township high school in all outward appearances. I am wondering when Villanova will reach University status in regard to this particular question.

The policy of the administration in adopting the present system is typical of the conservative Augustinian outlook. Will the Council's liberalism ever truly pervade the Catholic world?

One also wonders whether the courses are so simple that to save face, one is forced into the classroom to give the appearance of a lecture—outside study program.

Of course, the statements narrow in their approach, but they serve to point out the fact that either directly, as in the old grading system, or indirectly, through the "double the number" system, that Villanova University students — who are supposed to be men of age, and intellectual curiosity competing for a place in the modern world through education, being educated by ". . . laying emphasis upon the training of the critical faculty; cultivation of a wide breadth of learning; development of the student in his wholeness as a man, possessed of both body and soul . . . in keeping with the century old traditions of the Order of St. Augustine," (from the Villanova University Bulletin, 1964-1965) — are having their arms cleverly bent to attend classes.

Perhaps such a system would be a good means of helping the Freshmen to become adjusted to university work during their Freshman year. However, in the upper classes, it is unnecessary. Students who are real students will want to attend their lectures, those who do not want to attend classes will reflect their attitudes in their grades. Such an open system will help to insure good lectures and a high academic code at Villanova.

Contrary to public belief, open stack privileges are available to the student body. To acquire this privilege, a student must apply to the dean of his school or the head of his department.

The Return To 'Camelot'

By Steve Freind

Don't let it be forgot
That once there was a spot
For one, brief, shining moment
That was known as Camelot

The sound of Camelot. What does it remind you of? To some it is merly the music from a Broadway production. But to others it brings back the memory of a time, not long past, when a young, able and dynamic leader captured the heart of the American people.

John Fitzgerald Kennedy was a legend. Seldom has a national clader evoked the affection and admiration that was showered on the late president. It will be a long time before his shy smile, quick quip or electricity-charged speeches will be forgotten.

But on Nov. 22, 1963, the voice of John Kennedy was silenced forever. The world watched in shocked disbelief as the funeral cortege passed along the ruote which, less than three years before, had witnessed the Inaugural Parade.

The entire nation grieved. But one man in particular felt the loss acutely. Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, brother of the President wondered about in a daze, still not believing what had taken place. The bond between the two brothers had been unbreakable. Together they had fought their way to the top of the political pyramid. Wherever John went, whether the Senate campaign of 1952, the 1960 battle for the nomination or the successful struggle for the presidency itself, Bobby was right beside him.

Brother Team

Together they formed the most energetic and captivating political team ever viewed upon the American scene. When John assumed the mantle of the presidency, Bobby became Attorney General. The enraged cries of nepotism soon turned to cheers as it became apparent that the Kennedy brother team had not lost its touch.

When it was decided that something had to be done concerning racial discrimination, the Kennedy boys hooked up together and came up with the strongest request for Civil Rights legislation in history. When the President felt that a good will tour abroad by an American official was necessary, Robert Kennedy got the nod.

The trip was a huge success, as Bobby captivated the people overseas with the patented Kennedy personality. In Japan, the man with the shy, little-boy air turned tiger and backed a group of Communists who were trying to get the U.S. into the probervial corner.

An example of the regard in which the President held his brother was demonstrated when Kennedy, cruising on his presidential yacht, received the report that the Communists had erected a wall in Berlin. Racing back to his office, he issued his first order. "Call Rusk on the phone," he said. "Go get my brother."

Reaction

And then came that November day in Dallas. The world waited to see how Bobby would react. At first, he was only a shell of his former self, spending the days brooding over his slain brother. Then, gradually, the Kennedy sparkle began to come back. President Johnson sent him overseas to investigate the Indonesian problem. With a touch of the fabled Kennedy wit he informed a British Far East adviser, "With all due respect, you're about as popular in the Far East as I a min Alabama."

Touring Germany earlier this year, he spoke these words on the anniversary of his brother's famed Berlin speech:

"There were many who felt . . . that the torchbearer for a whole generation was gone; that an era was over before its time; that with him there died ideal ism and hope and what was clean and best in all of us. But in traveling through my own country, and now in Germany, I have come to understand that the hope President Kennedy kindled is not dead but alive . . . The torch still burns, and because it does, tthere remains for all of us the chance to light up the tomorrows and to brighten he future. For me, that is the challenge that makes life worthwhile: and I hope it will be the same for all of you."

When he was rejected by Johnson for the vice-presidency, many thought that the career of Robert Kennedy had come to an end. Even when he announced his candidacy for the New York Senate, there was wide opinion that the Kennedy era was over. Yesterday's results in the Empire State disproved that. Yes, John F. Kennedy is gone, but not his principles and not his ideals. Thomas Wolfe once said, "You can't go home again." But don't believe it.

When President Kennedy died, his followers were pushed to the sidelines as Lyndon Johnson set his own stage. But they're still there waiting—waiting to bring back the miracle that was Camelot. It's a long way back to Pennsylvania Avenue, but Robert Kennedy is on his way. Truly, the torch still burns.

Sounds Of Note

By Bill McCloskey

In the last three weeks since this column last appeared, the music industry has gone through one of its cyclic news-release pushes. This week's Billboard Top 100 shows 27 new songs in the past two weeks. One of them (which started at #70) is by Bobby Vinton and it makes WWVU look like the home of geniuses. They have been playing Mr. Lonely since it came out on a 33 two years ago. For those of you who remember it from elsewhere it was Buddy Greco who had a single of it in 1962.

Other new releases that perked up quite a few Villanova ears at the radio station are: Rain, Rain by two little girls, Maura and Marua, on the Cameo label. Cameo has a knack, it seems for only putting out winners (Bobby Rydell, Chubby Checker, etc.) and this should be a plus on their list. It should break locally real soon but it is already being aired at WWVU. It is similar to Peter, Paul and Mary's rendition. Joyce Triano, for rock and roll fans has He's A Big Deal out locally. The Philadelphia girl's release is already big in Cleveland, Pittsburgh and the West Coast.

A survey in the area by Billboard Magazine shows that the Serendipity Singers and George Shearing Concert had little or no effect on their record sales.

Butcher Of Budapest Remembered

By Steve Morrison

When Nikita Khrushchev was replaced by two men as the "power" in the Soviet Union, the first question that was asked was simply: why? Although no one can say for sure, it seems to have been a combination of domestic as well as international problems which brought his removal about. The communist farming system was causing setbacks in food production on the home front, while Red China was causing anti-Moscow sentiments to be voiced among the communist bloc.

These factors as well as others which may not have been discovered yet are probably the most valid reasons for this event which might seriously change the nature of international developments in the future. In any event the behind-the-scene story of what actually did happen in Moscow should prove to be very interesting if and when it is ever disclosed.

American Reaction

No less interesting is the American reaction to this event. While most Americans met this news with the usual concern that is associated with an item of this nature, there was also another reaction. This was the reaction of those who feel that Khrushchev is actually a peace-loving soul at heart, and that we should mourn his loss. Although it is true that Khrushchev might have had a worse effect on world peace than he actually did had he applied himself better, does this mean we must praise him as a worker for world peace? This is like praising Al Capone because he did not break as many laws as he could have had he been more conscientious.

Crimes

The memory of Khrushchev will definitely not be a fond one in the minds of millions. The House Committee on Un-American Activities has published a pamphlet called: THE CRIMES OF KHRUSHCHEV. It contains the testimonies of nine witnesses who appeared before the Committee. It also contains photographs of the victims of a few of Khrushchev's programs.

The statement of Doctor Lev E. Dobriansky, who is chairman of the Ukrainian Congress Committee of America summarized some of Khrushchev's crimes.

"First, Mr. Khrushchev played a very significant role in the man-made famine in Ukraine in the period of 1930-33."

"Second, he was engaged in extensive purges in Ukraine actually to make way for himself to become eventually the first secretary of the Communist Party in Ukraine." (400,000 killed)

"Third, . . . he was involved in the heinous massacre of about 9,500 Ukrainians in Vinnitsa."

"Fourth, . . . he exploited the Communist partisans primarily to provoke German occupation forces into augmenting their repressions and persecutions of the Ukrainian populace."

"Five, in 1944-46, Khrushchev was responsible for the liquidation of the Ukrainian Catholic Church and continued the suppression of the Ukrainian Orthodox Autocephalic Church."

"Sixth, . . . Khrushchev was heavily engaged in the liquidation of many individuals and groups connected with the Ukrainian Insurgent Army."

This list could go on and on but the point it makes is clearly that whatever treatment Khrushchev is getting, it could be no worse than the treatment he is used to dealing out. He lived for many years by the sword which of course is a risky policy, especially in Soviet Russia

NSA's Professional Qualification Test is your first step towards a uniquely rewarding career

Let us clarify what we mean by a "uniquely rewarding career." If you agree with our definition, then perhaps you should see your College Placement Officer to learn more about the National Security Agency and the Professional Qualification Test to be given Saturday, December 12th (Passing this test does not commit you in any way, but you must pass it first in order to schedule an on-campus interview with NSA representatives.)

First of all, whatever your major interest—finance & accounting, personnel or business administration, data systems programming, languages or linguistic research—you can make use of your college-acquired capabilities with the National Security Agency, headquarters for secure communications research and development . . . unusual design refinements in computer & edp systems . . . cryptologic and related techniques. Your professional growth and earning power expand from the day you join us, without having to wait for years of "experience."

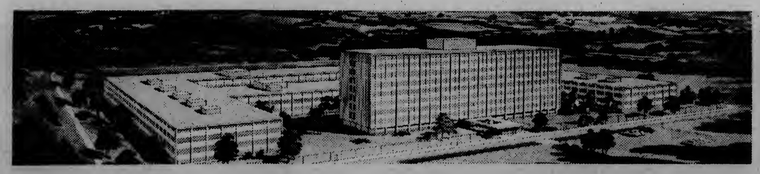
Then, too, you will engage in study and research that will take you well beyond known and accepted boundaries of knowledge. Although NSA is a key research activity within the Department of Defense, it has influence and responsibility of far greater scope . . . and intellectual associations with leading institutions, laboratories, agencies and consultants. The art and science of secure communications in all its ramifications is utterly without precedent or restriction, and involves programs of national importance.

PROGRAMS OF NATIONAL IMPORTANCE—a thought worth repeating. For what it may be worth to you personally, you'll realize an extra measure of satisfaction from your NSA work, knowing that the results may benefit a lot of people.

In this regard, you'll find, too, that the NSA interchange-of-information leads easily and naturally to a maximum extension of your individual capabilities. You'll find yourself working with people from an amazing range of intellectual sectors—philosophy, psychology, history, international affairs, English, art and music . . . over 500 of whom have advanced degrees—in a near-academic environment. NSA conducts internal development programs to acquaint you with its new technologies, and encourages advance degree programs at nearby universities.

Now, what of the more pragmatic rewards? Your BA degree makes you eligible to start at $6,050 . . . with regular increases as well as excellent promotion possibilities in your field. As a Federal employee, you are entitled to a number of meaningful benefits—including 13 working days' leave the first year. NSA also offers both aid and encouragement in your pursuit of advance degree education at nearby universities (Maryland and Johns Hopkins in particular are nearby).

One further advantage is NSA's location . . . midway between Washington and Baltimore in an area of fast-growing business, industry, and research expansion. Take your pick of in-town, suburban, or rural living—and enjoy the proximity to the Chesapeake Bay and ocean resort region.



If you agree-act now

If you are interested in an NSA career, you must apply for the Professional Qualification Test NO LATER THAN FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 27th. Your College Placement Officer has a PQT brochure and application. (You must be a U.S. citizen, and are subject to a character & loyalty check.)

Villanova Keglers Combine Experience With Potential

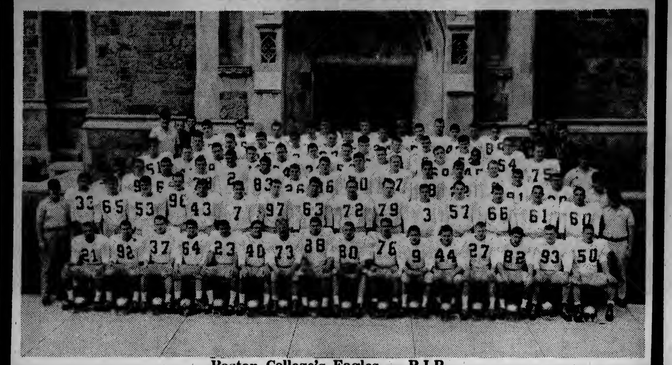
By Spence Jones

Villanova's Bowling Team, second in the East last season, hopes to improve their performance with a blend of experience and a group of promising new keglers. .

Through graduation the 'Cats lost five top bowlers. However, with the depth of last year's team and six newcomers, Coach Sa Rico is very optimistic.

Returnees

Returning from last year's team are seniors John Brenann and Don Logan, Junior Jim Rowey, and sophs Dick Broderick, Bruce Thomas, Spence Jones and Moe Passanante.



Captain John Brennan will probably lead the Mainline keglers once again. Brennan is the 1963-64 National Intercollegiate Match Game Champion.

Coach Rico looks to Bruce Thomas to take some of the pressure from Brennan. Thomas had a 191 average to lead the Delaware Valley Division of Eastern Intercollegiate Bowling League of which the Wildcats are the defending champions.

Should either of these falter, Dick Broderick and Spence Jones will try to fill the gap. Broderick is a former Philadelphia Jr. Match Game Champion while Jones was the 1961 New York State Jr. Champion.

Returning letterman Jim Rowley has once again captured a starting berth on the strong Mainline team. Rowley was a standout last year..

On another play, Joe took a Xavier kickoff in the end zone and made it to the five before he was hit by a host of tacklers. Suddenly, shades of Ben Schwartzwalter's' boys, he lateraled back to Tom Brown who raced up the sideline to the 35. Many will criticize such a play as dangerous, but it worked!

Villanova Harriers Defeat LaSalle As Sullivan Gives Record Performance

By Buzz Langan

Led by Tom Sullivan's record shattering performance, the Villanova Cross Country Team closed out an undefeated season by trouncing LaSalle 16-46.

The outcome was never in doubt, as Sullivan tore over the 4½ mile course in 24 minutes 15 seconds to erase Dave Hyland, and Olympian, Vic Zwolak"s old record by 18 seconds. The Wildcats secret weapon, Lou Kotekas, was second in a time of 24.33.

Kotekas, a senior, ran on the 1961 Freshmen Championship Team but did not compete again until now. He has given the team a needed boost.

Eight In Ten

Overall, the 'Cats placed eight in the top 10. Marty Ferko and Caroll were third and fourth. Bob Cubbin and Jimmy Orr continued their duel by tieing for sixth.

Ailing Dave Hyland was unable to run due to a pulled muscle and it is hoped that he will be running in time for the C4A Championships on November 16. In that meet, the 'Cats will be up against stiff opposition from the strongly favored Georgetown and Notre Dame teams.

'Cats To Field Soccer Club Students Invited To Try Out

By Joe Sumilas

For the first time in Villanova history, organized soccer is being played on campus. This fast-moving, action-packed sport has been introduced to the Villanova scene by the Villanova Soccer club.

The soccer club is run exclusively by the students. Even the coaching duties have been assumed by the students. The club, though, would most certainly welcome any faculty member who is interested in assisting with the coaching duties.

Currently the Villanova booters practice every Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday from 3:30 to 5:30. Practice is held on the field across from Garey Hall, the law school. .

The soccer club is now lining teams to play. Their plans call for a schedule with local colleges, but no definite plans have been made. They hope to have their schedule completed shortly, and will announce it as soon as possible.

International Sport

Soccer is an international sport and this can be readily seen by taking a look at tthe club's rooster. Such countries as Trinidad, Columbia, Argentina, Puerto Rico, Switzerland, Turkey, Bavaria, Hungary, and Cuba are represented. The United States is also well represented.

If you are an a student, American of foreign, undergraduate, graduate, or seminarian, experienced or inexpreienced, and you are interested in soccer, you are welcome to attend the next soccer club meeting, this Thursday at 10:30 a.m. Watch posters for further details.

There is no excuse for anyone who is interested in soccer not to come out for the team. Experienced players are always needed and the soccer club is willing to help those who lack experience.

Since the soccer club is a new and struggling organization, it is the duty of the Villanova student body to give it their full support. The players who spend long hours practicing and preparing for the games, should have someone at the games to root for them. When the soccer schedule comes out make plans to attend a few games and support the Wildcat booters.

B.C. Eagles Invade Main Line; Battle 'Cats For Eastern Power

By Joe Maffongelli

This Saturday the Eagles from Boston College will invade Goodreau Stadium for another tradition-laden encounter with the Villanova 'Cats. The Massachusetts eleven will come into the local area with a deceptive three and two record. The unbeaten 'Cats will be after win number eleven in a series which finds them trailing 17-10 with one tie.

Being one of the only two conquerors of Syracuse, B.C. has lost to Tennessee and Army by a combined total of eight points. The other two victims of the Eagle claw have been Cincinnati and Air Force.

Villanova fans may have been

relieved by the fact that a boy named Concannon has transferred from one Eagles' nest to another. However, a previously obscure figure named Ed Foley has earned his wings in the meantime. This junior quarterback has become a constant threat with both the long and short pass.

Another signal caller, Larry Marzetti, is also available. Preferring to run rather than throw, he is now averaging 4.2 yds. per carry.

Have Good Ends

In All-American candidate Jim Whalen, the Eagles have one of the best ends around. The big senior has caught fourteen passes for 192 yards and two touchdowns. In addition to this, his blocking ability has proven more than adequate.

Being overshadowed by Whalen is Bill Cronin the team captain. Also a senior, Cronin has hauled in eleven passes for 192 yards and a touchdown. The play of both these flankers has riddled enemy defenders all season.

Jim Whalen

John Frechette

Tough Line

Anchoring an always tough Maroon and Gold line is tackle John Frechette. He will have the unenviable assignment of handling Al Atkinson, Wildcat captain.

Another of coach Jim Miller's twenty-one returning lettermen is guard Dick Cremin. A rugged 200 pounder, Cremin is reminding B.C. fans of Bill Byrne. Byrne was a stalwart lineman for the '60 and '61 Eagle contingents.

The Eagles will provide the 'Cat passing attack with a tough test. To date the New England team has allowed but 378 yds. through the air lanes, while picking off six enemy bombs.

A glaring weakness in the B.C. machine has been their rushing defense. In the five games played the frank-and-bean eaters have allowed 630 yds. over land. This could prove dangerous with the likes of landlubbers such as

Dick Cremin

Brown, Sernyack, and Connell in the 'Cat backfield.

Fullbacks Threaten

The rushing of the Eagle fullbacks, John Walsh and Don Moran, is reminiscent of the Joe-Retino combination at V.U. of a few years ago. Both being big and strong they are averaging 4.7 and 3.6 yds. per carry respectively.

All in all a hard fought football game should ensue between these Eastern powers. Let it be cautiously noted by all 'Cat fans that B.C. has not won on the road. Will the Main Line stadium prove to be as dangerous as the Army testing grounds were to the Eagles? Only time will tell.

Freindly Foolishness

The Saturday Trial

by Steve Freind

The jury is still out on Alex Bell's Wildcats. A 6-0 record presents some pretty good evidence in their favor, but the courtroom climax comes on Saturday as Jim Miller invades the Main Line with a talented flock of New England Eagles.

Opinion is divided on the outcome of the trial. Miller, who has raised the football fortunes of Boston College to its highest level since the glory days of Frank Leahy, expressed respect for Bell's Bombers in a telephone conversation last week. "We definitely expect a tough game," quoth Miller. "Villanova is ranked ahead of us in the Lambert Cup voting, so somebody must think they've got a good ball club."

Somehow, though, he spoke like a man who sees but doesn't believe. There is a theory in some eastern circles, particularly to the Eagles' roost in Chestnut Hill, that Connell and Company represent a mediocre team that has been cast into the role of an eastern power because of a weak schedule.

The theory continues that on Saturday the Cinderella 'Cat squad will make like a pumpkin, as B.C. shatters the Villanova dream of an unbeaten season. The 'Cats have a good little team, but Boston College is simply out of their class. After all, this is the same Eagle crew that defeated Syracuse and Air Force, while barely being edged out by the likes of Army and Tennessee.

An interesting sidenote to this opinion is the belief that even if the 'Cats were physically superior to B.C., the Eagles would prevail. The reason for this is given by the more refined as a mental bloc; others call it a lump. These critics point to the 'Cats 34-0 thrashing last year and, more conclusively, to the 1962 encounter, when Bell's forces ate up 27 first downs to the Eagles' 10 and still managed to lose, 27-13.

It's an interesting theory — interesting, but wrong. A trip into the locker room after Xavier bloodbath proved how wrong it is. The 'Cats had just hooked up in their roughest battle of the year. They were battered and they were bleeding, but they didn't seem to mind.

There was Dave Connell, limping with an ankle sprained in a after-whistle pileup that the Musketeers are noted for. "To hell with our defensive ranking," he said. "I'm glad they went ahead. We proved we could come back. Now bring on B.C."

Or take Jack McDonald, the fireplug guard whose block sprung Connell loose for the 'Cats first tally. "Sure, the layoff hurt us, but we had it when it counted. B.C.? We will take them by 10 or more."

John McDonnell echoed the feelings of the entire team. Blood dripping from his face, the quiet co-captain had just finished another typical performance, figuring in on at least twenty tackles " Yeah, they hit real hard. We took a lot, but we gave more back. They're hurting more than we are." How did Johnny Mac feel about his date with B.C.? "We want this one real bad, baby. We're going to get it."

Overconfidence? Hardly. It"s the sound of a team that konws it's the best and proves it every week; the sound of a team that's tired of hearing that they're a good squad as long os they don't step out of their clas. It's the sound of a winner.

Yes, the jury is still out on the Wildcats. But from here the verdict looks clear. When the Saturday sun sets on the Main Line, Bell's Bombers can plead guilty to being the best in the East.

GATOR BOWL IN '64

Wildcat quarterback Dave Connell takes off on one of his patented rollouts during the Xavier tilt behind the blocking of Dick Sernyak. 'Cats belted the Musketeers, 31-13, to stay unbeaten.

Pony back Joe Santomauro leaps over teammate Connell who has just thrown a block on a Musketeer lineman. Santomauro tallied twice in the Wildcat victory.

Wildcats Rally To Down Xavier, 31-13 Stage Set For Boston College Battle

By Steve Freind

It doen't pay to irritate Alex Bell's wildcats. Xavier learned the truth of this last Saturday as the unbeaten 'Cats rallied from a third quarter deficit to post their sixth straight win, a 31-13 bloodbath before a Parents' Weekend crowd of 12,000.

By defeating the Musketeers, who are known for their hard-hitting squads, particularly after the whistle, Bell's Bombers set the stage for next Saturday' battle with Boston College's highly-touted Eagles.

Connell Scores

The 18 point Villanova advantage doesn't really tell the story of the game, as the boys from Ohio gave the 'Cats all they could handle for three quarters. For the sixth straight game, Dave Connell figured in the 'Cats first score, putting the Bombers on the board with a 30 yard rollout at 10:07 of the first stanza. Jim Case's conversion attempt was wide and Villanova owned a 6-0 lead. .

With five minutes remaining in the half, Xavier knotted the count, marching 84 yards in 7 plays. The big play of the drive was a 61 yard pass from Musketeer quarterback Carroll Williams to Vince Eyesoldt. Williams carried the final two yards into the 'Cat end zone. The extra point attempt was blocked by Emmett Michaels.

The 'Cats wasted little time in regaining the lead. Joe Santomauro returned the kickoff to the five, then laterated to Tom Brown, who raced for thirty more yards. Connell, who accounted for 136 yards for the day, and soph Richie Green directed the 'Cats on a nine play scoring drive, with Connell scrambling the last two yards for his second tally. The redheaded quarterback was stopped on a try for a two point conversion and the Wildcats took a 12-6 lead to the locker room.

After Dick Sernyak was injured in a pileup on the third play of the second half, the charged-up 'Cats marched to the Musketeer 9 before the visitor defense stiffened. After an exchange of punts Xavier, aided by a fifteen yard penalty, moved 60 yards in four plays for a tally. The score came on a 27 yard Williams to Eysoldt pass. Ray Dankel added the conversion and the 'Cats were behind for the first time this year.

'Cats Come Back

It took exactly 2:05 for the 'Cats to forge the go-ahead marker. Musketeer Jim Davis, who led all ball carriers with 122 yards, fumbled a Connell punt after being hit by John Kolmer. Michaels, playing another stellar game, recovered for the 'Cats on the Xavier 32. Two plays later, Santomauro took an inside reverse and sprinted 13 yards into the end zone. Bell later disclosed that the play was called by line coach Lou Ferry, who was spotting is the observer's box.

"The defensive line was playing our quarterback tight," Bell said. "When this happens, we fake to our fullback, swing one halfback wide and give to the other halfback. Our line blocks in the direction of the desensive flow and it's up to the ball carrier to find the hole." Santomauro did just that.

The rest of the tilt was icing for the 'Cats. Green pilfered a Musketeer pass and returned to the Xavier 34. From there, the Bombers tallied in six plays, with Santomauro again doing the honors on a one yard bolt. Case's conversion was good but the 'Cats were offside and the second attempt was blocked.

Brown Bolts

The final 'Cats marker was a thing of beauty. Brown, who chewed up 109 yards on only 8 carries, took a Connell pitchout, shook off three tacklers and turned on his sprinters speed for a 75 yard spectacular.. Case added the conversion to round out the day's scoring. Brown's outstanding performance raised his rushing average to 7.2, which has to rank among the national leaders.

Overall, the Pony Backfield racked up 345 yards overland. Connell followed Brown with 105 yards, while Santomauro added 66. The Musketeers also moved the ball with consistency, rushing for 118 yards, 40 yards above the 'Cats rushing defense average, while adding 117 yards via the airlanes. The 13 points Xavier scored equalled the 'Cats allotment for the first five games.

Most of the 'Cats, including Bell, felt that the Wildcats' somewhat sluggish showing was due to the week off. "I definitely thing that the layoff hurt us," Bell remarked "I'm just glad that we didn't have the open date before B.C."

Particular mention has to be given to the defensive line. As usual, Al Atkinson and John McDonnell were all over the field, holding the Musketeers' breakaway backs to an average of 3 yards a crack, Mike Strofolino, Jack McDonald, Bill Quigley, Roger Agin and Michaels also continued their savage play and, though the Musketeers were able to move the ball, the 'Cats defense was always there with big play, when it was needed.

Navy Hands VU Frosh Third Straight Loss; Kittens Face Army Next

By Jerry Bruderle

The Villanova Wildkittens lost to Navy last Friday, 42-8. Villanova was never in the game as the Midshipmen pulled out to a 21-0 halftime lead. They increased the margin to 35-0 before Villanova hit the scoreboard in the final quarter. Quarterback Jim Euart his halfback Ed Bolinger in the end zone from nine yards out. Euart then hit John Belinza with another pass for the two point conversion to complete their scoring. .

The Wildkittens were plagued with numerous dropped passes which could have turned the game around had they been caught. The pass defense was especially porous, as it was in the losses to West Chester and Bullis Prep. The least number of points Villanova has given up was 32 in the West Chester game. Bullis tallied 39 in their game.

The game against Army on Nov. 13 is the only home game of the season. While not as strong as Navy,, the Black Knights field a powerful team, since they are the nucleus of Paul Dietzel's intense recruiting. With a good crowd, in the only home game, Villanova could upset the Cadets.

The Scranton Stampede

by Rusty Miller

Amid the post-game clamor of the locker room you stood and listened to the sounds . . . sounds of a winning team. "Next Saturday's the big one!" "Only three to go you guys. We'll take 'em!" They were the sounds of forty-nine men possessed of an intangible to the ninth degree, one of the intengibles that is needed to make of forty-nine such men a winning football team. It's called team spirit.

They had all wanted that win badly. The had gotten their win. It had been a tough game but considering the type of team they had faced (that is the type of game their opponetns are taught to play), they well deserved the final score.

Team spirit had played a big part in their win. It breeds cooperation, between lineman and back. One such back was Joe Santomauro. "The left side of the line opened up holes for me that were big enough to drive a mack truck through," said Joe. " They were great!"

Joe hadn't done too badly himself. The most frustrated man on the team, it seems that half of Joe's carries are called back on penalties. He has had four touchdowns called back and innumerable gains mullified. He may even set a record in this department.

Last Saturday however, this was not the case. Joe had scored twice, both times on a play known as a "32 scissors." A fast clusive runner, he has moves he hasn't even used yet. On several occasions on Saturday the fans were treated to such moves.

Great Moves

On one such play, Joe was back alone to receive a Xavier punt. The Cats red-dogged Wilson, the kicker, so Joe could expect no blocking. As he caught the ball, he was rushed by five Musketeers. He turned, running toward his own goal, the five hot in pursuit. In full stride, he cut sharply to his right and headed in

Boston College Rally Erupts In Outburst Of Enthusiasm

A pep rally for the Boston College-Villanova football game held in front of the Pie Shoppe on Thursday, November 5 developed into a full-scale "rush" on Lancaster Pike. Rain pelted the hundreds gathered on the lawn of Dougherty Hall but it didn't seem to bother them.

Seaking at the rally were Bob Vetrone of the Philadelphia Bulletin, Alex Bell, varsity football coach, the Rev. George Riley, OSA, and several team players. Brian Banmiller, chairman of the spirit committee, presided over the rally. Everything was going as planned.

Rally

The rally began with a brouhaha for the team led by the band. Banmiller then commented on the article written in the Boston College newspaper which degraded Villanova's ranking in the Lambert standings.

Many rooters decried the Boston College team in raucous jeering. Several football players, among them Mike Strofolino, Dave Connell, and John McDonnell, spoke to the audience and expressed their desire to beat B.C.

Unfortunately, the rally was successful only in a sense. Spirited preparations and enthusiasm came to no avail as the Wildcats went down to defeat on Saturday afternoon. The exuberance exhibited by the Villanovans at the rally gave indications of a strong school spirit.

Banmiller, when questioned about the rally, said, "It was the best one at Villanova since the Liberty Bowl of 1962."

However, when the band stopped playing and the rally was supposedly over, there was a mass exodus of cheering Villanovans to Lancaster Pike. Radnor police had been notified about the rally that afternoon but no one was at the intersection of Ithan and Lancaster Avenues when an estimated 700 students stormed to that spot.

Howard Johnson's

After blocking traffic there for 15 minutes, the crowd began to walk in the direction of Howard Johnson's Restaurant, located at Lancaster Pike and Kenilworth Road, chanting "Beat B.C." and "Go Villanova." Then police arrived with blinking red lights and numerous reenforcements.

The students moved quickly to HoJo's and found themselves face to face with the police. The officers were instructed by the Rev. Joseph W. Kemme, OSA, vice-president for student affairs, to collect matriculation cards of any troublesome students. Radnor police reported that six matric cards were given to Father.

Although many students were questioned by the police, only two were taken to Radnor headquarters. One student was charged with disorderly conduct and paid a fine of $10 and $9 in costs. The other was released.

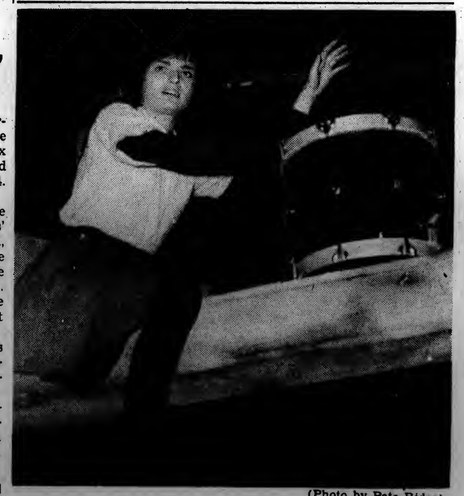
Student Congress To Debate Attendance, Cheerleaders

Last night the Student Congress considered four controversial motions in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall at 6:30 p.m. At the Student Senate meeting on November 2, motions were recommended for passage dealing with the establishment of girl cheerleaders, a request for non-compulsory class attendance for juniors and seniors, a proposal to replace the present cafeteria system with meal tickets, and the installment of defective and missing telephones on campus.

Last year the Student Council defeated a motion which would have enlarged the cheerleading squad by the addition of three worried about the loss of tradi- female members. Student leaders, tion, formed the prime opposition to female cheerleaders. Nationwide coverage in the press was given to the controversy in a subsequent Congress meeting. When the Congress refused to condemn discrimination against male or female students, makers of the present motion said it was made a necessity because of the inferior quality of the recent cheerleading.

The second motion deals with non-compulsory class attendance for juniors and seniors. Dissatisfaction with the present system of compulsory attendance has caused some Senate members to bring up this motion.

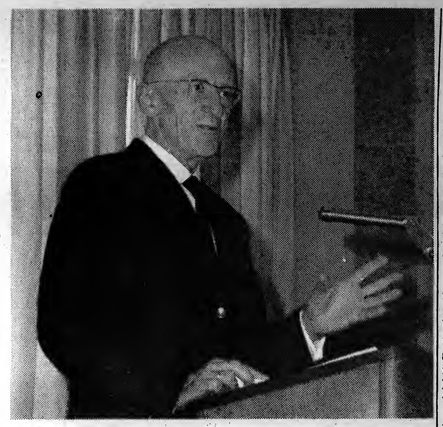
Meal Tickets



By the meal ticket motion, students could refuse to buy meals and hopefully improve the quality of the food. The makers of the motion Ward Williams and Frank Eck explained that the system had worked out well at other colleges and felt that it would do the same here.

Eck and Williams also moved that the SGA formally request the Administration to have the telephone company repair and reinstall the defective and missing telephones on campus. Several Senate members felt the motion should be passed because a telephone is necessary for college students regardless of the brutish actions in which some students partake.

A fifth motion, unanimously recommended for passage, proposes that the SGA affilliate for a period of one year with the American Student Governments of the USA. Tom Furst, president of the SGA and maker of the motion, explained the benefits of this national organization as a clearing house for ideas and projects.



The makers of the cheerleader motion, Rusty Miller, Steve Freind, and Brian Banmiller, saw their legislation pass by a roll call vote of 12 to 2 with one abstention. The non-compulsory attendance motion, proposed by Miller and Freind, was unanimously recommended for passage by the Senate.

All students are invited to attend the Congress meetings and participate in debate on the motion. Notices of meetings appears on the SGA Bulletin Board.

F. Scott Fitzgerald Will Be Discussed By Literary Society

Literary Society President Tom Krause has announced that there will be a discussion on F. Scott Fitzgerald at the society's meeting tomorrow at 10:30 a.m. in 210 Vasey Hall. Fitzgerald, an author portraying the spirit of the 'Roaring Twenties', will be considered in the light of his life and his works.

Leading a panel discussion will be Denny O'Hara, associate editor of the Lynx and a Fitzgerald scholar. Also in the panel is Leigh Narducci, a senior and long-time member of the society.

In later developments, Krause has proclaimed a symposium to be held on November 24 concerned with the idea of thermonuclear war as seen in the two novels, "Fail Safe" and "Seven Days in May." This symposium will be composed of students from the society and others who are interested in this topic.

These books were obtained from the survey taken by Concept magazine with help from society members. More students had read these books and manifested desire to hear them discussed than any other.

Plans will also be revealed at the meeting regarding the society's guest speakers and future discussions. All are invited to attend and new members are especially welcome.

R. Sargent Shriver Brings Team To V.U. To Attract Services

R. Sargent Shriver, the National Director to the Peace Corps, has appointed a team of representatives to appear on the Villanova campus during the week of Nov. 16-20. The purpose of the team will be to inform as many students as possible about the Peace Corps services, projects, and future projects.

Training

Volunteers to the organization must be American citizens with no dependents under 18. In the beginning of their training, they receive three months intensive schooling at an American college in the customs, culture, and language of the country where they have chosen to serve.

After the training, the volunteers serve for two years and receive approximately $1,800 readjustment allowance when they leave the corps. Married couples are eligible if they both qualify for the same projects and have no dependents under 18.

Villanovans

At present there are 18 former Villanovans serving in the Peace Corps. During the Corps' visit here last year approximately 100 Villanova students filled out the Peace Corps' questionaires and took the placement test.

Anyone interested in more information about the Peace Corps should contact Father George Riley, OSA Peace Corps liaison on campus.

Six Campus Groups Suspended By Furst For Breaking Rules

S.G.A. President Thomas J. Furst has announced the suspension of a number of campus organizations. According to editor Stephen Webb, Concept magazine will come out in December. This edition of Concept is a collection of eight essays submitted by faculty members of Villanova who have won the Lindback Award. Their topic was: "The Role of the Teacher." The essays which will appear were written by 1961 winners: Patrick J. Dougherty of the Business Administration Department, and John J. Gallen, Dean of the Engineering College.

The 1962 winners were William C. A. Henry, Business Law Chairman, and Dr. Henry Rofinot, History Chairman. The 1963 winners were James J. Mitchell of the English Department, and William G. Driscoll, Physics Chairman. The 1964 winners were Emil Amelotti, Mathematics Chairman, and Joseph J. Hicks of the Electrical Engineering Department.

Concept is put out by a staff which includes: Steve Webb, editor; Lynn Rotando, managing editor; Bryan Krumpar, business manager; Dick DiGaiacomo and Ward Williams, editorial board; Bob McKelvie and Pete Casterline, circulation; with John Gerasky and Henry Tate doing the art work.

Webb also announced that Concept will be published during the second week of December, if all deadlines are met. Three student articles, concerned with the philosophy of Aristotle, St. Augustine, and John Dewey, will appear in this issue.

Art work is under the direction of Henry Tate, a senior at Villanova. An article contrasting Michaelangelo in Irving Stone's Agony and the Ecstasy and the protagonist in Ernest Hemingway's The Old Man and The Sea will be published in the forthcoming issue. The author is Bob Koogler, a junior in electrical engineering.

Ed Bride of WWVU is shown interviewing a jazz musician at the Showboat Lounge in Philadelphia. WWVU is conducting live broadcasts from the Showboat.

Justice Goldberg To Address Class Of '65 Commencement

The Very Reverend John A. Klekotka, OSA, president of the University, announced last week that United States Supreme Court Justice, Arthur Goldberg has been named the Commencement speaker for next June's graduation exercises.

Justice Goldberg was one of several public figures under consideration by the Board of Trustees. He will receive a Doctor of Laws degree with the Very Reverend James A. Donnellon, OSA, chairman of the board of the Augustinian Provincial for the eastern part of the United States, awarding the diploma. Father President will read the diploma's citation.

It was also announced that the commencement exercises will be held in Philadelphia's Convention Hall on Monday afternoon, June 7. The Baccularuate Mass will be held that morning.

In previous years the commencement exercises were held in the football stadium and, in case of inclement weather, in the Field House. The past two graduations were held in the Field House causing great inconvenience.

NFCCS Returns To Campus; Goal Remains Social Work

The National Federation of Catholic College Students has returned to Villanova as a campus organization. Its goals are designed to help the unfortunate in various social action programs.

Among the programs are: students acting as "Big Brothers" at St. John"s Orhanage in Phila.; assisting high school dropouts and participating in high school and colleege tutor work; and the achievement of an Ecumenical Dialogue on the Villanova campus.

NFCCS also plans biweekly magazine and a long-range project whereby a book will be published in two years on civil rights rights in Philadelphia. Charitable social work will be undertaken by NFCCS members at Casa Del Carmen, a charity house in Phila. run by sisters of the Blessed Trinity.

Weekly meetings are held in 103 Corr Hall at 4:30 p.m. on Thursday.

Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. To Address Villanova Forum

The 1964 Nobel Peace Prize winner, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., will address the Villanova Forum on the topic, "The Challenge of a New Age," Monday evening, November 23 at 8 p.m.

The University Field House will be the site of Dr. King's inaugural appearance on the Main Line.

An eloquent speaker, his preaching of non-violence ended segregation in the buses of Montgomery, Alabama in 1956. He has since emerged as one of the more temperate champions of the Negro in America today.

Besides the Nobel Peace Prize, Dr. King is the recipient of scores of awards including Time Magazine's "Man of the Year 1963," and an honorary degree from Yale University. His most recent book, Why We Can't Wait, was published this year by Harper and Row.

Because of the literature which has been circulated — allegedly exclaiming Dr. King's affiliations — all precautions in regard to demonstrations will be in effect. This is the fourth in a series of events sponsored by the Villanova Forum in conjunction with the Student Government Association.

Dr. Elaine Brown Conducts Singing City Choir Concert

by Tom Sproul

The Villanova Concert series program will present what should prove to be its most successful concert of the fall series on November 21 in the Field House. Featured in this presentation will be the popular "Singing City Choir".

The Choir now in its seventeenth year has a list of followers that stretch around the globe. They have appeared on national radio and television broadcasts. In November, 1963, on a nationwide telecast, the Choir was chosen to participate in Pennsylvania's memorial tribute to the late President John F. Kennedy at Independence Hall.

In addition, the group performs annually with the Philadelphia Orchestra under the direction of Eugène Ormandy and has sung with such renowned conductors as Leonard Bernstein, Thor Fohnson, Hans Schwieger, Igor Stravinsky and Alfred Wallenstein.

Distinguished Leader

Yet, despite these renowned accomplishments, the biggest boast of the Choir remains unmentioned. Much of the credit for the group's impressive reputation belongs to their distinguished founder and leader, Dr. Elaine Brown. A graduate of the Bush Conservatory of Music in Chicago and Westminister Choir College at Princeton, New Jersey, Mrs. Brown has done graduate work at New York University, the University of Pennsylvania, and Temple University.

She was assistant conductor of the Westminster Choir for five years, touring the United States and fifteen European countries. She has served on the faculties of Westminster Choir College, Temple University, Juilliard School of Music, and Union Theological School of Sacred Music.

While at Temple University, Dr. Brown was responsible for the introduction of a new curriculum leading to what was probably one of the few baccalaureate degrees in Choral Conducting in the nation. In the summer of 1953, and under the sponsorship of the United States State Department, her choir represented college choral music at the first International Music Educators Conference in Brussels, Belgium.

European Tour

The choir toured additionally in England, France, Holland, Germany and Austria, everywhere receiving the highest acclaim, not only for its musical excellence, but also for its superb contribution in representing culturally the youth of this country.

During the summer of 1951, she attended the Conservatory of Music of the Ecoles d'Art Americaines at Fontainebleau, France. Her unique accomplishments were recognized on an international level when she was awarded the French government's "Prix d'Excellence" for conduction.

In conjunction with her wide musical success, Mrs. Brown accomplishes the combination of different racial, cultural and religious backgrounds to obtain a single goal, that of music. Therefore, along with her majesty in music, Mrs. Brown has settled the disputes that have plagued the world from the blowing of Gabriel's horn.

F. Scott Fitzgerald Will Be Discussed By Literary Society

Literary Society President Tom Krause has announced that there will be a discussion on F. Scott Fitzgerald at the society's meeting tomorrow at 10:30 a.m. in 210 Vasey Hall. Fitzgerald, an author portraying the spirit of the 'Roaring Twenties', will be considered in the light of his life and his works.

Leading a panel discussion will be Denny O'Hara, associate editor of the Lynx and a Fitzgerald scholar. Also in the panel is Leigh Narducci, a senior and long-time member of the society.

In later developments, Krause has proclaimed a symposium to be held on November 24 concerned with the idea of thermonuclear war as seen in the two novels, "Fail Safe" and "Seven Days in May." This symposium will be composed of students from the society and others who are interested in this topic.

These books were obtained from the survey taken by Concept magazine with help from society members. More students had read these books and manifested desire to hear them discussed than any other.

Plans will also be revealed at the meeting regarding the society's guest speakers and future discussions. All are invited to attend and new members are especially welcome.

R. Sargent Shriver Brings Team To V.U. To Attract Services

R. Sargent Shriver, the National Director to the Peace Corps, has appointed a team of representatives to appear on the Villanova campus during the week of Nov. 16-20. The purpose of the team will be to inform as many students as possible about the Peace Corps services, projects, and future projects.

Training

Volunteers to the organization must be American citizens with no dependents under 18. In the beginning of their training, they receive three months intensive schooling at an American college in the customs, culture, and language of the country where they have chosen to serve.

After the training, the volunteers serve for two years and receive approximately $1,800 readjustment allowance when they leave the corps. Married couples are eligible if they both qualify for the same projects and have no dependents under 18.

Villanovans

At present there are 18 former Villanovans serving in the Peace Corps. During the Corps' visit here last year approximately 100 Villanova students filled out the Peace Corps' questionaires and took the placement test.

Anyone interested in more information about the Peace Corps should contact Father George Riley, OSA Peace Corps liaison on campus.

Six Campus Groups Suspended By Furst For Breaking Rules

S.G.A. President Thomas J. Furst has announced the suspension of a number of campus organizations. Due to the failure of the clubs to comply with regulations, they will no longer be eligible for the services offered by the Mimeographing Room, the Scheduling Office, WWVU Radio, and the Villanovan.

Furst said the following organizations were placed under suspension: the Sailing Club, Mendel Bulletin, the Pi Sigma Epsilon fraternity, the Math Club, Classics Club, Economics Club, Biology Club, and the Alpha Psi Omega drama fraternity.

Faculty Members Contribute To Next Issue Of Concept

According to editor Stephen Webb, Concept magazine will come out in December. This edition of Concept is a collection of eight essays submitted by faculty members of Villanova who have won the Lindback Award. Their topic was: "The Role of the Teacher." The essays which will appear were written by 1961 winners: Patrick J. Dougherty of the Business Administration Department, and John J. Gallen, Dean of the Engineering College.

The 1962 winners were William C. A. Henry, Business Law Chairman, and Dr. Henry Rofinot, History Chairman. The 1963 winners were James J. Mitchell of the English Department, and William G. Driscoll, Physics Chairman. The 1964 winners were Emil Amelotti, Mathematics Chairman, and Joseph J. Hicks of the Electrical Engineering Department.

Concept is put out by a staff which includes: Steve Webb, editor; Lynn Rotando, managing editor; Bryan Krumpar, business manager; Dick DiGaiacomo and Ward Williams, editorial board; Bob McKelvie and Pete Casterline, circulation; with John Gerasky and Henry Tate doing the art work.

Webb also announced that Concept will be published during the second week of December, if all deadlines are met. Three student articles, concerned with the philosophy of Aristotle, St. Augustine, and John Dewey, will appear in this issue.

Art work is under the direction of Henry Tate, a senior at Villanova. An article contrasting Michaelangelo in Irving Stone's Agony and the Ecstasy and the protagonist in Ernest Hemingway's The Old Man and The Sea will be published in the forthcoming issue. The author is Bob Koogler, a junior in electrical engineering.

Faculty Wives Sponsor International Night For Foreign Students

The Villanova University Faculty Wives' Club will hold a meeting on Tuesday, November 12, at 8:30 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Scheduled for the evening's entertainment is "International Night" with performances by Villanova students from Ireland, India, Liberia, Puerto Rico, and countries of South America. Daniel J. Rivas, Foreign Student Advisor, will introduce this program with comments on the impact of foreign students in this country.

Also present at this affair will be Villanova's other foreign students, representing the majority of the countries of the world. Objects of art, costumes, etc. have been collected for display during the program.

Justice Goldberg To Address Class Of '65 Commencement

The Very Reverend John A. Klekotka, OSA, president of the University, announced last week that United States Supreme Court Justice, Arthur Goldberg has been named the Commencement speaker for next June's graduation exercises.

Justice Goldberg was one of several public figures under consideration by the Board of Trustees. He will receive a Doctor of Laws degree with the Very Reverend James A. Donnellon, OSA, chairman of the board of the Augustinian Provincial for the eastern part of the United States, awarding the diploma. Father President will read the diploma's citation.

It was also announced that the commencement exercises will be held in Philadelphia's Convention Hall on Monday afternoon, June 7. The Baccularuate Mass will be held that morning.

In previous years the commencement exercises were held in the football stadium and, in case of inclement weather, in the Field House. The past two graduations were held in the Field House causing great inconvenience.

NFCCS Returns To Campus; Goal Remains Social Work

The National Federation of Catholic College Students has returned to Villanova as a campus organization. Its goals are designed to help the unfortunate in various social action programs.

Among the programs are: students acting as "Big Brothers" at St. John"s Orhanage in Phila.; assisting high school dropouts and participating in high school and colleege tutor work; and the achievement of an Ecumenical Dialogue on the Villanova campus.

NFCCS also plans biweekly magazine and a long-range project whereby a book will be published in two years on civil rights rights in Philadelphia. Charitable social work will be undertaken by NFCCS members at Casa Del Carmen, a charity house in Phila. run by sisters of the Blessed Trinity.

Weekly meetings are held in 103 Corr Hall at 4:30 p.m. on Thursday.

Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. To Address Villanova Forum

The 1964 Nobel Peace Prize winner, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., will address the Villanova Forum on the topic, "The Challenge of a New Age," Monday evening, November 23 at 8 p.m.

The University Field House will be the site of Dr. King's inaugural appearance on the Main Line.

An eloquent speaker, his preaching of non-violence ended segregation in the buses of Montgomery, Alabama in 1956. He has since emerged as one of the more temperate champions of the Negro in America today.

Besides the Nobel Peace Prize, Dr. King is the recipient of scores of awards including Time Magazine's "Man of the Year 1963," and an honorary degree from Yale University. His most recent book, Why We Can't Wait, was published this year by Harper and Row.

Because of the literature which has been circulated — allegedly exclaiming Dr. King's affiliations — all precautions in regard to demonstrations will be in effect. This is the fourth in a series of events sponsored by the Villanova Forum in conjunction with the Student Government Association.

Letters To The Editor

To The Editor,

As long as I have had both an interest and a part in student government at Villanova and probably long before that, the question of class attendance has been a major issue. This question has initiated more discussion and controversy than any other presented to the Student Congress during my three year term of office.

Last year the Administration agreed to change the attendance system existing at that time due to a recommendation made the Student Government Association. However, the syste finally decided upon by the Administration was not at all like that which was recomtmended by the S.G.A. This came as no great surprise to those who were responsible for the original motion, for the Administration had several times in the past cast its shadow on the relatively bright suggestions of the S.G.A.

This year another motion concerning class attendance was presented before the Student Senate. This motion reads as follows: "That the S.G.A. request the Administration to adopt a policy of non-compulsory class atttendance for juniors and seniors."

It is my belief that as men who are about to assume the responsibilities that will be cast upon them, as college graduates, by an indifferent society, upperclassmen should be allowed to accept the responsibility of attending class without being graded to do so by an altogether overly concerned Administration.

It is my sincerest hope, therefore, that this motion will be given proper consideration by the Administration and eventually will become an accepted policy.

Ernest N. Abate
President, Class of '65

To The Editor,

Last semester, the administration approved a motion of the Student Government Association concerning the class attendance system. The final product of the motion, due to the administration, was in no way similiar to the original motion; this was of no surprise to the makers of the motion because many proposals materialize on an altered basis.

Now that the new class attendance system is in effect, it is felt by many students that the present system is now worse than the former program. The students are not being graded for their attendance now but are being penalized even more for what is really their own right: the prerogative to attend classes or not. From the valid assumption that college students are mature people, the administration should realize that the student is able to decide what is in his best interests and to act accordingly in regard to the motion now before the congress.

The motion is a good one, actually an excellent one, and if the administration looks at this proposal open-mindedly as they should, this proposal would become a reality. If the administration chooses to stamp the motion "no", the students will be forced to adhere to this unpopular system.

Frank Eck
President, Class of '66

To The Editor,

On Wednesday evening Nov. 11 the Student Body will once again consider the merits of having girl cheerleaders. There are several points which must be kept in mind before a decision on this motion is rendered.

Last year, when the Congress considered girl cheerleaders, the issue boiled down to rights. It should be made quite clear that the student body is not in a position to legislate on rights, their being or not being granted, or their extent. This phase of the issue should be avoided.

It is the University's position that girl cheerleaders are acceptable provided a proper decorum is maintained by students in the stands. This point will be further clarified at the meeting. This is essential and I would personally not permit the spirit committee to select girls for the cheering squad if they were to be subjected to abuse from the stands. I am sure that the debate on the congress floor will cover every aspect from tradition to our co-educational status. The motion deals with nurses — let them be considered.

A second motion to be considered is that of non-compulsory attendence at classes for juniors and seniors. If this program were to be adopted an average requirement would undoubedly be imposed for the first few years (2.5-3.0). To decide on merits of this motion is to decide between imposed regimentation and self-regimentation as the purpose of a college education.

Tom Furst
President, S.G.A.

To The Editor,

I wish to add my support for the proposed new attendance system for juniors and seniors. We know that the university has a responsibility to the parents of freshmen students to help them adjust to the University atmosphere. Therefore, non-compulsory attendance for them would be unwise.

However, part of maturing is learning responsibility, and a sense of values. Once a student is a junior in college, and has a respectable average, I see no reason why he shouldn't be allowed to judge if missing a particular lecture is in his best interests.

For myself, there are no courses in my program that I would think of cutting, but if there were, I feel that at my stage of education that the decision should be mine to make, and not imposed as if I were a prodigal son. I hope that the Student Government's motion will be implemented in the very near future.

Conrad R. Cowan,
Treasurer, S.G.A.

To The Editor,

Last Monday the Student Senate gave its unanimous approval to a motion calling for the investigation of a system of non-compulsory class attendance by the Administration for members of the Junior and Senior classes. It is my feeling that students who have reached this stage of their academic career have the maturity and responsibility to work well under this system of non-compulsory class attendance. Perhaps the Administration will see fit to establish certain minimum and reasonable cumulative standards in order to receive the benefit of no attendence restrictions.

I hope that the administration will give the motion its support and work out a policy to the benefit of the student body.

John F. Ryan
Executive Vice-President
Student Government

To The Editor,

On Monday, November 2, the Student Senate of the S.G.A. passed a motion concerning our attendance system. The Senate wholeheartedly approved of the idea that attendance should not be obligatory for juniors and seniors. The Student Congress will vote on this motion tonight.

I approve of this motion because it is in accord with both the aims of the Augustinian Fathers and the dignity of our upperclass students.

One of the Administration's purposes in offering a Villanova education is to "supply an atmosphere favorable to the development of a sense of responsibiliy and the up-building of character." This purpose can be best realized by encouraging as much student responsib.lity as possible.

The Administraton is inconsistent with its announced purpose if they severely regulate the studentts on an undergraduate level and then suddenly, upon graduation proclaim us free, responsible, and capable applicants for society. Our obligation at college is to develop ourselves from both text books and experience. A non-obligatory attendance system will encourage the student to make judgments and develop responsibility throughout each day of his college career.

The adoption of such a system will also inflict upon the student the idea that proper and mature judgement is expected of him. When this honor is bestowed on the student, I feel sure it will be highly valued. Again, a high degree of responsibility will be fostered within the student body.

It is primarily hoped that all who wish to have Villanova become a first rate and high class educational institution will realize the value of a non-compulsory attendance system.

Morality An Issue?

By the time that you read this article the results of the presidential elections will be final. For our purposes here, the identity of the winner is unimportant. We are not interested in the personalities, only the processes.

Our main concern throughout the campaign was the overt defamation of the office of the presidency. Regardless of the person involved and of the party which he represents, we feel that it is inappropriate to make personal attacks upon the incumbent president while he is still in office.

The basis for this premise is that if our President is laid vulnerable to such attacks, our position in the world, specifically the image that our President conveys is placed in jeopardy. We feel that aspirants for the presidency should only be concerned about presenting their potential programs for our country rather than launching personal attacks against their rivals.

We feel that this defamation of the presidency plus assorted varieties of muck-raking by attempting to make political hay out of government officials' personal problems is far below the level of the presidency, and should not be condoned by its aspirants.

THE LEO GOODREAU STORY:

The Birth of A Tradition

THE GOODREAU Memorial Plaque still remains at the entrance to the stadium, in tribute to the player who died on the gridiron.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This story was requested by Brian Banmiller, Chairman of the Spirit Committee and is a reprint of the article written by Bill Jones that appeared in the January 1, 1956 issue of the VILLANOVAN. The facts that were used for that story were taken from the December 5, 1950 VILLANOVAN from an article written by Robert J. Quinn. It is reprinted here in order to acquaint all students with the name and tradition of Leo Goodreau for whom the Stadium is named, and to whom this newspaper is dedicated.

Villanova University has produced many outstanding men throughout its years of Catholic education. Among these men some have been brilliant students, some excellent athletes and others superior gentlemen. But perhaps one of the finest men ever to enter Villanova, a humble composition of each of these qualities, never graduated. The man today is a shining memory to those of the faculty who have been at Villanova since 1930, and to the present undergraduates, merely a simple name on a tarnished plaque. This man, to whom the VILLANOVAN is respectfully dedicated, is Leo Goodreau, a scholar, an athlete, and most of all, a gentleman.

Merely a Name

To most of the students at Villanova, Leo Goodreau is merely a name that decorates the stadium and appears in the VILLANOVAN every week, but he is far more than that.

In 1927 the Villanova Stadium was erected and dedicated. The entire Villanova student body attended this ceremony. One of these students was a freshman who was destined to die on that field within one short year. The story of Leo Goodreau is in reality inspiration, an inspiration to all Villanovans.

Football

Leo was an All-New England interscholastic quarterback in high school and became a prominent name on the Villanova campus. He joined the ranks of freshmen football players and due to his hard, fast, clean and aggressive play was immediately tagged as a future star and a sure bet to take over the first string quarterback slot on the varsity the next fall.

In his first game for the Villanova frosh, he scored the first touchdown to be recorded in the new stadium, a touchdown which opened the season and the stadium with a triumph. Little did Leo realize that in the space of a few short years this field would be named Goodreau Stadium.

Baseball Too

Although he was the finest football player that Villanova had seen in quite some time, this was not his best sport. Despite his skill as a quarterback, Leo showed as much if not more proficiency as a catcher on the baseball team. His coach, Charles A. McGeehan, predicted that he easily had a major league career before him if he wanted it. He was truly a great athlete.

Leo, deeply engaged in athletics, nevertheless had an abundance of time for social activity. He was instrumental in conducting the freshman dance in the spring of 1928. Under his leadership and determination the dance became the most successful in the history of the class. In appreciation for his fine effort, the class elected him to the position of Secretary shortly before the scholastic year terminated.

Revived Spirit

He was also instrumental in reviving Villanova's fraternities which were practically non-existent. Meetings were seldom held and little was accomplished when they were. He revived the Epsilon Phi Theta Fraternity into one of the most active social clubs on the campus. In order to remain in the campus picture the frats were forced to rejuvenate and the school spirit flourished as it never had before. Leo had solidly proven that a lack of spirit had no place on the Villanova campus.

Despite this unusually heavy schedule, Leo maintained a scholastic average which placed him in the upper half of his class. His coach, Harry Stuhldreher, figured on him as potential All-American on the gridiron and a shining light in the Villanova football picture. It was a sure thing. But he was never given the chance to show his All-American calibre to the rest of the sports world, for the Lord had other and far greater plans for Leo J. Goodreau.

On the field Leo never gave up digging, and ironically this hustle cost him his life.

One early September afternoon he was calling offensive signals for the varsity against the frosh in a grueling scrimmage held in preparation for Villanova's game. The frosh lined up determined to prove their mettle against a larger and more experienced varsity. As the ball was snapped to a halfback, Leo, who besides being a triple threat on offense was a demon on defense, bolted forward leading the interference. The frosh line charged. There was a quick pileup. It was Leo Goodreau's last play.

Seen from the Field House, Villanova Stadium hosts the annual Villanova-Boston College football game. Villanova's Jim Case has just kicked-off to BC at the start of last Saturday's 8 7 heartbreaker to the Eagles from New England.

THIS STADIUM saw Goodreau score its first touchdown.

His Last Play

When the players unpiled, Leo was lying quite still, face down on the turf. As he slowly came to, his face was contorted with pain. A teammate tried to help the stricken player to his feet and he shrieked with pain. His back had been brutally broken.

He was given no chance of survival by the specialists called in on the case. He was almost completely paralyzed. His back was broken allright, but his spirit was hardly dented. No longer was he fighting for his school, he was fighting for his life. He refused to give up. He insisted on hearing all the football scores that grim Saturday; his wish was not denied. He assured everyone that someday he would be back in the Villanova "line-up." But Leo underestimated himself, for he was soon to participate in a far more rewarding "line-up."

Undefeated Season

When it was recognized that he was not going to pull through, there was talk of postponing the entire football schedule, but Leo would have nothing to do with this idea. He movingly complained that it was not only unfair to the team which had worked so hard for so long, but even unfair to himself.

It is merely an anti-climax to state that the Villanova football team, inspired by this tough plucky youth swept on to an undefeated season, crushing all opposition.

The Last Spark

But soon the fight became too much, even for Leo Goodreau. He confided to his coach, Harry Stuhldreher, "I've given the best that is in me, I'm tired out, I can't hold out much longer." Death was near. He was given the Last Rites and soon lapsed into a coma. While in this coma, he began to call football signals and continued until early Tuesday afternoon, just four short days after his gridiron play, the spark of life in Leo Goodreau flickered out.

A Sad Scene

Father O'Leary who was present at the time of the death had this description: "It was a beautiful but sad scene. Outside were teammates and classmates, and inside priests and doctors. To the last Leo maintained that same staunchness of heart which marked him on the football field."

At the funeral in Villanova's College Chapel, the casket was carried by his former teammates. The entire student body was present at the Solemn High funeral Mass.

Surely the spirit of Leo J. Goodreau lingers in the halls and on the playing fields of Villanova, a spirit which is to those who know his story, an ever present inspiration to higher standards of sportsmanship and duty.

Carole Hodgson Fills Dynamic Roll In Grad Theater's 'Mother Courage'

By Joe Linsalata

Mother Courage, a play by Bertolt Brecht, opened at the Villanova Playbox on October 30. The play has left everyone with the same impression — its the best since Sidney Kingsley's Night Life last October '63.

Not only do you leave the theater with the idea that Brecht has created one of his finest plays but also that 16 actors and the director, Mr. Richard Duprey, did their best to give a dramatic and emotional interpretation of Mr. Brecht's masterpiece.

Mother Courage is the story of a hard and seasoned woman, Anna Fierling who struggled her way through Europe with her wagon of supplies during the Thirty Years War. She survived by selling boots, liqour and other luxuries to the different armies she came across. To her this war was her life and her future; without it she would be helpless.

Carol Hodgson plays the role of Mother Courage and she very skillfully gives to her part all the hate and love Brecht wrote into the character.

Miss Hodgson is able to make us dispise Anna Fierling for her inhuman and radical methods of survival, and yet she moves us deeply in her concern for her son and daughters.

We see through Miss Hodgson a person who is not tragic in any sense, or a person to pitied in any way; but rather a person who has been conditioned to the horrors of life and now she accepts them as part of her survival.

Brecht tried to create a woman who would be completely unemotional, dependent, and villanous. At this he failed. Instead, he gave his audience a woman of compassion — but yet greed, of love — and yet enmity.

This sense of duality in her personaliy is artistically projected by Miss Hodgson in her portrayal. She easily expells a sense of hostility to all those who threaten her existance and she injects a sence of motherly dignity towards her children. .

The daughter of Mother Courage, Catherine, is perfectly portrayed by Judy Stone. She says not a single intelligable word through the entire production but easily wins the pity and sympathy of her audiance. Through her eyes we see perfectly well her inner thoughts which would make words seem redundent.

Brecht sought through Catherine a symbol of love and Miss Stone does her part complete justice. It is because of this love that leads her to a heroic deaths.

Carole Hodgson and Judy Stone in scene from current Playbox producion of "MOTHER COURAGE."

Dennis Ciesil plays the role of the repugnant young son of Mother Courage, Elif. His courageous and robust character is well demonstrated by a series of emotional undulations. His courage eventually is the cause of his death.

Another brother, Swiss Cheese, is played by Ed Hagan but he seems to lack confidence in the projection of his role at certain times.

Good performances are turned — out by Ken Resinski, Jack Black, and Mitzie Smyth in their roles of a hypocraful chaplain, a cook in the Protestant Army, and a prostitute. Each of them brings forth a trait of humanity which makes them acceptable to Mother Courage. Each of them is fated to exist in this state of war and must resort to any extremes in order to survive.

The play itself is divided into about 12 scenes and each follows rather fluently into the other with no disjunctions. Thirty-five separate charcters are shuffled on and off the stage durning the 2½ hour production. Many of the performers play 3 different characters to fill Brecht's huge cast, and most of them did a very efficient job. Paul Norton, Mike Southerland, and Milton Brutten added their talants

The only scene which some immediate improvement could be made is the final scene. This is by far the most climactic scene in the production — the death of Catherine. Every action that takes place is leading up to the gunshot that kills Catherine. But because of poor technical work Catherine's death loses much of its potential impact.

First Loves Are So Sad

By Joe Tribuiani

You never get over the memories. You remember all the little things about it.

Let me tell you about her. She was not beautiful by any standards, but she was mine. Her physical features hardly matched her qualities of companionship. Whenever I saw her, she was always ready with a warm little smile that never failed to lift me out of my bad moods. Never did she turn cold to me.

The warmth in an embrace against her soft tender body still lingers in my mind, and excites me even though I know she is gone forever. Today, I often wonder what made me love her. Somehow, I must have known that we could not go on forever, as love does.

Her hair was of a soft warm brown texture, with short loose curls. She always seemed to be staring at me through her large dark eyes that seemed to be windows of her loving heart. Although she was short and stubby, there never was an ounce of loose flesh on her. She was physically firm, until that day everything seemed to go to pieces.

I will never forget my mother's startling words, "Joey, your teddy bear is coming apart. You will just have to get rid of her." First loves are so very sad.

"what can my job be at IBM?"

In IBM Data Processing, your job can be full of variety. Especially when you consider all the ways computers are used.

As an IBM Data Processing Systems Engineer, you would be helping customers get the most from their computers. They could be customers in science, government, education, defense, industry, or business. You might even specialize in one field.

Or, as an IBM Data Processing Representative, you would present to customer executives your ideas for doing their work better with computers. Your own imagination and initiative are the limits of what you can accomplish in marketing IBM products.

If you are working toward a degree—in Liberal Arts, Engineering, the Sciences, or Business Administration—find out what IBM can offer you in the way of achievement. Thorough training at special IBM schools will prepare you for work in either Systems Engineering or Marketing.

See your college placement officer for literature on these careers—and make an appointment with our interviewers. IBM is an Equal Opportunity Employer.

Dear Mr. Fazio,

Thank you, and the rest of the "Committee" for your letter.

I still have a year before I enter college and I plan to learn as much about as many schools as I can before a choice is made. Your interest is truly appreciated, and I will certainly keep Villanova in mind.

With every good wish,

Sincerely,

Luci Johnson

How It Happened...

Approximately two weeks ago there appeared in the Philadelphia Daily News an article concerning Miss Baines Johnson. According to article Luci was in the process of choosing a college. It was stated that she was looking for a topflite Nursing school close to her home in Washington, D.C. She mentioned Marquette University and Georgetown University as leading candidates.

Upon reading this, a group of enterprising Villanova Freshmen decided that their University was not being given proper consideration as a candidate for Miss Johnson's higher education. Taking matters into their own hands they composed a letter to the President's daughter advocating the advantages of Villanova. They stressed its outstanding program in Nursing, it's beautiful campus, and its ratio of boys to girls.

Taking the name of "The Luci for V.U. committee" these eight boys, Art Fazio, Tom Parsley, Frank Miller, Dale Pappert, Denny Murtha, Pat Schelle, Mike Brady, and Ed Riley, sent their letter typed on Villanova stationary Special Delivery straight to the White House.

Last week they received the above reply. Although they were disappointed that they had not convinced Miss Johnson, the fact that they had received a reply was encouraging.

Editors Note: Senator Goldwater's daughters are also more than welcome.

CAMPUS NEWS BRIEFS

Fast, swinging, and electrifying was the "new sound" heard over radio station WWVU last Wednesday. Because, for the first time, the jazz sounds of the Showboat Lounge were heard live on campus. Holding sway down on the Showboat were top-disc jockey Ed Bride and Jazz Columnist Barry Bornstein.

Exciting Adventure

For one hour Bride directed a session highlighting the exciting music of pianist Les McCann. Dormitory walls reverberated at the sound of his "wild" rendition of "Shampoo" — an exciting adventure across the keyboard. This show will become a regular feature of the WWVU schedule on Wednesday evenings, thanks to the consideration of Showboat owners Herb and Jerry Spivack. Having recently taken over the "Boat," they have dedicated an all-out plan to keep jazz thriving in Philadelphia.

J. Permar Richards, Jr., a member of the Lay Board of Trustees of the University has been named Vice-Chairman of the 1965 American Cancer Society Campaign.

In making the announcement, General Chairman Marith B. Christy, Jr. said that he will bring unequalled experience to the campaign and will assist materially in both the planning and execution of the campaign.

An' All That Jazz

By Barry Bornstein

Little Big Horn — Act II. Two Saturday nights ago the Showboat lounge, jazz's hot-spot in Philly, was transposed into a second Little Big Horn. This time Sitting-Bull was played by Herbie Mann — the hottest flute in jazz — and the audience made like they were Custer's men and dropped in their tracks. Herbie Mann let loose, and the undercurrent of fire so tied to his music, sent flaming arrows into the ears of the audience. Herbie's music, although constantly in evolution and thus hard to pin down, is presently Latin-based. This evolves from trips of his for the government to Africa and South America. In these lands where the rhythm is supreme and inherent in their music, Herbie developed the rhythmic subtleties which define "Herbie." He launched his onslaught with his famous interpretation of "Comin' Home Baby," a masterfully created excursion through previously untouched fields of tonality. But the staggering blow was delivered by his rendition of Jobim's "Girl from Impanema." Never has there been heard a more passionate solo with such impeccable accenting. And when the clouds had cleared and the set was over, 400 limp bodies gasped for breath. They had been Mann-handled. . . .

So many "unexpecteds" have popped out of the skies the past two weeks that many are beginning to wonder. Great anxiety has been suffered by our populace and untold damage has been dealt to many millions. Our opinion of the cause of this devastation is that our country has not been prepared for these events; (i.e., Berra, Keane, Khruschev, and Jenkins all out — plus 3 Cosmonauts in and out) so to prevent further anxieties and further upsets when "unexpecteds" appear, we have decided to forewarn our readers of the future's headlines now. (1) Gov. George Wallace will soon be named President of CORE. (2) Mrs. Madeline Murray will be named chairman of the World Methodist Council. (3) Barry Goldwater will become chairman of President Johnson's anti-poverty committee and will also serve as liason between the White House and the Ban the Bomb Ass'n. (4) A change in examination policy will transpire at Villanova. Henceforth students will be given answers and they will then be required to supply the questions.

A few weeks ago I was kidding a local disc jockey about his choice of music when he played "You Need Hands" from the "Trini (Lopez) at Basin Street East" album. Apparently the DJ was right when he said all my taste was in my mouth. The Reprise people are considering making just that cut into Trini's next single release.

WWVU has started a bi-weekly production for Media's WXUR. The first show featured summer travellers Paul McGrath (of VAMP) and Jim Croce (of the American Folk Quartet). The show is aired at 2 p.m. every other Sunday. Villanova people are featured on every show.

Villanova's Intercollegiate Jazz Festival is now set for March 19. With the release of the "My Fair Lady" film we get a bigger pile of M.F.L. LPs at WWVU. General concensus leans to Nat Cole's being the best received so far.

News Billboard

By the way, speaking of the station, have you discovered the WWVU News Billboard across from the university shop?

I would be remiss if I didn't recommend the movie, "Fate Is A Hunter". It has some great shots of a plane crash, without being gory, also a fine story-line that will provide some excellent food for mid-semester thought.

"The development of management is essential to our goal of great growth"

At the 1964 stockholders' meeting, Arjay Miller, President of Ford Motor Company, emphasized the Company's far-sighted recruitment program and its accent on developing management talent:

"One aspect of our planning is cruclal to the success of everything else we do. It engages the best thoughts and efforts of our whole management team, from top to bottom, throughout the world. I am speaking of the development of management. The immediate future of our Company depends heavily upon the abilities of the people who are now key members of our management team.

"In the longer run, our future depends on what we are doing at the present time to attract and develop the people who will be making the major decisions 10 to 20 years from now. We are developing management competence in depth in order to attack the problems that will confront a company of great growth—and great growth (both in profits and sales) is exactly the goal we have established for Ford Motor Company.

"We are continuing to emphasize recruiting. Last spring, 180 of our management people devoted part of their time to recruiting outstanding graduates from colleges and universities throughout the U.S. Last year, these efforts resulted in our hiring over 1,000 graduates, 220 more than the year before.

"We are seeking and we are finding young men—and young women, too—with brains and backbone—people who have the ability and the desire to make room for themselves at the top. We give our trainees challenging assignments with as much responsibility as they can carry. We promote them as fast as they are ready. Those who are interested in easy security soon drop out. Those who have what we want stay with us, and move up quickly to increased responsibility and the pay that goes with it. Thanks to the quality of the people we are recruiting and developing, I am firmly convinced that our outlook is most promising."

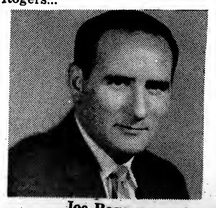
Talented Quartet Of 'Cat Coaches Keys To Main Line Success Story

By Buzz Langan

A recent visit tot the office in the west wing of the VU Field House disclosed the presence of four proud men. Their pride became evident by their gleeming eyes at the mere mention of their charge. Ths was the Villanova football coaching staff.

Alex Bell, the leader of the jubilant group, was full of praise for his assistants; Joe Rogers, Joe Faragalli and Lou Ferry. He attributed the fine execution of play, as well as the superior conditioning of the squad, to these three aides.

Bell, who is now in his fifth year as head man, has brought four straight winning seasons to the Main Line. Previously serving under Art Raimo as line coach,

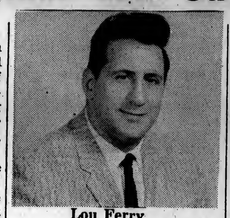


Alex Bell

Alex also served under John Yovisoin at Harvard for three years. Being a standout end for the 'Cats in the late thirties, Bell started his coaching career at Loyola High in Los Angeles. His next assignment, Delone Catholic, brought him statewide acclaim as a grid mentor.

Largely responsible for the sterling performance of the present 'Cat backfield is Joe Rogers. Mr. Rogers has been coaching VU teams since 1952, except for a four year stint as an eastern alumni coordiator. A former standout Wildcat back, Joe served as interim coach for the last six games of the '59 season. His first coaching position was at Waldron Academy, where he also served as athletic director..

Regarding his '64 cast of ponies, Rogers considers them the most skilled blockers and runners that he has had in many years. "What we lack in the power we had in '62, we have offset in speed," commented Mr. Rogers...



Joe Rogers

Praise poured from the coach's lips for Dave Connell. He stated that last year's experience, in which Dave did complete 47% of his passes, really paid off. He added that Connell's receivers, Sernyack and Santaumore, have vastly improved.

Another big surprise according to Joe has been the running of Tom Brown. He was just converted from halfback to the bread n' butter post during spring training.

Rogers has been especially pleased with the performances of Belotti, Green, Andreijko, Kolmer, Ferrainolo, and Bender in their reserve capacities.

Lou Ferry

The talents of the 'Cats line have been widely acclaimed. The two largely responsible for this have been Messers Lou Ferry and Joe Faragalli.

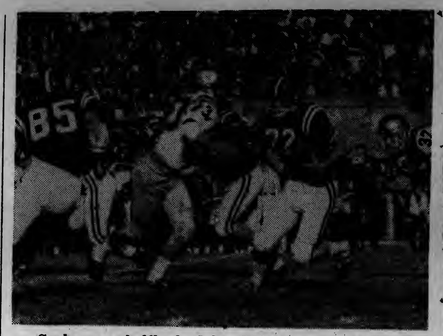
Ferry, who captained the 1948 Refrigerator Bowl bound team, joined the fold in 1960. Lou's previous assignments were Salpointe High, in Arizona, and Homestead High of Pittsburgh.

Immediately after his sterling grid career on the Main Line, Ferry embarked on a seven year pro career. During that time he played with the Green Bay Packers, the Chicago Cardinals, and the Pittsburg Steelers.

He was quick to point out that this year's line has turned out better than had been expected. He especially noted the consistent play of Strofolino, McDonald, and Smith. The normal praise was in store for Atkinson and McDonnell. He also pointed out the fine job being done by such as Sodaski, Fry, and Morda.

Lou singled out the Holy Cross encounter as the turing point in the season. This was due to the fact that the Crusader eleven was intact from last year with the exception of the center post. He then added that the Xavier contest proved the team's ability to play up to par under constant pressure.

Faragalli, another stellar Wildcat lineman of the fifties, has been with the staff since 1961. He previously served as head coach at St. Thomas Moore High for four years.



Faragalli pointed out that although Holy Cross was the turning point of the season, the sub unit had performed well in a pre-season scrimmage with Temple. This, he correctly thought was a preview of things to come. Joe also pointed out how fortunate the team had been regarding injuries. Though Tom Flandera was lost for the season, there have no other major catastrophies in this category.

Joe Faragalli

The inspring thing about the brain of the Blue and White seemed to be their respect. A respect both for the knowledge possessed by each other and for the spirit displayed by the boys. All four coaches seemed to feel that their chores have been much easier because of this.

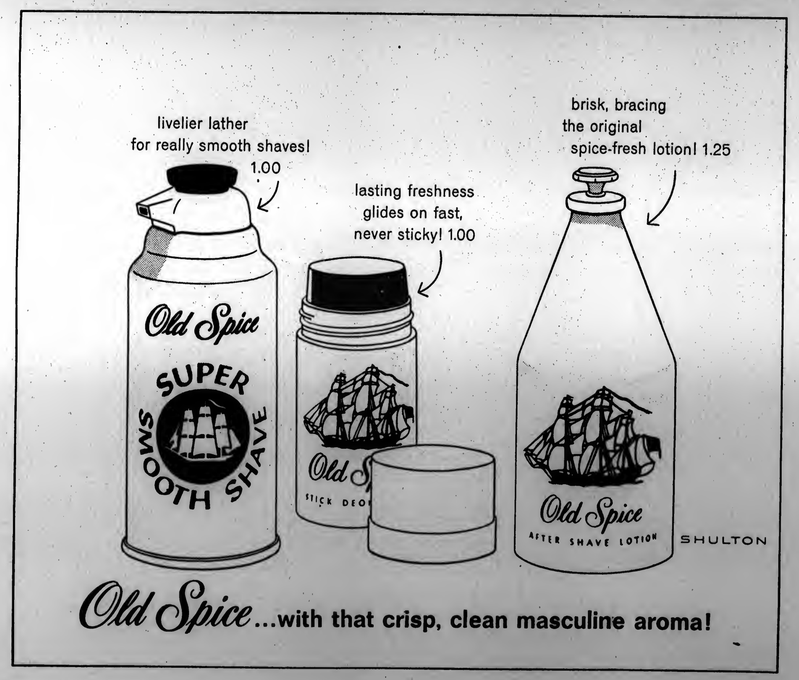
George Washington Preview

By Bob McIntyre

The Wildcats travel to D.C. Stadium this weekend to meet the Colonials of George Washington University. The 'Cats after losing their first game last weekend, will have to bonce back against a team that is much stronger than last year's team which just missed knocking off the 'Cats 14-13.



The Colonials, under coach James Camp, always ready with a trick or two against Villanova, have 17 lettermen back from last year plus a real good crop of sophs. Their record stands at 3-4 but tthet record doesn's tell the whole tale as can be attested to by Saturdays 20-19 loss to a strong West Virginia team which now has taken the Southern Conference Championship away from George Washington.

Soph Start

The team has become a real threat in the last couple of games due to a sophomore quarterback named, Garry Lyle. Lyle, running and passed out of the wing-T against West Virginia, had a hand in all three Colonial touchdowns, including a 54 yard pass play to tailback Jody Glass.

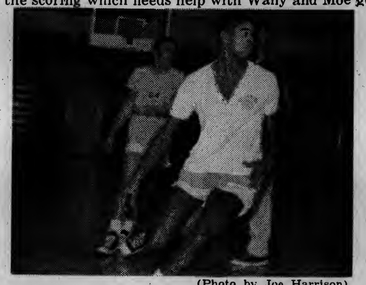
Tom Branch and Steve Welpott along with Harry Haught add a lot of spice to a backfield which likes to play a wide-open football game either out a wing-T or shot gun formation.

The line features tw possible All-Conference tackles in Doug McNeil and Steve Lapko. Another outtstanding lineman to watch is guard and Co-Captain Joe Heilman. The team features overall depth and real good team speed.

Kraft's Hardwood Magicians Prepare For Cage Campaign

By Bill McDonough

How much the graduation of Wally Jones and the unexpected loss of Richie Moore will hurt last year's N.C.A.A. Eastern semi-finalists will not be known until the upcomng 1964-1965 basketball season gets under way. The best answer to this question can only come from the man who makes the team go, Jack Kraft.



When interviewing Kraft, one gets the opinion that his quiet confidence will spread to his team and it will instill them with the pride that has kept his basketball men on top despite losing his two top offensive arsenals.

Mr. Kraft feels that in Jim Washington, George Leftwich, and Billy Melchionni, he has a solid, talented core to work from. Junior returning letterman Bernie Schaeffer, 6-5, and Eric Erickson, the 6-4 Cookie Rojas of the 'Cats, will battle it out in the coner opposite Washington. Charley (Pete) Coleman will be wawiting in the wings to help out Cy and Teddy Bear.

Center Open

This leaves just the important position of center open. Six-fooot nine Frank Gadjunas, 6-8 Billy Soens, and 6-8 Al Sallee are expected to wage a fight for the opening tap-off. Right now Frank has a sprained ankle and has not been able to practice, so at this time Billy Soens, a former all-scholastic from Penn Charter, would probably get the nod due to his great offensive potential. Do not count out the chances of the big ex-Marine, because who can forget the job he did to John Thompson of Providence last year.

Kraft feels that letting Washington move to the corner will give him the mobility that will enable him to display his cat-like moves and an excellent touch. Melchionni and Leftwich both shoot well from the outside and both will aid in the scoring which needs help with Wally and Moe gone.

It won't be long now before this pair makes its presence felt on the hardwood. Jim Washington and Bill Melchionni work out in Field House preparing for the coming court season.

Villanova Harriers Face Tough Test In Next Two Weeks

By Frank Miller

The Wildcat harriers have their two toughest meets of this this campaign coming up in the next two weeks. The first will be the IC4A championships Nov. 16, and the second will be the NCAA championships seven days later.

The 'Cats closed out a very sucessful season Oct. 31. when they dropped a very good LaSalle team by a count of 16-46 for their fouth straight victory and an undefeated season. The 'Cats also scored impressive victories over St. Joseph's, Quantico, and St. Johns.

Team Led by Sullivan

The 'Cats, led by Tom Sullivan expect their toughest competition in the IC4A championship from Georgetown and Notre Dame. Others running for the 'Cats for the IC4A laurels will be Bill Cubbin, Tom Caroll, Marty Ferko, Lew Ketekas, Dave Hyland, and Jimmy Orr.

Intramural Diving, Swiming Tourney Held Last Week

By Jim Proud

The swimming and diving championships, held last week, produced many new school records. The two main new school firsts were in the 50 yard freestyle and the 50 yard backstroke.

Mike Fitzmaurice broke the old record in the 50 yard freestyle with the aid of a good flip turn in 23.4 seconds. Rich Lamb, a freshman, won the 50 yard backstroke by a close margain in a time of 28.7 seconds.

Other Winners

Other winners in one of the best centested meets in recent years were; Bob Brenker in the 50 yard breakststroke, Mike Fitzmaurice repeating this time in the 50 yard butterfly.

Fitzmaurice also won the 100 yard freestyle while Rich Lamb won his second event of the day by finishing ahead of the field in the 100 yard individual medley.

In the second half the day's competition, the diving, Lee Capellaro finished first with a well executed series of dives. Lee is a freshman and a good candidate for this year's frosh squad.

Freindly Foolishness

No Tears For The 'Cats

By Steve Freind

The bubble has burst, the the streak is over. The length of Don Moran's body hurdling against Dave Connell's punt ended the 'Cats dream of the first perfect season in Villanova history.

This was the one Bell's boys wanted. For the senior Wildcats, it was the last roll of the dice, the last chance to silence the brash invaders from Boston. They almost pulled it off, but fate threw a reverse in the backstretch and the Eagles walked off with all the marbles.

It would be easy to play this one glib and sarcastic, jibing the 'Cat bandwagon when it hit a roadblock—easy, but wrong. Not, it wasn't a choke. No, they didn't blow it when the pressure was on. Last Saturday two of the East's finest teams hooked up in a bloodbath and neither one really lost.

B.C. Thankful

Jim Miller's Boston toughguys rambled into Goodreau Stadium with the air of a team that expected a breather from their power-laden schedule. The New England Eagles were again out to prove that the boys from the Main Line just weren't in their class. Yeah, they won, but they weren't really a happy lot when the battle dust cleared—just thankful. Thankful that they got out alive, thankful that Christmas came early. They headed back to their Boston lair with a victory—and respect for a rugged bunch of Wildcats.

Many feel that the B.C. loss signals the end of the 'Cats season, that Moran's block extinguished the spark of the Villanova machine. Believe it if you like, but don't hold your breath waiting for the Bombers to rollover and die. Connell's Corral still wants to run and George Washington and Buffalo will feel the sting of their hoofmarks.

Sure, the post-game locker room was like a tomb. But there's two games left on the war sheet and then possibly a trip to Atlantic City. Bud Dudley, founder of the Liberty Bowl, was in the press box to watch Bell's Bombers in action. He liked what he saw. The dream of the 'Cats locking horns with a team like Florida State in a month could just become a deality. Mr. Dudley, you could do worse, a lot worse.

Long Road

It's been a long road since Toledo—a long successful road and the Blue and White victory march has yet to reach the end of the line. Guys like Al Atkinson and John McDonnell aren't the type to quit when the road gets a little bumpy. They don't even know the meaning of the word. Alex Bell can be proud of his warriors. He's fielded a stable of champions.

Write no epitaphs for the Wildcats. They don't need it. Take a trip to Washington this Saturday and find out for yourself. Cynics expecting a wake are going to see a pretty live corpse.

Bulletin scribe Sandy Grady said that Villanova lost perfection by two minuttes and 52 seconds. He may have a point but you'll have a tough time convincing this writer. It would be almost impossible to be any prouder of Bell's fabulous Bombers. After watching the 'Cats play their hearts out last Saturday, one feels compelled to paraphrase a chant often heard on the Main Line:

"We're Still Number One"

Rugby: A Fast Moving Contest Of Skill And Enterprise

By Buzz Langan

What is rugby? Rugby is an English game derived from soccer, starting way back in the 19 century when some obscene young high school lad picked the ball up and ran with it in a bit of frustration instead of kicking it, much to the shock of his dumbfounded teammaes.

The object of the game is to run the ball across your opponent's goal line, a movement worth three points. Two points awarded for the conversion kick after the score. The only other way to score is by drop kicking the ball through the goal posts from anyplace on the field at anytime which is worth three points or by receiving a penalty kick and place kicking through the goal posts for three points.

There are 15 player on a team and no substitution allowed. Generally 35 minute halves are played with no time outs.

Villanova has an excellent Rugby team, and this past weekend the 'Cats beat Pittsburgh Rugby Club 5 to 0.

Rich Gove scored on a pass from Leo Cambell, Bill Blauvelt added the two point conversion.

Villanova's "B" team lost to Lehigh 9 to 0 with points being scored by a goal and two penalty kicks.

This weekend Villanova plays Washington Rugby Club. After the Washington game Villanova is playing in the seven-aside tournament which will conclude the fall season; the season opens again in the spring.

Out of 30 members of the Rugby team 15 will be lost by way of graduation. The Villanova rugby team needs new members. Those who are interested in playing in the spring must report now, so the club can schedulle enough games. There will be schedules for three teams, if there is enough interest. Don't just be a spectator! Enjoy the fun of participating in intercollegiate athletics.

Rugby when played correctly is an exciting colorful game requiring great physical stamina, a genius of mind and a good deal of personal courage.

Boston College Nips 'Cats, 8-7

Fourth Quarter Blocked Punt Paves Way For Eagle Victory

By Steve Freind

The Villanova Wildcats' dream of an unbeaten season came to an end Saturday. A blocked punt with three minutes left in the final period supplied Boston College with its margin of victory as the powerful New England Eagles came from behind to eke out an 8-7 triumph before a sellout throng of 14,000.

The tilt, billed as a tossup between eastern powers, proved to be just that, as the two teams hooked up in a titantic defensive struggle. Rarely has Goodreau Stadium witnessed such a scene, as Bell's Bombers and their Beantown foes battled on nearly even terms for the entire sixtty minutes.

Even Statistics

The statistics prove just how even the contest was. Villanova enjoyed the edge in first downs, 10-8, outgaining tthe Eagles overland by a count of 133-60. In the air, the Birds flew high, racking up 113 yards to 7 for the Cas.

For the 'Cats, it was a punters' duel as Dave Connell and Eagle Steve Murry combined to boot the pigskin 17 times. It was one of these punts which proved to be the 'Cats undoing. Leading 7-0 late in the fourth quarter, the 'Cats were forced into a punting situation after stifling a B.C. drive which reached the Villanova 16.

Fullback Don Moran blew through the 'Cat line to smother Connell's kick and the Eagles had the ball on the 16. Ed Foley, B.C.'s scrappy quarterback, who turned in a brilliant performance despite a a tremendous pounding from the Wildcat line, picked up 9 yards on a rollout. Moran added 4 more for a first down on the Blue and White 3.

On the next play, Foley rolled right and at the last second flipped a pichout to Jim McGowan who scampered into the end zone. Eagle Coach Jim Miller spurned the tie and elected to go for a two point conversion. Foley again rolled right, faking a pass which loosened up the 'Cat defense, then bolted across the line to drop the "Cats from the ranks of the unbeaten.

Score Nullified

The first stanza was strictly defense, as neither team was able to mount any sort of offensive drive. The Eagles received a break midway through the period when highly-touted tackle John Frechette, who was totally incapable of handling All American candidate Al Atkinson, pounced on a Connell fumble at the Villanova 16. Foley fired a scoring strike to ace end Jim Whalen but the Eagles were penalized for holding, nulifying the play.

Late in the second quarter Foley again teamed up with Whalen, this time for 56 yards and an apparent touchdown. But again B.C. was penalized and the 'Cats were out of another jam. Trying to put his team on the board at halftime, Foley again dropped back to pass, but Mike Strofolino intercepted on the Eagle 45 and toted the pigskin to 15 before being knocked out of bounds.

Connell picked up 5 on a rollout to the 10, then Dick Sernyak, turning in aonthter guts performance, swung right, shook off three tacklers and dashed in for the tally. Jim Case's placement was perfect and the 'Cats owned a 7-0 lead at intermission.

The Eagles wasted a scoring chance early in the second half when 'Cat Richie Green fumbled the opening kickoff on the 23. Three cracks at the Villanova line netted only 7 yards and Marty DiMezza's field goal attempt was short.

With six minutes left in the contest, the 'Cats looked like winners, as B.C. was struggling on its own 12. Then Foley uncorked an aerial to Captain Bill Cronin who carried 75 yards to the Wildcat 13. Atkinson, McDonnell and company stiffened up and it looked like the 'Cats were home free, but Moran's block changed all that.

Sernyak was the leading ground gainer for the Bombers with 37 yards, while Tom Brown added 36 plus a sparkling defensive game. Connell completed the 'Cats only pass. a 7 yarder to Brown. His Eagle counterpart Foley hit on 4 of 11 attempts for 113 yards while being held to a minus 35 yards on the ground.

As in every game this season the Wildcats defense excelled. Atkinson, Strofolino, John McDonnell, and Chappy Moore put tremendous pressure on the explosive Eagle offense which racked up 21 pointtst against eastern leader Syracuse. The 'Cats look like sure bets to break the school rushing defense record of 102.7 yards per game set in 1949. In 44 rushing attempts, the Eagles were able to average only 1.4 yards a crack.

Strof The Spark

by Rusty Miller

One of the biggest sparks of the Villanova eleven is 6-2 230 pound Mike Strofolino. Mike has several claims to fame at Villanova: He is the campus answer to the "missing link" (He is the only pure-blooded Indian on the squad; (His tribal name is Tonto.); and he plays a fair game of football.

Last Saturday, in a game that saw two defensive giants knock heads Strof was, as usual, a standout. On the field he seemed to be everywhere. On one play he may stop a runner for no gain, and on the next, be back covering a receiver. For his size Mike is exceptionally fast; this, added to his ability to diagnose plays makes him a painful thorn in the side of any opposing quarterback. Twice on Saturday he threw the B.C. quarterbacks for losses, one of five, the other of ten yards. He has also done an excellent job of pass-defending with three interceptions to his credit. Against B.C. his interception of a Foley pass and 37 yard return set up Villanova's touchdown.

On a team where spirit is the watchword, Strof is unquestionably the old watchwinder. Before the game and at half-time the dressing room resounds with his cries: "O.K. you guys, we're gonna take these hot dogs!", "Don't let up now; we'll take em by two more!" Even after a game in all the humdrum of reporters and scouts, Strof always makes his presence known. Not so last week.

After the game the dressing room was like a different place. None of the usual sounds could be heard, none of the congratulations or the replaying of key plays. The cast was the same but it was as though someone had forgotten to give out the scripts. The actors wandered aimlessly not knowing what to do.

So, by one play, the burning flame of desire was badly dimmed. It flickered and almost disappeared. But it didn't disappear! There can still be a bowl in Villanova's future, and as long as men like Mike Strofolino are still a part of Villanova sports, that flame will always reappear and burn as brightly as before.

Forty Seniors Attain College Who's Who

Belle Masque Will Present Three Plays November 20-22

The first modern repertory in the Philadelphia area will be presented by the Belle Masque, Villanova's undergraduate drama society, at 8:30 p.m., November 20-22. The performance includes The Lesson by Eugene Ionecso, Mask of Angels by Notis Peryalis, and The Typist by Murray Schisgal. These plays demonstrate certain invective criticisms of man and society through a comic and pathetic viewpoint.

The Lesson is a play from the traditional school of the French theatre of the avant-garde. Eugene Ionesco, established as a major writer of the 1940's and 1950's, created in this work the paradoxical inability of man to communicate with his fellow man. The story of the play centers around an eighty year-old professor who tries to teach an 18 year-old girl everything needed to apply for a Doctorate degree. He fails and destroys his pupil. Though there is a wide comic surface to it, this play is tragedy, and in the tradition of the absurd.

Mask of Angels is a play about people who try to disguise their love under masks of hate and fear. The people involved in the story are an unscrupulous prostitute, her peg-legged lover, and a high society couple. Notis Peryalis is a new writer and highly regarded in his native country, Greece.

The Typist is a comedy. It spans a thirty year period, and is the story of love between an office typist and a young business man. Murray Schisgal, the author of The Typist, is writing in New York; he is established as a fine off-Broadway writer, and is currently waiting for one of his plays, Luv, to open on Broadway.

Tickets can be bought in the Pie Shoppe or at the Playbox door.

Luv

In reference to Murray Schisgal's new play Luv, which opened on Broadway this past week, it is interesting to note that it has been favorably received by most of the New York critics.

In view of this development, it is believed that Schisgal plans to rewrite parts of The Typist so that it will be able to open on Broadway during the spring of 1965.

Tickets for students will cost $1.25 and general admission seats are available for $2.

Six Nursing Students Named From Diversified Candidates

Forty seniors have been selected for "Who's Who in American Universities and Colleges."

This number represents the highest number ever accepted from Villanova by the organization. The regular complement is 36.

Pictures and biographies of the selectees apear on pages 8, 9, 10, and 11 of this edition.

Six nursing students apear on the list, the largest number in recent years.

Six Nurses

In addition to the six nurses, there are six engineering students, 12 in the College of Commerce and Finance, and 17 Liberal Arts students.

The finalists were chosen by a committee consisting of the Rev. George McLaughlin, OSA, dean of men; Rev. Joseph Kemme, OSA, vice-president for student affairs; Miss Dorothy Boyle, dean of women; Rev. Richard Appicci, OSA, dean of student activities; Rev. William Hopkins, OSA, University Chaplain; Tom Furst, student body president; and Ernie Abate, senior class president.

The committee chose the final 40 from lists submitted by a committee of student leaders, the deans of the various colleges, and the moderators of the recognized student organizations.

Finalists

The finalists will appear in a booklet, along with those selected from other organizations from other colleges, published by the national organization.

A banquet will be held sometime during December for the Who's Who selectees.

The nominees were selected on the basis of activity in student organizations, good standing with the authority of the University, and minimum 2.5 cumulative average.

Student Congress Passes Girl Cheerleaders' Motion

By Tom Krause

An historic Student Congress meeting passed motion concerning girl cheerleaders, non-compulsory class attendance, and an investigation into the possibility of a meal ticket system. Also, Ernie Abate president of the Senior Class, was elected as National Catholic Youth of the year at the two and one-half hour meeting last Wednesday.

Besides the passing of five motions, several SGA executive vice-presidents and the Rev. Richard A. Appicci, dean of student activies and moderator of SGA, castigated apathetic SGA members. Father Appicci also expressed the Administration's policy on female cheerleaders.

"The Administration is willing to accept girl cheerleaders but there is a consideration," said Father Appicci. "There is a slight degree of rowdiness exhibited at football and basketball games. We don't want to submit girl cheerleaders to this," Father added.

Apathy

In committee reports, utimatums were given to organizations who had filled out Studentt Registry forms and warnings of possible expulsion from SGA weregiven. Among those begging for spirit were Rusty Miller and Dave Moore. One sign of apathy cited was the failure of representatives to pick up their mail in the SGA office.

Semester reports are required of the organizational representatives and certain deadlines were set at the meeting. Faith Connor, chairman of the Lecture Series, told the Congress of the necessity to revamp the committee, and mention was made of Dr. Martin Luther King's cancellation.

While motions were being debated, voting was carried on by

Junior Class Sets Charity Weekend For Early December

By Bill McCloskey

Junior Class officers have persuaded the Administration to reinstate the Charity Ball as part of this year's Charity Weekend scheduled for December 4 and 5.

The event did not appear on the master schedule although class officers claim they were never notified of the cancellation. It was decided last year that the annual dance would not be held this year, reportedly because last year's function failed to net a profit.

Not knowing of this decision, the committee planning the weekend, led by Brian Banmiller, met November 9 and made their plans, complete with a Friday evening dance.

When it was learned that the dance was not scheduled an immediate meeting was set up with Rev. Richard Appicci, OSA, Dean of Student Activities. It was at this meeting, late Monday, that the decision was made to re-

Dr. Joseph George Discusses Graduate School Opportunities

By Bob Elschner

Dr. Joseph George, Graduate School Advisor, spoke last week at the Practical Lecture Series sponsored by the Junior Class. He discussed applicant and scholarship opportunities opened to Villanovans contemplating graduate schools.

In the lecture, "Graduate Schools In Your Future," Dr. George emphasized that employees with a graduate school experience have a greater advantage in seeking employment and start at higher salaries than those without it.

Law Schools Seek

The Graduate School Advisor stated that law schools are looking for students with a broad education, particularly those who have a substantial background in English, history, political science and the fine arts. He mentioned that due to the number of applicants, law schools have become extremely selective and are looking for students with very high cumulative averages and excellent board results. Scholarship opportunities are rare because of the number of undergraduate students applying for them.

The speaker emphasized that engineering students should seek graduate school opportunities. He stated that engineers with a M.A. degree earn $100 more than those without one. Openings for engineers in this field are tremendous.

Considering the students majoring in the physical sciences, the graduate advisor said that scholarship opportunities are plentiful but not as generous as engineering scholarships.

He claimed that any science major with a 3.0 cumulative average would have no trouble in obtaining one. Fellowships for English majors are abundant because of the need for English profs but fellowships for history majors are pratically nil.

Concept Editor Announces December Publication Date

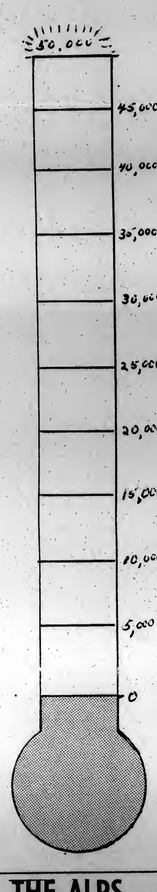
By Walt Baginsky

Stephen Webb, editor-in-chief, of Concept, a Journal which canvasses the University to find its most interesting and enlightening topics to relate to the student body, has announced that the next edition will be available sometime in early December.

Archbishop McDevitt's commencement address to the class of '64 will highlight this edition along with the names of the Linback Award winners who include: Dr. Rofinot of the History department; Prof. Galen, dean of the school of engineering; E. J. Dougherty, Commerce and Finance; William C. A. Henry; Prof. Mitchell of the English department; Prof. Driscoll of the Physics department; Mr. Hicks of Electrical Engineering; and Prof. Amelotti of the Mathematics department.

Webb emphasized the excellency of Bob Koogler's work concerning the character comparison between The Old Man and the Sea and Michaelangelo's, The Agony and the Ecstasy, — a feature article appearing in December's edition. Webb included, that the art work, provided by Henry Tata, should greatly appeal to the reader's aesthetic feelings. The over-all theme for this edition is "The acquisition of Knowledge."

This edition will also include an article revealing the results of the survey conducted by the Literary Society and Concept under the leadership of Tom Krause and Webb. The survey consisted of questions concerning the recent books students have read. Also, they were asked what type of books they perfer, e.g. History, Drama, etc. The poll was well received and both resident and day students from all divisions of the school participated.



With the success of last year's edition still fresh in the minds of Villanova students, the staff of the Concept is striving in this edition toward an even better magazine.

Martin Luther King Cancels Forum Talk Until Mid January

The Villanova Forum regretfully announces that Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., the winner of the 1964 Nobel Peace Prize, will be unable to appear here on November 23.

Rev. Appicci, O.S.A., Dean of Student Activities, has announced that Dr. King has been hospitalized for approximately a week and has cancelled all immediate lecture engagements. He was also slated to speak on a television broadcast at Penn State University, November 24.

According to Fr. Appicci, Dr. King will be unable to make his inaugural appearance at Villanova until well after the New Year, probably late in January or early in February.

Philadelphia Region Of NFCCS Innaugurates New Programs

The Philadelphia Region of the National Federation of Catholic College Students officially innaugurated a new and far-reaching program of activities at their meeting Sunday at Casa del Carmen in Philadelphia.

The large attendance at the meeting included NFCCS Delegates and Moderators, several Student Government Presidents, and a large number of students interested in the "Casa" project. John Shade, President of Villanova's campus NFCCS unit, headed the Villanova delegation which attended the affair.

Highlighting the function were speeches given by Miss Ann Hunt, National Regional Affairs Vice-president of the organization, Bob Dean Regional President, and Sister Thomas Augustine, MSBT, Director of Casa.

Casa del Carmen is the social center for Spanish-speaking Puerto Rican families — as well as Negro families — which compose the greater part of the residents in the area. Its location at 7 and Jefferson Streets — a devastatingly poverty - stricken slum area in Philadelphia — makes it, in the words of Sister Augustine, ". . . a haven in the wilderness."

The center, supported by Catholic Charities, includes a clinic for medical care and classrooms for conducting instruction in English, academics, and vocational training. It also directs casework for families and organizes activities for children in the area. Lack of personnel, however has always hampered its effectiveness.

The NFCCS will recruit and organize College Sudents in the Philadelphia area to help with the work at Casa.

This is to be the first in a series of Regional projects to be undertaken this year — as announced by Regional President, Bob Dean, in his "State of the Region" address.

Others include work on the Philadelphia and Archdiocesan tutorial programs, promoting "Aid to Mexico" programs, such as that run at Villanova last year, to other Regional schools, initiating an Easter-vacation trip to conduct projects in poverty-sticken areas of Appalachia, and planning a Communion Breakfast for Delegates and members of the Student Governments, Faculties and Administrations from member schools throughout Philadelphia.

Also announced at the meeting was the election of new Regional Treasurer, Chuck Carlson, of Villanova, and the resumption of the publication of a Regnional Newsletter, edited by Mike Victor — also of Villanova.

Villanova Parents Campaign Seeks To Enlarge Library

A campaign to raise $50,000 to aid the University Library is presently underway.

John D. Cronin, the Chairman of the Parents' Program for 1964-65, expressed a note of confidence when he said: "The key to the success of this year's program will be the percentage of parents who are interested enough to participate . . ." "I know as a parent that everyone will want to participate in a program from which their children will benefit."

Mr. Cronin, the Executive Vice President of Freehold Raceway and parent of a senior student, went on to say: "Obviously some parents can and will want to contribute more than others. But, it is hoped that every parent, no matter what the size of his gift, will want to make some contribution."

Library Expansion

All monies which are raised by the parents through this program will be used by the University to expand facilities in the Library.

Father Louis A. Rongione, O.S.A., the Librarian, explained to the Parent's Committee how last year's funds were expended. The 1963-64 Parents Program raised $30,800 and was presented with a national award. Last year's goal was $25,000. These monies made available many new machines which are required for the use of microfilm, new chairs and tables to accommodate more students, new shelving, duplicating machines, and many more Library items.

Louis Untermeyer, Famed Poet To Speak At December Forum

Louis Untermeyer, famed poet, editor, critic, and anthologist will address the Villanova Forum on December 3 at 8 p.m. in the Field House.

Louis Untermeyer

His latest constribution to the field of American literature is the epistolary anthology, The Letters of Robert Frost to Louis Untermeyer. The book, revealing a darker side of Frost that many had not seen before, was widely acclaimed by literary critics. Untermeyer's friendship with Frost lasted nearly 50 years, and is unique in the history of American poetry.

Born in New York, Untermeyer held various jobs until he became manager of a jewelry manufacturing plant in New Jersey. Finally, in 1937, he left the business in order to devote his full time writing.

Since then he has been the anthologist of such books as A Treasury of Great Poems and A Treasury of Laughter. As a poet his best known work is perhaps Selected Poems and Parodies.

His book Modern America and British Poetry was recently issued in an enlarged Mid-Century editoion and has been adopted as a standard text in virtually all schools and colleges throughout the country.

Besides his anthologies and poetry, Untermeyer has written a biography, Makers of the Modern World, in which he describes men who helped to shape today's world.

Among his many vocations and avocations, aside from poet and biographer, are: essayist, teacher, lecturer, pianist, and horticulturist.

In a long and crowded career, Louis Untermeyer has crossed swords with many traditions. But the only enemies he has made are the minor poets he has omitted from his anthologies. His friends never cease to sing his praise.

Handel's Messiah, the famous and most frequently performed English oratorio, will be presented by the Singing City Choir on Saturday night, November 21, in the Field House.

The choir, now in its seventeenth year, is under the direction of Dr. Elaine Brown. Dr. Brown, who is also the founder of the group, is recognized as one of the world's outstanding choral directors. The group has performed with such renowned conductors as Leonard Bernstein, Thor Johnson, Erich Leinsdorf, Hans Schwieger, Igor Stravinsky, and Alfred Wallenstein. In November 1963, the Choir was chosen to participate in Pennsylvania's memorial tribute to the late President John F. Kennedy.

The concert on Saturday will concern the Christmas portion of the Messiah, which has been called the most enduring popular extended musical composition. It will begin at 8:15 p.m. in the Field House. Tickets are on sale at $1.00 for Villanova Students and $1.50 for others.

Consul-General Tull To Speak In Dougherty Hall Today

By Mary Anne Rowland

Thomas Stuart Tull, Consul-General of the United Kingdom, will speak in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall on November 19 at 8 p.m. The subject of his talk will be "British Elections" and After."

Tull, a native of Norfolk on the east coast of England, was born in 1914 and educated at Rossall School and Jesus College in Oxford. He served in Northwestern India as a member of the Indian Civil Service, acting as an assistant commissioner and later as an aide to the Governor, beginning in 1938.

On active service in the India and South-East theatres, Tull served with the Royal Air Force Volunteer Reserve until 1946. ended the war as a Wing Commander and was awarded the Distinguished Service Order and made an officer of the Order of the British Empire.

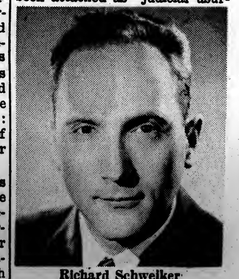
UN Delegate

He became a First Secretary and, later, Charge d'Affaires of the British Legation in Switzerland, after joining the Foreign delegation to the Twelfth General Assembly of the United Nations and then spent three years as Consul General in Gothenburg, Sweden. He was transferred to Philadlephia in May of 1961.

Tull was promoted to Commander of the Order of the British Empire in June, 1963.

Congressman Dick Schweiker Debates At Political Union

Congressman Richard Schweiker of Montgomery County will argue for a "School Prayer Amendment" at a debate meeting of the Villanova Political Union on Monday evening, November 30. The meeting will be held in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall at 7:30 and the public is invited.



Proposals for a school prayer amendment to the Federal Constitution have gained considerable support since the recent and controversial Supreme Court decisions which held that prayers and Bible reading violate rights guaranteed by the First and Fourteenth Amendments. The resolution will read: Resolved: this house favors adoption of HJR 693, the School Prayer Amendment.

Congressman Schweiker is making his second appearance before Villanova's political debating society. In 1962 he persuaded the Union to call for sronger measures against Castro's Cuba. Early this month Schweiker, a Republican, was re-elected to Congress with a comfortable margin by the same Montgomery County voters who broke tradition by voting for a Democratic presidential candi-

While the school prayer amendment is close to the Congressman's heart his interests are very broad. He is a member of the House Armed Services Committee.

In their most recent debate Union members joined Joseph J. Friere, president of the Parents and Taxpayers Association, in opposition to school busing when used to achieve a racial balance in the schools. Leading speakers included Brian Morgan, liberal; Richard Behrens, conservative; Eugene Fitzmaurice, moderate.

The Supreme Court's decision on the school prayer issue has been attacked as "judicial usurpation" as well as on its merits. Opponents of the decision hold that the Constitution properly interpreted, permits the saying of a prayer or the reading of the Bible without comment.

Richard Schweiker

Champions of the Court decision argue that a "school prayer" inevitably is somewhat "sectarian" and gives an unconstitutional preference to one religion or several and discriminates against others.

VU Cultural Center

A university is composed of many elements. The student is confronted with a multi-faceted institution, demanding of him all that he is capable of giving. At least that is the ideal relationship between a student and his school. Therefore, the individual should involve himself in as many aspects of university life as possible, if he truly wants to grow intellectually. We do not mean, however, that one should join every organization on campus, perhaps "spreading himself too thin" and hurting his academic standing.

To stray from the point a little, it has come to our attention that Belle Masque, the undergraduate dramatic society, has found itself without a theatre. This weekend Belle Masque will present three short plays in the Villanova Playbox, which seats 64 and comes under the supervision of the Graduate Theatre Department. Actually, this is an off week for the Theatre Department or the undergraduates would have no place to go. The stage has been torn down in Vasey Hall.

A university of our size and stature should have a theatre or auditorium ranking with some of the best in the country. Anyone who has attended a performance in LaSalle College's auditorium can appreciate the value of a theatre with fine acoustics and lighting blending with a brilliant design. Budget is another consideration and Belle Masque receives nothing while St. Joseph's, a neighboring Catholic college, gives $5200 a year to their dramatic society.

In order to improve the rapport between the student and the university, we propose the erection of a cultural center on the campus that would enable students to meet and exchange ideas. This center would also include facilities for the numerous concerts held at Villanova, and would furnish the students with a place to pursue their theatrical ambitions. Aside from the need of an auditorium with good acoustics and lighting, such a center would provide a stimulus for the arts on the Villanova campus.

The student who wishes to enlarge himself by participating in extra-curricular activities should be provided with all possible means to achieve his goal.

Happy Thanksgiving!!

Letters To The Editor

To the Editor,

In the first few weeks of this school year this campus was unfortunate in that there were two accidents involving automobiles and students. It was unfortunate for the students because they were injured and unfortunate for the drivers of the automobiles because of their feeling of guilt. I do not place the blame on anyone because of the circumstances. However, I would like to point out a few facts that should be considered by anyone who is either walking or driving on campus.

The number of students on campus this year is greater than ever and this causes a problem. More students are using the roadways and sidewalks, making it more difficult for those people who have to drive on campus. In many cases I have seen the students openly ignore the automobiles and other vehicles on campus. This to me is most ungentlemanly and certainly not appropriate behavior for a Villanovan . . .

I would like everyone involved to consider the complete situation and act accordingly as a gentleman and a true Villanovan.

Bill Manfred,

To the Editor,

Disappointing as the loss of the game was to Boston C., the fact is, of course, that the Villanova team played superbly; that is, with intelligence, skill, and spirit. These qualities never so bountiful, even at "one of the top-ranking schools in the East" (a self-identification frequently made in these pages), as to go unremarked.

"Big-time football," popular usage to the contrary, has a quantitative meaning with reference to the length of the player roster. It is not strictly speaking a qualitative term, and so is applicable to many football squads which are more numerous than Villanova's but not better. From the scant handful of sophomores on the B.C. roster, one surmises that many B.C. players were not suited up. And yet, as Bob Vetrone of the Evening Bulletin wrote, the B.C. coach was able to substitue platoons while Alex Bell was substituting individual players.

The size of a football team, like the size of student enrollment, is no necessary mark of its excellence. Three cheers to the Wildcat players and coaches, and best wishes for a continuing successful season.

To the Editor,

There is a political observation to which, I believe, every college student ought to be exposed. It does not pertain exclusively to politics, but is most influential and potentially dangerous in this area. It is deception in the newspapers.

I cite two examples in the Evening Bulletin of November 5. On the first page of the edition I bought was a report that less votes were cast November 3 than had been expected. The sub-head said that Senator Goldwater said he would have done better if there had been more votes cast. In reading the transcript of the Senator's news conference to which this article referred, I found that not only did he not assert any such thing, but that he said nothing from which it could be reasonably inferred that he felt that way.

On the second page was an article the headline of which was: "Contradictions Observed In the Goldwater Campaign." It is the privilege of a free press to make known its observations, although this should have been done on an editorial page or at least identified as an editorial. But while this article was critical of the Republican campaign, it did not even attempt to point to a contradiction in what was done or said.

It is each reader's right to agree or disagree with a newspaper's editorializing, but we must always be on the alert for it where it does not belong.

Why Hast Thou . . . . ?

By William Howerton

This analysis is not intended to be political bi-partisan, or supported by any other kind of evidence — it is an individual opinion, spontaneous observation from the personality level.

The American individual has gone beyond the point where he realizes that a sacrifice must be made. The social-economic cocoon entwining the American value system is more obvious in this in any other situation: the nation is returning to emotional isolationism — the difference is this—the stakes now are higher.

The Cocoon

America has just chosen to spin more of this cocoon, to evolve further into a welfare state. And, as a welfare state, America will not have the leadership to protect her interests in a situation of international tension. This will be the case if the present trend continues — but how long can it?

This is the evolutionary process; remaining is the corresponding presidential situation. The Presidency is two fold: international and domestic. The exact sacrifice (and one is needed) to be made is this: America has to sacrifice temporary domestic comfort to fully concentrate her resources on an international field.

This is what counts now. Constant and universal economic and military pressure is what will beat communism but at least 40 million Americans are too selfish, too self-directed, too darn complacent to realize, to permit this to happen. There is no doubt that if anything is to beat communist expansion it is a strong, aggressive, unified, economic, diplomatic, and yes even military program.

Risk

America must be willing to risk war before it becomes too late. The Cuban fiasco, the takeover in China and Southeast Asia — all these have been lamented because America did not act, or acted too late. America must act. Soon it is going to be too late to act at all—the stakes will be that high.

America chose on Nov. 3. The question applicable is whether she got a man who will sacrifice domestic issues (and therefore his own political future) to bring America to a stronger and more realistic attitude in the face of a tense and "fail-safe" international situation.

America must sacrifice to make up for her mistakes, even if it means hardship. This is our system of life being tested — for the fatter and quieter we grow, so also does the Communist community.

Members of the Junior Class:

I would like to take this opportunity to praise the members of the class of '66 for their conduct at the Junior Class Party. I am sure all of use realize the difficulties entailed in conducting such an activity. Any misconduct would have resulted in the termination of such affairs for all classes of the university.

It was gratifying to observe the success of the party. Every student conducted himself in a manner that reflected the high calibre of students in the Class of '66.

Sincerely,
Francis T. Eck

Philadelphia Busing Issue: Fair Is Foul And Foul, Fair

By Dennis McNenney

As if our society were not complex enough in our days, recently a delicate matter has been added to the cumbersome mass of problems and headaches in our city of Philadelphia. This matter is the busing of school children on grounds that it will achieve racial balance in our schools.

Joseph Frieri, founder and president of the Parents' and Taxpayers' Association of Philadelphia, came to speak to the Villanova Political Union on the delicate matter of busing school children on Monday evening, November 9. Frieri is violently opposed to such an idea.

Two Points

Among the points raised by the distinguished guest, the one concerning the business of the school board of Philadelphia was mentioned. Frieri maintains that the board should only consider its purpose — education, and not to get involved in racial matters. Another point of his was to end the burdensome expenses involved in busing and that, instead, use the money in improving the schools from which the children are being bussed and even to construct new schools in those areas where there is such a need.

I would tend to go along with Frieri as far as his first point is concerned — a school board should be primarily concerned with education, not with social problems. I honestly believe that busing per se cannot directly achieve a racial balance or integration.

Problems

Many problems are involved in busing. The children are bussed to a different school. In class they will not have too much of an opportunity to communicate (so vital for the interchanging of ideas and for the progress of culture). At lunch time they will remain in school while the other group goes home for lunch. When school is over in the afternoon they will jump into the bus and back home they go. Definitely, not much integration is achieved this way! The most we would get would be an ineffective, fictitious, and apparent integration. In fact we solve nothing this way.

However, we must not stop our consideration here. We must go deeper into the subject and analyze the situation with more refinement. School busing does not mean a program where children are moved around, back and forth, at random. As the program stands, those who would be bussed are the children from those schools which do not offer the means for an education to those schools which offer much better resources. Many schools in poverty-stricken areas lack adequate lighting, adequate ventilation, adequate space, adequate "tools." Also, good teachers, those who have been trained very well in their profession, are attracted to better positions in better schools with a better salary. The "missionaries" are not that plentiful. Thus, we face a situation where not only the environment works against education but also the quality of the teachers who end up in those places is not the quality which would contribute to effective education. We students know the tremendous difference between a good and effective professor and a lousy one.

Solution

Through busing we pull out the children from such a vicious circle to a place where they will find better conditions for learning, for assimilating, for developing their potencialities in such a way that they can move up in society and make society more progressive, more stable. This result in turn helps the individuals to become more objective about racial problems. In sociology it is a fact that the more fully educated a person gets, the better the chance that he be more objective and less emotionally attached when faced with the contemporary problems of society. This objectivity in turn will help the cause of integration and social rest. It is a slow and very long process, but is positive!

Certainly, the alternative to busing proposed by Frieri is by far much better—to build or improve schools where need exists. However, this takes money; in fact, much more money than saved from busing. The Philadelphia Board does not have the money for this alternative. They get the money from the taxpayers and parents. Frieri's Association, are not willing to give this extra money, this extra tax!

Hope

Busing is not the best way of solving the problem of education, and certainly is not the best way to achieve racial balance. Moreover, busing is designed to be a temporal remedy, not a permanent one. However, it can work and is the only feasible one with the means available. Those individuals in society who have achieved a position of stability are generally unwilling

Is This Justice?

By John Roberts

Some months ago, a section of Philadelphia experienced severe riots for almost a week. Although the riots took place in a predominantly Negro neighborhood, they were reputed not to have been racial in nature and were generally publicly denounced by prominent Negro leaders.

These riots were characterized by large scale destruction and looting and during the time that the looting was in full scale operation, two full platoons of policemen were sent to the riot-stricken area. These policemen were deployed to the area in the interest of restoring peace and order, but, for some reason which has never been clarified, they did not act to protect private property.

Looting

Hundreds of stores were looted in full view of the police, some of them suffering total loss of merchandise while the policemen stood by and watched.

One Philadelphia newspaper printed a picture showing a policeman actually helping a woman looter, her arms loaded with stolen merchandise, through the shattered front window of a store. She was not arrested and walked away with her loot.

This, besides being a public outrage, was the most reprehensible piece of police work that I have ever heard of and did little, I am sure, to install respect and trust in the nation's youth for policemen and the law.

Elsewhere

At the same time the riots were taking place in Philadelphia, I had the opportunity to observe the proceedings of a magistrates' court in the resort town of Margate, New Jersey.

One case particularly interested me for reasons that will become obvious.

The facts of the case in question were as follows:

Four youths, who had rented a house for the summer, planned a private party. They invited a total of fourteen guests and hired a local band to play at the function.

The day of the party, the four youths went to the neighbors on each side of and across the street from their house and informed them of the party. They asked their neighbors, that if the noise became too loud or if there were any other difficulties, to let them know and the problem would be corrected immediately. While the party was in progress, one of the youths again went to each of the neighbors and asked if they had any complaints. In each case, the reply was negative. These were obviously the acts of considerate and responsible young adults.

Police Raid

While the affair was in progress, a police car passing through the area made note of the party, called a patrol wagon, raided the party, and arrested all eighteen youths on the charge of frequenting a disorderly house.

In court, the youths pleaded not guilty to the charge and all of the foregoing facts were brought out. The arresting officers testified that the only thing disorderly about the party was a rather loud band.

The youths contended that since the police had testified that the only thing that they had heard was the band, and thus, the band, in fact, if anyone, was guilty of disturbing the peace, and since the band had not been arrested, the charges should be dismissed. This motion was denied.

It was subsequently brought out, for what it was worth — that two members of the band were off-duty Margate policemen. This was dismissed as irrelevant.

After hearing these facts, the magistrate carried out what most observers felt was a gross miscarriage of justice and fined all of the youths $100.00 apiece.

Justice?

I discuss the previous case in order to make a point of contrast. It is my contention that, while Philadelphia police stood idly by and watched wholesale looting, the Margate police and court had nothing more to do than pick on eighteen innocent partymakers.

Is there not something wrong with Justice in these two situations? In both cases, I think the result was a severe blow to the American idea and ideal of Justice and in neither case, I am sure, was the faith of America's youth in the law strengthened.

Parents' Weekend

By Matt Roche

In order to advance one must know where he's been, is now, and aiming towards.

Was Parents' Weekend a success? This is debatable. From the reactions of some surprised and shocked parents, it is sage to say no. Others answer a tepid yes.

Is the purpose of the weekend to strengthen the bond between the parents and the school? Is it to show off the education their offspring is receiving? Is it to demonstrate with pride past success and future hopes?

If some or all of these were the purpose of this year's weekend, then the result is a mild frustration and disappointment.

But all is not black and white. On the plus side are the game and the concert on Saturday. The game was well-attended and a usual Villanova success but the concert had a depressingly mediocre crowd for the acclaimed and talented Schola Cantorum.

Minus Side

On the minus side are the meeting with the Deans and the cancelled Parents' Mass.

Several mothers remarked, "I never met my son's Dean." Why can't Villanova take a hint from larger schools such as Harvard and smaller schools such as Smith and Mt. St. Mary's and initiate the cu stom of personal contact between the Dean and the Parents. There could be a Parents' tea, perhaps, where the Deans of the Colleges would speak and introduce the chairmen of the different departments beneath them. Afterwards there could be a receiving line for introductions to the parents. This may be tiring on the Deans' parts but the response to the school in valuable good will and parental pride is inestimable. That "peace of the great price," education should be personally represented and endorsed.

Spiritual Side

The spiritual side of the weekend—Villanova's hallmark—the Parents' Solemn High Mass was cancelled. Are we to assume that the parents no longer wish the continuance of this tradition? If so, then why was it scheduled? Instead Villanova bureacracy fumbled again by scheduling, then cancelling at the last minute.

An impressive weekend is no more. Perhaps we have been applying yesterday's standards to today's situation. If so, a new solution must be sought, — and found.

Let our panacea be electic aiming towards the Villanova of tomorrow — today.

What Is VAMP?

By Thomas McMahon

The VAMP, as any informed Villanovan knows, is not really a fierce blood-sucking monster, chained inside the animal room of Mendel Hall.

It is actually a tame but fiercely dedicated campus organization that sometimes lurks about the Confraternity of Christian Doctrine office in Corr Hall. The full name is "Villanova Aid to Mexico Project," but we call ourselves VAMP because it's rather cute. Some of the older VAMP members are liable to go out and howl at the moon for a while after a meeting, but this is not a compulsory exercise.

No Exception

In order to interest the students in VAMP we would like to tell them not so much what they can do for Mexico, but rather what Mexico can do for them. To give is supposed to be more blessed than to receive, and giving time and energy to Mexicans is no exception to this rule. The student who goes on a project can profit a great deal.

Financially he will get nothing out of it. It will cost him nothing to go, but there will certainly be no money left over to compensate him for his services. If a student needs the income from summer work he could not think of going.

Intellectually the rewards are large. One can pick up more Spanish than he would be able to learn from a summer school course, and learn more about Mexican culture than he is liable to get from a whole stack of books. The Sunday market can not be appreciated until one sees it, walks through it, smells it, and observes the old Indian woman who brings a dollar's worth of pulque into town to try to earn the weekly income.

Bullfighters

They won't get to see too many of the usual tourist attractions in Mexico. We didn't really miss them. As a matter of fact we had a definite feeling of superiority upon coming back to Mexico City and hearing the plump middle-aged tourists talking about how the Ballet "Folklorico" was simply out of this world, the bull fighters were cruel, Spanish was impossible, and the taxi drivers were crooks.

There was a strong temptation to ask one if she really thought she had seen Mexico without having been in a mountain village where the closest link with civilization is the beer truck that rumbles into town every day over non-existent roads. The temptation was resisted, however, and the tourist was allowed to continue bolstering the Mexican economy and collecting stories for the folks back home.

Most of the students on projects came to Mexico for something more than adventure, but the sense of it was often strong and delicious. One feels very far away from the world of classes, credits, and cramming when he is riding up a steep mountain-side and praying that the horse knows what it is doing.

My greatest thrill came when I accompanied a priest to a little rancho that was a two and a half hour horse ride from town. To see the padre trying to tell the Indians, who didn't speak much Spanish, that there is only one God was an unmatchable experience. It was a beautiful and impressive demonstration of the universality of the Catholic Church.

La Latrina

Of course a student who goes to Mexico must be ready to accept some discomfort and danger. If a person thinks that the limits of suffering are approached when he eats university food he should not bother going. Just how bad things will be cannot be foretold. Most of the time we ate decent but very plain food. A couple of times the matter boiled down to which was more polite: to get something down and vomit it back up or just refuse it. I resolved in favor of refusing once when I was served the skin from a cow's belly. One should also be prepared for a couple of experiences like: "Donde esta la latrina, Padre?" "Latrina, no hay."

In short there is some discomfort, but one doesn't miss the nice things of life as much as one might think. A friend of mine stayed home all summer and broke his foot playing basketball. He had more discomfort than I. There is also some danger, but the danger of going to Mexico is certainly not as great as the danger of going to Mississippi as this summer's scorecard showed.

Great White Savior

One reward that one should not count too much is the feeling of satisfaction that comes from helping people. The problems of poverty are vast and are not to be solved by starry-eyed students who can quote Aristotle but know nothing about harvesting the corn. Nor will one be able to show some poor peasant how to boil water and all of a sudden become the great white saviour. To be sure, the student does have some skills that are valuable; it is just as important that he expect an equal measure of frustration with his satisfaction.

Even if his help is negligible, it is important that a student at least see some of the poverty in the world. He should realize that the vast majority in the world has greater problems than getting a car for Friday night or passing Latin. If the problem of being ineffective still worries the student, he can think of the perhaps over-used but ever-beautiful quote, "It is better to light one candle than to curse the darkness."

Missionary Spirit

The most important reward has been saved for last. This is simply the fact that going to Mexico or anywhere to try to help those less fortunate is a good and Christian thing to do. Some temporal rewards will no doubt come; it is impossible to give to God without receiving more in return. These temporal rewards should be only incidental, however. It seems foolish to give up the comforts of America for anything less than a missionary spirit and a desire to serve Christ.

Chuck says he paid 300 bucks less for his Coronet than you did for that turtle of yours

You really know how to hurt a guy

"Chuck's a swinger," says she. "His Coronet is quick and clean, with a lean and hungry look. It's equipped with a 426 cubic inch mill that will mock your turtle at the strip or on the street. He's got four-on-the-floor, buckets, belts, carpets, console, spinners, and a padded dash. And he said that everything but the four-speed stick and the 426 was standard." Then she broke his back by asking, "Didn't you pay extra for some of that jazz?"

Don't let the truth hurt you. Better see the all-new, hot new Dodge Coronet before you buy a (cuckoo), a (cuckoo-cuckoo), or even a (cuckoo-cuckoo-cuckoo).

In Memory Of J. F .K.

By Mike Donaghue

Death is cruel and ironic, yet death is a poet; it tries to make up for what it has done. When the dark angel bore John Kennedy away, it seemed to simplify, clarify, and put into focus the man—what he did, and what he tried to do. In taking him away, death made us realize how much we needed him. It gave us the objectivity of eternity.

There is a theory, reaching into the heart and soul of man, that history is not the chronicle of the inertia of the mass, but that it is shaped by great ideas and great men.

Bronze, Eulogies

John Fitzgerald Kennedy was the kind of man that makes people believe in legends. Now that he is gone, he has taken on the trappings of legend; he has lost his humanity. It is unfortunate that his humanity will be lost under bronze and eulogies because he was a real and vibrant human being. Yet this is most natural because John Kennedy was truly "such stuff as dreams are made of." He was a youthful leader and warrior who delighted in the battles that he knew must be fought, and was sustained by the right of his cause.

The more one thinks, the more one is amazed that this man was president. He was too perfect. His existence seemed something out of a storybook. Coupled with this, is the realization that people do not always make the best choice. This makes one almost believe that God had a hand in his election. A belief in God was the basis of the late President's philosophy of life. But he did not believe that man should wait for God to make his choice. For nothing is given to the "waiters" or to those who shirk responsibility. Inaction is the greatest sin.

Ideal Leader

John Kennedy was ideally suited for leadership; youth, courage, resourcefulness—words that seem trite, with him took on meaning. He was an intellectual man with a passion for excellence and a longing to excel. He was a man with a deep love of his country and his past. But he realized that the past was made by men working toward an uncertain future.

He gave impetus to a new movement of history, a reassessment of what had gone before, and a rededication to what must be done. His sense of history made him view things as to their totality. He despised political expediency and looked at every action regarding its ultimate good or evil. He worked as hard for the people of a hundred years from now as for the people of today.

Brief Candle

In his heart burned a flame for good, a light too rarely seen and too soon extinguished. The tragedy for us the living, the world, is that we have lost him and his untapped wealth of ideas. We have lost the service that he so freely gave. The movement of history which he should have led will be lost without him. It will become obscure and it will not be the mass migration of thought, ideals, and action, but a brief, brilliant flash of light. Or will it?

HAPPY TURKEY TIME!

The Chieftain Remembered

By Steve Freind

"Let the word go forth, from this time and place, to friend and foe alike, that the torch has been passed to a new generation of Americans."

It has been almost a year since the voice that resounded these words was silenced forever. In the twelve months since that tragic November day in Dallas, John Fitzgeraald Kennedy has become a legend. Death has transformed the young chieftain into a myth, a star cast into the galaxy whose shining rays are the source of inspiration and consolation for those he left behind.

He was a rare man. His death caused sincere grief in a world that had almost forgotten how to cry. Seldom has a leader captured the respect, the love, even the adoration that was accorded to him. He was the picture of the man in motion, summoning a nation into motion. He had his faults like everyone else. Sometimes he was quick tempered, sometimes overbearing, but you didn't really seem to mind.

Star Rises

The Kennedy star began to rise in 1946 when a frail youth had the gall to oppose the seasoned Boston political pros of Boston for a seat in Congress. Nobody gave him much of a chance, but when the votes were counted, the House had a Harvard Irishman named Kennedy and the march to Pennsylvania Avenue had begun.

They still talk about the campaign of 1960, the miracle that vaulted a junior senator past the Vice-President of the United States into the White House. From the start, it looked like a hopeless battle. The country was not ready for a Catholic president and even if they were, the young Kennedy team would be destroyed in a national fight. It took courage to go into West Virginia and meet the religious issue head on, but courage was something that Kennedy never lacked. People suddenly forgot their prejudice as the Pied Piper from Boston swept the nation.

He promised to get the nation moving again, and he kept his word. When you heard him speak in that quick, stacato style, you were proud to be an American. His voice sounded the drumbeat of the New Frontier, as the youthful Administration began to put into motion a nation that had been growing stagnant.

He looked bad at the Bay of Pigs, but he looked great when he took the entire blame. When he backed down Khruschev during the missile crisis, the world realized that America had a leader. Hemingway defined courage as grace under pressure. It was handmade for Kennedy.

There were many who advised him to withdraw the troops from Berlin, that America could not withstand a Communist onslaught in Germany his reply was classic. "I have been told that Berlin is militarily untenable," he said. "So was Bastogne and so, in fact was Stalingrad. Any dangerous spot is tenable if men, brave men, will make it so."

Then came that day when all the world seemed to fall apart. A stunned world paid homage to the fallen chieftain, too numb to acutely feel the irreparable loss. Only now are many beginning to realize just how much was lost. The nation still has a leader, but it has lost its spark. its motion, yes its vigor. Shakespeare said, "There is a tide in the affairs of men, which taken at the flood leads on to fortune." John Kennedy was taken from the world at the peak of his tide. We are the losers.

An' All That Jazz

Broad Street Subway rocked . . . If by any minute chance last Sunday evening, the eighth, you were riding the Broad Street between 6 and 9 p.m. and you passed between Locust and Spruce Streets you were thrown from your seat by a tremendous rumble, tear up that irate letter to the PTC, because it's Joe Dukes who you want to blame. Who's Joe Dukes? Well, he happens to be the greatest drummer since Krupa to hit the jazz scene, and that night Joe ignited the S.R.O. audience at the Academy of Music past their boiling points. In fact, stage hands were forced to wait until 10 minutes after his performance to remove his drums from the stage, rather than risk third degree burns. Playing with Organist Brother Jack McDuffs group, he reached his zenith with the favorite "Rock Candy"—a double encore, The balance of the festival was solid. Sonny Stitt when finally warmed up blasted through with superb tonality and Maynard Ferguson helped whip the frenzy with his contribution of "One O'Clock Jump," a standard. Thus the Philadelphia Jazz Festival was a thriving success.

The other night a picture appeared in the local papers of the defeated aspirant, Mr. Goldwater, swimming somewhere in Jamaica. Shown only in the photo was his head. Rumors afterwards state that Mr. Goldwater sunk. Conclusion: Even saltwater won't support Goldwater.

While searching for an errant copy of Downbeat last week in a magaine - emporium, we were shocked (horrified seems more precise) by the avalanche of periodicals bearing titles of anguish: Cracked, Sick, Mad, Freak, Weird, Withdrawal, Psycho, & Pain, staring out at us from their haunts upon the shelf. Being reared in the old Indian school of "where there's smoke there's fire," we mulled over the possibility of whether this might be an attempt by some underground group to confuse the American populace's mental states. Thus we attempted to seek out the publishers of these magazines and question their motives. However our attempts were frustrated as we were informed, in each instance, that the publisher "was tied up." So, stymied by this apparent avoidance by these radicals, we have resorted to endorsing future publication of magazines we think favorable to the great American populace. Placid, Popular Normal, Saturday Evening Hoe-Down, Look and See, and Playboy Visits Jack & Jill.

Fr. Appicci Announces Need For Students Reading Tutors

Rev. Richard D. Appicci, OSA, dean of student activities, announced that tutors are desperately needed to assist young children in remedial reading. One seminar will be held to describe the work to be done with the children.

The volunteer students will be asked to work on late afternoons or early Saturday mornings. Centers for instruction will be set up in different areas and the classes will begin in several weeks.

Fr. Appicci urges as many students as possible to volunteer. Those students interested in the program may sign up in the student council office, second floor Dougherty Hall. The student is not bound in any way and may withdraw from the program at any time.

Peace Corps Staff On Villanova Campus To Seek Volunteers

Memeber's of the Peace Corps' staff will man an information booth in the West corridor of Dougherty Hall from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. on Thursday, November 19.

Besides answering any questions the students might have, the representatives will have a variety of literature on specific types of projects. A non-competitive hour-long test was administered at 2, 4:30 and 7 p.m. in the Faculty Dining Room beginning Wednesday, November 18. There is no passing or failing score, and a knowledge of a foreign language is not required. Results are used by the Peace Corps primarily for guidance in job placement of the Volunteers.

The Peace Corps is still receiving thousands of additional volunteers to serve in a great variety of projects in the fields of teaching, agriculture, health, public works and community development. Moreover, most of the 3,000 volunteers returning home this year have to be replaced.

"There are still many misconceptions concerning the Peace Corps which we hope to correct," said Mal Young, the team leader. "One who is an applicant must have a highly developed skill. Actually, liberal arts graduates with the right personality characteristics and emotional maturity can successfully fill many assignments after completing our training programs."

Volunteers serve for two years, including two to three months of training. They receive a modest but adequate living allowance while overseas.

Beta Gamma Debate Society Holds First Novice Tourney

The Beta Gamma debating Society held its first annual Novice Tournament on Sunday, November 8. The purpose of the tournament was to make the new members eligible for active membership in Beta Gamma. All those who did debate are now official members of the organization and will be debating in inter-collegiate tournaments before Christmas.

The outstanding teams of the November 8 tournament were: first place, Georgetown (Skip LaFleur and Tim O'Neill); second place, Kentucky (Gerald Burke and Dan Cirucci); and third place, Wayne State (Jim Forte and Veronica Dankel). The outstanding debaters in order of their achievement were: Tim O'Neill, Top Affirmative; Skip LaFleur; Dan Cirucci, Top Negative; Frank Carter; Veronica Dankel; Gerald Burke; Jim Forte; Ron Villano; Jack Hilferty; and Rick Nichols. Also debating in the tournament were Nick Knox, Larry Miller, Bernie O'Brien, Joe Sumilas, Jack Seaborn, and Allen Claiborne.

The two top teams of the tournament will debate on Nov. 19, at 7 p.m. in the Center Lounge of Dougherty Hall. Members of the student body are invited to attend. The debate will be broadcast live over WWVU. The top debaters, O'Neill (Affirmative) and Cirucci (Negative), will represent Villanova in the Villanova Tournament on December 11 and 12.

Members of Beta Gamma will travel to inter-collegiate tournaments at Duquesne University (Pittsburgh) on November 20 and 21, and to Pace College (N.Y.C.), Harpur College (Binghampton, N.Y.), and Elizabethtown College (Elizabethtown, Pa.) later in the year.

Twelfth Career Conference Offers Job Advice To Students

The Twelfth Annual Career Conference will be held in the Field House on Thursday, December 3, at 9:45 a.m. Three speakers will discuss the strategy of job hunting in general terms, with particular emphasis on the job interview.

All seniors will be excused from classes from 8:30 a.m. until 2:20 p.m. on that day.

In the past, this Conference has proved most helpful to the seniors, for, in addition to the panel speakers, approximately 50 other representatives will be present to answer questions. A question and answer period will follow panel talks, and this is the ideal time to gain information concerning selective service, salary scales, and other topics of most interest to seniors. Student questions will be written on cards during the intermission and handed to the Chairman.

Student Congress Chooses Abate Outstanding Catholic College Youth

he Elections Committee regarding the selection of Catholic Youth of the year, after nominees had been taken. The first motion to be considered was that the SGA affiliate for a period of one year with the American Student Governments of the United States.

Motion Passes

Tom Furst, SGA president, saw his motion pass easily since the trial period and the good reputation of the ASGUSA convinced the Congress of its efficacy. By this time, the choice of nominees had narrowed down to four and debate continued. The four were Ernie Abate, Al Atkinson, Tom Furst, and Charlie Zaccaria.

In the next motion, legislators Frank Eck and Ward Williams formally requested the Administartion to have the telephone company repair and reinstall the defective and missing telephones on campus.

Reasons put forth by Eck were the necessity of a phone for college students and the continued operation of the existing phones without destruction. This motion was unanimously passed.

After a tie was recorded between Abate and Atkinson in the Catholic Youth contest, the members voted again and Abate was elected National Catholic Youth of the Year. He will now represent Villanova University at the National Catholic Youth Council.

Girl Cheerleaders

Then the controversy began as the cheerleaders' motion was debated on the floor. Brian Banmiller, Steve Friend, and Miller moved that in the SGA's opinion, female members of the Villanova student body should be permitted to try out for the cheerleading squad and be accepted or rejected on the basis of their ability as cheerleaders.

Friend, SGA secretary explained why the motion should be passed: "For those who wish to uphold tradition, remember one fact: we are a coed school. Ever since the Nuns were allowed to attend night school, we have been listed as a coeducational institution."

Leading the opposition was Alumni Representative Charlie Zaccaria. His main point was that girls did not participate in alumni ativities therefore, they should not be permitted to participate in all other university activities.

Amendments Fail

Two admendments were proposed during the debate on the motion; they were defeated by a technicnicality of parliamentary procedure called "objection to the consideration of the question." The question refers to the motion. By the first admendment, proposed by Bob Beattie, SGA constituents would select cheerleaders on re-commendations made by the Spirit Committee.

The other admendment, advanced by Leo Carrol, considered trying out girl cheerleaders for a trial period of one year. This was defeated when a two-thirds majority objected to its consideration.

Mature Conduct

After affirmative debate by Banmiller, Miller, and several others, Zaccaria and Moore countered with the traditional aspect of the motion. Finally, John Smock asked for mature conduct on the SGA's part to prevent the polemics which arose last year, and he moved the question.

A roll call vote passed the motion by 26½ to 14½ and paved the way for girl cheerleaders.

Miller and Freind combined to produce the motion which reads. Be it moved that the SGA request the Administration to adopt a policy of non-compulsory class attendance for junior and seniors.

This motion, although unanimously passed, will be sent to the Administration, viz., the Rev. Joseph A. Flaherty, OSA, vice-president for academic affairs for possible implementation. Miller stated that a minimum cumulative average may be necessary for it finals acceptance The Student-Faculty Committee will vote on this and other and other motions at their next meeting.

Meal Tickets

As for the final motion of the night, the duo of Williams and Eck proposed that the SGA establish a committee in order to investigate the possibility of replacing the present cafeteria meal system with the installation of a meal ticket system.

Williams said "meal tickets have been a success at many colleges across the country." By this system a student would buy a certain number of tickets before the school year began, with the prepogative of not using his ticket. Therefore, the quality of the food would have to improve, or no one would buy any more tickets.

This motion was also unanimously passed, making a clean legislative sweep for the makers of the bills.

A motion to have the Blue Key Society seated at Congress with a half vote was withdrawn by John Smock, Blue Key president, before the meeting adjourned. He declared that he would state his reasons for withdrawing the motion at next Congress session.

Charity Weekend

schedule the dance.

Because of the delay, plans are still up in the air, but it is known that the dance will be held on Friday, Dec. 4, in the Field House. As always it will kick off Charity Weekend, the annual Junior Class effort to show the orphans from St. John's Home in Southwest Philadelphia a good Pre-Christmas time.

The Villanovans Dance Band was immediately contracted for Tuesday. Tickets, priced at $3.00 a couple, are on sale in the Pie Shoppe starting late Wednesday. The dance will run from 8 to 12 midnight.

While dance plans are being quickly made other intentions were announced by Banmiller. The regular Saturday Orphan's Outing will again travel to 69th Street Shopping Center in Upper Darby on December 5. Upon arrival in buses that hopefully will be donated by an area school, the "Johnnies" and their escorts will go shopping at a yet to be determined department store.

The Saturday trip will cost Villanovans $3 and it is hoped that as many as possible will bring a date. Each couple will be with one orphan throughout the day. Following the shopping trip there will be lunch at Kostick's Restaurant, on 69th Street.

Also on the Saturday agenda is a kiddie show at the 69th Street Theatre, one half block west of the Terminal. This will be followed by the bus ride back to the Orphanage. Students may then return to Villanova in the busses.

Although busses will be available, as many as possible are urged to drive by Outing Committee Chairman Steve Freind. "This will make more room available on the bus, so that we may accomodate extra 'Johnnies'," said Freind.

While not an official part of the weekend, one of the best Basketball double-headers of the weekend can be used to round out Saturday. The Palestra Twin B'll features Villanova-Xavier; St. Joseph's-Davidson.

On Tuesday afternoon December 8, members of the Weekend Committee will travel to the home again for the Christmas Party during which a still unnamed Santa Claus will distribute gifts to the young charges.

Aside from revenue realized from the scheduled event, a "Missing Link" Contest is again planned. To begin on November 30 in the Pie Shoppe, the contest will give Villanovans a chance to get even with their less friendly friends by nominating them as Villanova's Missing Link.

A big tally sheet will be erected and those with one thousand or more votes will be listed and running totals shown.

Unlike other contests, where it is frowned upon, the voting here will be influenced by payola. Votes are one cent.

Andre Gregory Will Address Villanova Literary Society

Andre Gregory, artistic director of Philadelphia's new Theatre of the Living Arts, will address the Villanova Literary Society on Thursday, November 19 at 10:30 a.m. in 209 Barkley Hall. Gregory wil speak about the lack of good theatre in Philadelphia, repertory theatre, and the quality of the contemporary theatre in general.

Director Gregory studied acting with Lee Strasberg for three years, after graduating from Harvard in 1952. He was stage manager at the Phoenix Theatre and the New York City Center.

Turing to producing, Gregory did John M. Synge's Deirdre of the Sorrows, at the Gate Theatre in New York during the 1959 season. He also produced Jean Genet's The Blacks, which had the longest run of a serious play in the history of Off-Broadway.

As co-founder of the Writer's Stage Company in New York, he produced The Love Nest by Doric Washburn, acted in Three by Charles Mee, and directed P.S. 193 by Daird Rayfiel. Also, he helped to organize the Seattle Repertory Theatre in the Fall of 1963.

Gregory has also directed at the San Francisco Actors' Workshop and has worked at Bertolt Brecht's theatre, the Berliner Ensemble, where he observed production and rehearsal techniques for many months. A director at New York's Actors' Studio, he has been a member since its formation.

The Theatre of the Living Arts was formed by civic and cultural leaders in the area to combat the decline in the quality and quantity of Broadway productions. The Theatre, which has a 500-seating capacity, will open January 6 with a play by Brecht.

Student subscription are available for the season, which will run until June and has five plays slated. Gregory will discuss further aspects of the Theatre during his lecture.

FORD MOTOR COMPANY'S EXPERIMENTAL GAS TURBINE SUPERHIGHWAY TRUCK ANTICIPATES THE NATIONAL HIGHWAY NETWORK OF THE 1970's.

A new era in trucking is almost here. When the 41,000-mile national highway network is completed it will be possible for the first time to schedule coast to coast, big payload hauling. Ford Motor Company's answer to the challenge is this experimental tractor-trailer combination. A tandem axle drive tractor, powered by a 600 hp gas turbine engine permits a cruising speed of 70 miles per hour, a non-stop range of 600 miles. Designed for long-distance, non-stop operation, the two-man cab includes sleeping facilities, fold-away table, lavatory, toilet, oven, refrigerator and TV for the co-driver—with over 6'3" of headroom. Because of its cruising speed, the truck will be compatible with the normal passenger car flowrate of traffic. Other unique features are its odorless exhaust and extremely quiet operation.

Anticipating the opportunities and needs of the future is standard practice at Ford Motor Company. That's why it's such an exciting place to work. Look to Ford Motor Company for a career with growth potential and satisfaction—from pure science to manufacturing . . . marketing to labor relations.

De-Krushchevization

By Dr. Bohdan Procko
Department of History

Editor's Note — This Article was written on October 21, 1964.

The sudden announcement of Friday, October 16, that Nikita Krushchev was relieved of his posts as First Secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union and as Premier of the Government, ushered in what might be considered the fourth phase in the history of the Soviet Union. Thus the Khrushchev era became part of history alongside the eras of Lenin and Stalin.

Based on the experience of the past, a reasonable conjecture is that the new phase in Soviet history will begin like the previous three—with a secret struggle for power within the inner circle of the Party hierarchy, characterized by a public acclamation of the ideal of "collective leadership" as opposed to the "cult of personality" and eventually settle down into the more normal one-man rule, which has actually characterized the Soviet system since its inception.

There is no serious evidence that the Soviet system is now ready for a peaceful and parliamentary transfer of power from one man, or from one group, to another. The sketchy reports of the events taking place in the Kremlin during the past weeks tend to indicate that the term "de-Khrushchevization" may eventually be added to our vocabulary. Obviously, the denunciation of Khrushchev's "cult of personality" cannot be as blatant as Khrushchev's own denunciation of Stalin as the originator of personal cultism.

Nevertheless, the new collective leadership will undoubtedly be forced to attack Khrushchev in order to explain (to its own population as well as to the Communist bloc) the sudden and unexpected overthrow of the relatively popular man who relaxed discipline at home and promised "peaceful co-existence" abroad. The transition from Khrushchev's leadership to the new "collective leadership," headed by First Secretary, Leonid Brezhnev and Premier Alekxei Kosygin, was not a smooth parliamentary procedure but a coup.

The fact that Brezhnev was considered a loyal follower of Khrushchev does not necessarily lessen the chances of an eventual policy of "de-Khrushchevization." Although it is true that only six months ago Brezhnev eulogized Khrushchev on his 70th birthday, it is equally true that Khrushchev also eulogized his benefactor, Joseph Stalin, on the occasion of the latter's 70th birthday in 1949.

It was during the hegemony of Nikita Khrushchev, Stalin's protege, that the policy of "de-Stalinization" was introduced. It is a matter of conjecture whether Leonid Brezhnev, Khrushchev's protege, will become the chief exponent of a policy of "de-Khrushchevization."

John Birch Society

By Steve Morrison

Ten days ago, in the Philadelphia Daily News, there appeared an article which made a considerable fuss over the fact that certain Philadelphia policemem were members of the John Birch Society.

The article begins:

"The Philadelphia Police Department seems to have as many internal problems as the Republican Party."

One of the so-called "problems" was that: "It was disclosed that certain policemen were members of the John Birch Society, a collection of right-wing extremists."

But, as the article continues, John Harrington, president of the Fraternal Order of Police, made an excellent point about the Society.

Nothing Wrong

Mr. Harrington said: "As far as the F.O.P. is concerned, there was nothing demonstrated to be wrong with the organization."

The article continues:

"The F.O.P. president said he went to the F.B.I. recently and asked them if there was anything wrong with the Birch Society and was told 'not as far as we know'."

Harrington said that: "Congressional subcommittees have investigated it and have not outlawed it . . . so I don't know what they (police officials) are trying to do . . . or can do about it."

Bad Image

The fact that the police officials of Philadelphia don't care for the idea of the "Birchers" on the force is just another example of how Americans automatically react to the John Birch Society, wheather they know what the organization stands for or not.

One complaint that is always made about the Society is that its leader, Robert Welch has made several irresponsible statements about several Americans, some of whom are in high office. Although many of these statements were misquoted, others that he made were certainly unfounded. This has been in part responsible for the dark shadow that has fallen over the organization. This is indeed unfortunate, that an organization dedicated to an anti-communist cause, should lose face because of some of the statements of Robert Welch. Just as not all of the members of the Teamsters Union are in agreement with James Hoffa, not all of the members of the John Birch Society agree with Robert Welch. (Welch has been asked to resign, but as of yet he refuses.)

War Against the Right

All of the bad publicity can not be blamed on Robert Welch however, as the undeclared war the press of America has chosen to wage on the "right-wing" has played no small role in this respect.

In spite of the trend of the press to discredit John Birch Society members, Congressional committees have conspicuously left the name of the organization even to consider the cry of those in desperate need, much less to do something about it! It is my hope that this attitude does not bring the end of American ideals. I pray to God for this.

harshness on this instrument, with more excellent comping by pianist Parlan. And, the comedy on these two tunes ("Swan Lake" and "My Heart . . .") is more subtle and less ridiculous . . . but it is there in good taste.

"Tears Sent By You" is the most moving piece on the album, featuring Kirk on either manzello or stritch. The longest selection, it has a chance to build a deep, sensitive mood; it is one of Kirk's most impressive performances to date. The album finishes with two more of Kirk's compositions, "Where Does the Blame Lie?" and "Blues for C & T", both hard swingers with Kirk on tenor. Although the liner notes refer only to the last tune, the sentence could be applied to both these two selections: "It is a romping blues vehicle and Roland turns on the steam." "Blues for C & T" finishes with Kirk creating a bagpipe effect, very well done—and humorous.

This album is probably the widest-ranged album I have ever heard. Beginning with "Swan Lake" and continuing throughout the second side, there is some of the best new music in Jazz . . . but on the first side, some of the poorest gimmicks and excuses for humor and music that anyone would care to hear . . . and few will.

Roland Kirk

By Ed Bride

"The heart that cannot laugh cannot sing," says the opening sentence of the liner notes to Roland Kirk's new album, Gifts and Messages.

This is probably the most accurate sentence ever written on the back of an album cover, for the whole album is almost entirely devoted to comedy and gimmicks.

Time was, when the multi-talented Kirk used his six or seven different instruments, including the three he plays simultaneously, to create different moods and deep effects. Here, he creates but two effects: revulsion and comedy.

He has finally gone off the deep end, joining the ranks of John Coltrane and Ornette Coleman, and had it not been for several better recordings in the past, reviewers would probably pass up this offering as an unsuccessful bid to attain attention. However, it is this writer's guess that many reviewers will hail Gifts and Messages as a "shot in the arm" for Jazz.

We are not taking anything away from Kirk, his writing, or his talent. There are some cuts where he displays sensitivity and rhythm . . . his flute solo on "Petite Fleur" is very moving; his arrangement and playing on "The Things I Love" are different, entertaining, and worthwhile,, although they sometimes tend towards the extreme, a truly unforgivable mistake in this modern day.

Kirk gets the comedy routine going on the third cut of the album, "Hip Chops." His vocal introduction (spoken) says something to the effect that "We're not talking about Chop Suey, or Lamb Chops, but Hip Chops (the "in" term for lips), with me on flute, manzello, stritch, and tenor."

His closing line of "Who has the hippest chops in the world?" is an unconvincing compliment to himself even though he can sustain a note on tenor while blowing a whistle at the same time (guess we're supposed to laugh).

He continues his "comedy" with a dramtic opening to the title tune, followed by an evil, spook-type laugh, and then a whining excursion via tenor and manzello, played simultaneously. As soon as he gets in the "groove," however, he climbs out of it by turning his tenor into an air-raid siren, more grunts, groans, and finally some good, solid blowing on tenor.

By this time, however, the average, even the talented listener, is fairly disgusted with his antics. From the standpoint of comedy, a necessary element for any Jazz performer, he is good, but Kirk uses entirely too much, so that it overshadows his already-proven talents.

"Vertigo Ro," another Kirk composition, opens with what sounds like oboe and tenor (simultaneously), but the useless introduction soon gives way to a swinging, inventive flute solo. The flute, with his often vocal accompaniment, is fast becoming Roland Kirk's strongest instrument, and it should become his only frequently-used one.

Kirk's arrangement of "Swan Lake" (march) is interesting and solid, with good support from pianist Horace Parlan and more discretion by Kirk in his use of instruments and type of playing. Here, he seems to be with the group instead of above it. No phoney claim of "Hip Chops," just good, solid, blowing.

"With My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice," Kirk manages to take away some of the characteristically-offensive sound that the manzello usually has when used by itself. It is a fast, wandering Are Human Rights More Important . . . Or Are Property Rights?

By Brendan Brett

"It is not the right of property which is protected, but the right to property. Property, per se, has no rights but the individual — the man — has three great rights, equally sacred from arbitrary interference: the right to his life, the right to his liberty, the right to his property . . . The three rights are so bound together as to be essentially one right. To give a man his life but deny him his liberty, is to take from him all that makes his life worth living. To give him his liberty but take from him the property which is the fruit and badge of his liberty, is to still leave him a slave."

U.S. Supreme Court Justice
George Sutherland

Tricky Phrases

Tricky phrases with favorable meanings and emotional appeal are being used today to imply a distinction between property rights and human rights.

By implication, there are two sets of rights — one belonging to human beings and the other to property. Since human beings are more important, it is natural for the unwary to react in favor of human rights.

Actually, there is no such distinction between property rights and human rights. The term property has no significance except as it applies to something owned by someone. Property itself has neither rights nor value, save only as human interests are involved. There are no rights but human rights, and what are spoken of as property rights are only the human rights of individuals to property.

Expressed more accurately, the issue is not one of property rights, but of the human rights of one person in the community versus the human rights of another.

The Property Rights

What are the property rights thus disparaged by being set apart from human rights? They are among the most ancient and basic of human rights, and among the most essential to freedom and progress. They are the privileges of private ownership which give meaning to the right to the product of one's labor-privileges which men have always regarded instinctively as belonging to them almost as intimately and inseparably as their own bodies. Unless people can feel secure in their ability to retain the fruits of their labor, there is little incentive to save and to expand the fund of capital — the tools and equipment for production and for better living.

The Bill of Rights in the United States Constitution recognizes no distinction between property rights and other human rights. The man against unreasonable search and seizure covers "persons, houses, papers, and effects," without discrimination. No person may, without due process of law, be deprived of "life, liberty, or property"; all are equally inviolable. The right of trial by jury is assured in criminal and civil cases alike. Excessive bail, excessive fines, and cruel and unusual punishment are grouped in a single prohibition. The Founding Fathers realized what some present-day politicians seem to have forgotten: A man without property rights — without the right to the product of his own labor—is not a free man.

Two Characteristics

These constitutional rights all have two characteristics in common. First, they apply to all persons. Second, they are, without exception, guarantees of freedom or immunity from governmental interference. They are not assertions of claims against others, individually or collectively. They merely say, in effect, that there are certain human liberties, including some pertaining to property, which are essential to free men and upon which the state shall not infringe.

Now what about the so-called human rights that are represented as superior to property rights? What about the "right" to a job, the "right" to a standard of living, the "right" to a minimum wage or a maximum work week, the "right" to a "fair" price, the "right" to bargain collectively, the "right" to security against the adversities and hazards of life, such as old age and disability?

The framers of the Constitution would have been astonished to hear these things spoken of as rights. They are not immunities from governmental compulsion; on the contrary, they are demands for new forms of governmental compulsion. They are not claims to the product of one's own labor; they are, in some if not in most cases, claims to the products of other people's labor.

Special Privileges

These "human rights" are indeed different from property rights, for they rest on a denial of the basic concept of property rights. They are not freedoms or immunities assured to all persons alike. They are special privliges conferred upon some persons at the expense of others. The real distinction is not between property rights and human rights, but between equality of protection from governmental compulsion on one hand and demands for the exercise of compulsion for the benefit of favored groups on the other.

Susan Slade's Play Stars Julie Harris In Farcical Role

Susan Slade's new comedy, Ready When You Are, C.B.! opened last Thursday night at the Walnut St. Theatre amid hollows of laughter and by it seems to be the best comedy to hit Philadelphia this season.

Julie Harris in the lead role does an excellent task of utilizing every bit of the farcical situations that the script gives her. She definitely shows her great versatility as an actress by going from such roles as Shakespeares' Ophelia in Hamlet and Juliet in Romeo and Juliet into a completely farcical role.

'Cat-fish Hope For Big Splash

By Joe Maffongelli

The aquatic arena in the VU Field House is a very busy place for busy spirits. Being one of the best intramural directors in the area, Ed Geisez has also guided the fortunes of the Wildcat swimming team for the past thirteen years.

A rather quiet and pleasant type. Geisz is very optimistic about the upcoming season. Regarding this season he commented, "We have one of the toughest schedules in the United States. One which includes the likes of Army, Navy, Princeton, and Yale; all of who are perennial powers." Last year the 'Cat-fish were sucessful with Navy and Princeton, but dropped a tough one to Army's cadets. Maryland was not part of last season schedule.

Ed Geisz feels he has the horses, sea horses that is, to handle any and all of the opponents. He pointed out the presence of two All-Americans in Rick Girdler, a senior and the team captain; and Ray Donnelly, a capable junior. In Bill Livingood Ed feels that he has one of the best back strokers in the east. Pat Sullivan should be a big help in this event. He further pointed out that Kenny Herr and Tim Turney are strong breast strokers.

Butter Flying High

To go along with Donnelly in the butterfly event, Ed is looking to Tom Brennan, who suffered a disappointing season last year, "he is coming along tremendously," said Géisz.

Geisz is very happy about his relay situation. "We have two fine relays which should place well in both the national and the eastern championships," he commented. He went on to say that Chirs Fisher and Doug Rebak may reach All-America status through these relays.

At the mention of his divers, Geisz stated, "We have the best divers we've had in many years in Bob Biese and Bill Bohrmann." He also expressed praise for the work of Dick Feron. Dick is a fifth year student who is ineligible, but has been helping with the coaching chores in this department.

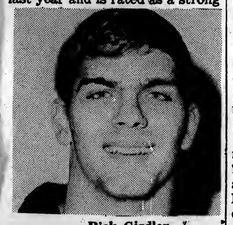
Desire

Overall Geisz had these remarks concering his squad: "There's a great deal of desire on the part of the boys to improve on last year's 8-2 record: I think we are going to have a real fine season."

Captain, Rick Girdler, also added a few points. He stated, "We definitely have the personnel, the kids just have to develop the desire to excel. The key element this season will be for the team to develop the conviction that they can perform well all the time. This is vital because most of the boys will be going in three races per meet, and it will show up in the second and third of these events."

Managing Things

Not to leave anyone out, Mr. Geisz was very pleased with his managers. "Ray Curran and Ray Davidson have done a fine job, and the team could not get along without them," was his comment.



Geisz has extended a personnal request for student support of their team. "They deserve it after giving up their Saturdays and vacations," he stated. All loyal Villanovans should realize that this team, which finished eighth in the country, does deserve their strongest support. This team is another golden spike in the VU wheel which is rolling uphill to the plateau of national supremacy in the collegiate sports world.

Mermen Ready For Successful Year Despite Loss Of Two All-Americans

By Bob McIntyre

A complete rebuilding of Villanova's Varsity Swimming team, due to the loss of All-Americans Dick McDonough and Jack Geoghegan through graduation, has been successfully completed because of the hard work of this years squad. This has given Coach Ed Geisz and Asst. Coach John Lumsden a big, bright outlook for the 1964-65 season.

Heading up this years mermen, will be Captain and All-American Rick Girdler. Rick is a 21 year old 6'3", 192 lb. senior from Mountain Lakes, N.J. He was a member of Villanova's famous 400 yard freestyle relay team of last year and is rated as a strong triple threat this year. He rates in any freestyles event, both relays and is an excellent 200 yard individual medley prospect.

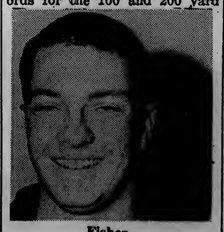
Ray Donnelly, a 20 year old 3'0", 185 lb. junior from Waterbury, Conn. is another All-American, who is one of the top 50 yard freestyle swimmer in the nation. In the NCAA Championships 6th place had to be decided by a swim off of 12 men. Donnelly was one of them.

He is rated fifth or better in the East in the 50 yard freestyle. He will be a member of the 400 yard freestyle relay team which will go for the NCAA Championship.

Chris Fisher, a 20 year old 5'11", 160 lb. senior, from North

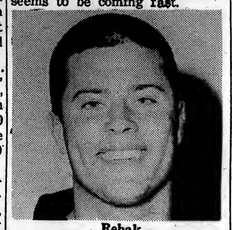


Ray Donnelly

Wales, Pa. will also be a member of the 400 yard relay team. He is a vetern swimmer from LaSalle High and is an excellant bet for the 200 yard individual medley honors.

Doug Rebak, a 20 year 6'1", 185 lb. senior, from Roosevelt, Long Island, N.Y., specializes in sprint freestyle, especially the 50 yard and 100 yard freestyle. He is the fourth member of the 400 yard freestyle relay team.

Individually these four mermen could all make All-American in their individual events, along with the 400 yard relay. Donnelly, the most unpredicable of the four could beat anyone at any time. Joe Parell, an upcoming soph, will be pressing to make the relay team.



"Wild Bill" Livingood, holds both the Frosh and Varsity records for the 100 and 200 yard backstroke along with being voted by his team, the most improved swimmer. He has already qualifed for the 100 yard individual medley relay at the Eastern Relay Ass. Championships at Yale.

Roger Gutherie, a 21 year old, 5'8", 180 lb. senior, from Walthan, Mass. was the shadow behind Dick McDonough in the butterfly last year. This year he is number one and should come up to his coaches expectations of being a top notch butterfly swimmer. He will be chased by Eugene Brennan, a junior, who seems to be coming fast.

Rebak

Amony the divers Bob Biese, a junior, from Cedar Grove, N.J., looks best, being rated among the top 10 in the East. He is followed by Bill Bohrmann, who did his diving at Iono Prep, New Rochelle, N.Y. and Jay Hollenbach, from Villanova, Pa. who backs them up.

Ken Herr, a junior, also from Iono Prep, was the best breaststroker on the team last year and intends to repeat but will be hard pressed from three Sophomores Pete Ancona, Phil Disjardins and Tim Turvey.

Jim Rowley will be pushing up there in the 500 yard freestyle and Pat Sullivan will be pushing Livingood for backstroke honors. Soph Greg Doyle from Erie, Pa., should also be strong in this event.

Intramural Football Winds Up, Cage Curtain About To Rise

By Frank Miller

The intramural grid season reached its climax yesterday at 4:00 p.m. when the 1964 championship was played on Austin Field.

Monday the field of grid finalists was narrowed to two as the "Hasbeens" took on the "Misfits" while the "Giants tackeld the "Chuggers." These four teams were all undefeated before Monday. The winners of thse two games clashed late yesterday for the championship laurels. Everybody was invited to witness this final game of the 1964 intramural football season.

Last year the Bulldogs upended the Eliminators for title that the two teams vied for yesterday.

Basketball Season To Open

If things run smoothly in the intramurals department, this year's cage season will open tomorrow Nov. 20. The increased enrollment has produced a record number of participants which forced the scheduling of nine leagues. Eight of these loops will play in Alumni Gym while one does battle in the Field House.

Last season there were 860 players on 86 teams. These teams played a combined total of 688 games. The winner of last year's laurels was the "Gunners," while the "Rejects" wound up as runnersup.

Meeting Scheduled

There was a pre-season meeting which was compulsory for all cage captain yesterday, Nov. 18. This conference was held at 7:15 in Room 210 of Vasey Hall. All captains were required to attend this meeting at which this year's ruled were discussed. Also all intramurals representatives attended this meeting.

Wildcat Ruggers Near Season Finale With High Hopes For Spring Campaign

By Jim Proud

Now that the Rugby season for this year is drawing to a close the squad is trying to offset the results of a slow start. In their last outing they won an unsuspected victory over the Washington Rugby Club.

Aided by the running and kicking of Larry Rosintoski the Villanova club won their third to last game by the score of 11-3. Along with Rosintoski's five points Rich Crawford and Jim Muskesher each added three points.

Crawford ran 25 yards for his tally, taking advantage of good blocking and his fine speed. Muskesher also ran for his goal scampering 20 yards behind his fellow halfback.

The game which was played at Haynes Point was the team's best win of the year. The Washington team was the pregame favorite because of their added experience and a home town crowd.

Thus far in the season the team is having its troubles. Due to a lack of experience the team lost most of its early contests but in recent games they have shown signs of a well practiced team.

The team captain Dick Gove is very high on the squad and feels that they should win their remaining two games. He also feels that the added experience his fellow teamates are acquiring will boost their chances for winning many more games in the spring session of the rugby season.

New Players

Another factor that ignites a spark in Mr. Gove's heart is that many new players have joined the team. Some of these have never played a organized game of rugby in their lives. Others have had little experience and the captain feels that by the end of spring practice the new strenght of the team wil enable the squad to bring home Villanova's most successful season ever.

To give strengh to his thoughts is the fact that in the win over the Washington Club many new players showed that they had picked up the idea of the game in a short time and turned in very good performances.

The spring session will begin on March 13 with practice for anyone who wishes to become a Villanova rugby player.

The team's last two games of the season will be played this Saturday at the Bryn Mawr Polo field. The games begin at 2:00 in the afternoon and will be against the old blue from Columbia.

V.U. Basketball Club Again Makes Ready For A Sprited Year

By Bill McDonugh

The start of the 1964-65 basketball season is only two weeks away. The long lines of students always associated with Basketball season result in hours of wasted time and energy.

This can all be avoided with a little forethought and cash. Last season the Basketball Club was initiated, and so were season tickets. The plan of the Club is to have students purchase a book of coupons for all ten games at the Palestra for five dollars. This is not only a saving in money and time, but also the students recieve the best choice of tickets available.

The seats are concentrated in the same section so that a maximum amount of spirit is insured for each game. The students are present not just to outscream the Hawks, but also to give aid for unified form of cheering.

The ten games that are slated for the Palestra this year give Wildcat fans a chance to see the best teams in the country along with a few All-Americans.

Coming to the Palestra this year is Steve (Sling-Shot) Thomas and the rest of his Xavier squad; Niagra, upsetters in V.U.'s 24 and 4 season of last year; an experienced Detroit squad; and the perennial postseason tournament playing De-Paul Five. Add to these the Big Five games plus the Quaker City Festival over Christmas and the result will be the best top-notch basketball-playing in the country.

Any questions concerning the Basketball Club will be answered by Brian Banmiller and other Basketball Club officers in the Student Council, on the second floor of Dougherty Hall.

Buffalo Preview

By Jerry Bruderle

Villanova travels to upstate New York this Saturday for its final regular season game against the Buffalo Bisons. Though only 4-3-1 for the season, Buffalo carries a potent offense and has high hopes of upsetting the Wildcats. Last year Villanova was upset 14-7, on a long pass in the final minute of play.

Quarterback Don Gilbert ranks in the top 20 in the country for total offense, and is dangerous in the air and on the ground. In defeating Richmond 28-13 two weeks ago, Gilbert gained 228 yards, secord two touchdowns, (one on a 58 yd. run), and passed for another score.

Inside the fifty yard line, Buffalo can also score via the field goal route. Joe Oscsodal, a Hungarian refugee, kicks field goals soccer style, and he can kick with either foot. His 44 yarder against Cornell enabled the Bulls to tie the Big Red 9-9.

Coach Dick Offenhamer's team operates out of a wing-T formation, depending mainly on the numerous skills of Gilbert. The halfbacks, especially righthalf Willie Shine, have good speed to run the ends. The line averages about 210 pounds and only one man weighs over 215. In the tackle slots there is a big weight difference. Right tackle Leo Ratamess tips the scales at 260, but Domonic Tiestack, the other tackle weighs only 195.

Buffalo lost to Holy Cross 20-14, and squeaked by V.M.I. 14-10, both whom Villanova defeated handily. However, the Bulls defense has allowed only 10 poins per game, including shutouts over Boston U. and Delaware.

With a powerful offense and a strong defense, it seems unlikely that Buffalo would drop three games and tie one. Perhaps the answer lies in the Bulls' schedule which has more soft touches than most. In any case, the key to victory could be the corralling of quarterback Gilbert. On the home field, he could have another big day.

Wildcat Keglers Enter First Place After Slow Start

By Spence Jones

Villanova's Varsity Bowling Team is currently in first place in the Delaware Valley Division of the Eastern Intercollegiate Bowling League. Their record stands at 13-5. University of Pennsylvania is second at 11-7 and St. Joseph College third with a 10-8 mark.

Slow Start

After a slow start, the 'Cats have won 8 of their last 9 games. The latest Wildcat victim was Drexel Institute of Technology who the Mainliners defeated 3-0. The Wildcats had games of 1002, 935, and 169 for a 2906 series which is high for the season.

In this match junior Jim Rowley had games of 224, 214, and 233 for a season high of 671, which easily outdistanced the previous total. Dick Priminati had a 603 series for Drexel.

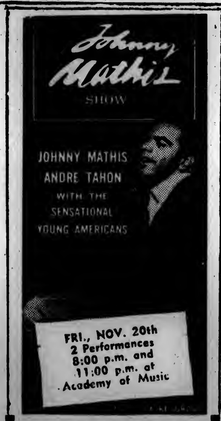
High Scorers

Senior John Brennan and Rowley ar tied for high average for the 'Cats with 187 marks. Sophs Spence Jones and Bruce Thomas are close behind with 185 and 184 respectively. Jones has high single in the league with a 254.

Moe Passanante, Dick Broderick, and Don Logan have all seen plenty of action so far this year. They are all trying to get the remaining starting position.

Newcomers

New to the team this year are senior Bill Halstead, soph Ed Murchy, and freshmen Jim Doubek, Charlie Kuzminski, Manus O'Donnell and Jim Bowman. These six are trying to break into the lineup to get some needed experience. Coach Sal Rico has mentioned to them, "As the season progresses, I'm sure each one of you will get your chance to get into the match.



Having six returning letter men will make getting into the lineup no easy task for the unseasoned keglers.

Freindly Foolishness

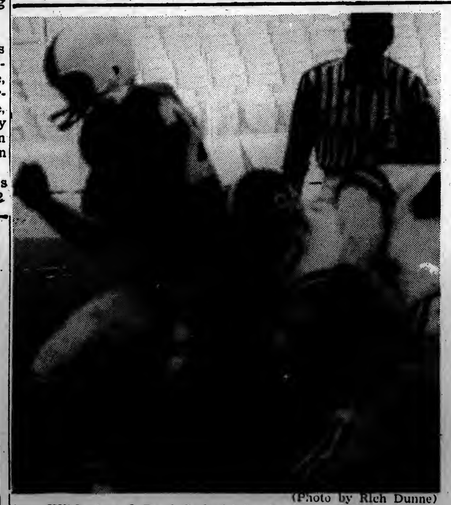
Don't Knock The 'Cats

By Steve Freind

Villanova's grid Wildcats have dropped two in a row, so naturally it's time for the boobirds to make their appearance. It's not unusual for the armchair quarterbacks to begin their verbal assault when you consider the fact that the Villanova fans always have been notorious front-runners.

When Bell's Bombers were in the process of demolishing six opponents in a row, the local citizenry was lavish in its praise for the Main Line machine. Atkinson and Company were the toast of the campus and rumor had it that Alex Bell was up for canonization. There seemed to be no end of the 'Cats' pigskin success as "We're Number One" quickly became the quote of the day.

Then came the Boston College heartbreaker and the Blue and White rooters began to show their true colors. After all around the Main Line the rule is that when the road gets a little rough a scapegoat has to be found. Everyone from Bell to the team managers was blamed for the loss as word spread that the 'Cats blew the big one when the pressure was on. After last week's loss to George Washington, the 'Cats were open game for the Pie Shoppe wizards.



There's no reason to be surprised, though. The script has been the same for years. Take last season's basketball campaign which, incidentally, saw Jack Kraft's cagers post a 24-4 log. Cruising along on their way to the NCAA tourney, the 'Cats ran up against a fired-up St. Joe's quintet and with three minutes left in the tilt, Ramsay's Hawks were beyond reach. True to form, the loyal 'Cat supporters bolted the stands in record time, while their heroes of the previous week were still battling on the court, a brilliant display of Main Line loyalty.

It would be easy to hit Bell's boys with an attack of sadistic satire. Kicking a man when he's down never was very hard and it always makes for a lot of laughs. But somehow it seems totally unfair to knock the crew that put together seven great Saturdays, including the Boston College battle. There are many who feel that the 'Cats let down in last week's loss to the Colonials, that they were still brooding over their defeat to the Eagles. Maybe they were, but who can blame them?

B.C. Down, Too

A great team played their hearts out all year, pointing to the game that would make the season, the game that would make the doubters realize that Villanova really did have a powerhouse. For 57 minutes they outplayed the pride of Boston, making up in guts what they lacked in depth. After such a bloodbath, it's no mortal sin to suffer a letdown. For those who are not aware, B.C. fell the following week to an unusually weak Miami squad by the tune of 30-6. The 'Cats had taken their toll.

During the campaign, this column predicted that the Bombers would go unbeaten and visit the Gator Bowl. That hope went astray, but there's no regrets. There's no desire here to jump off the Wildcat wagon when the 'Cats drop a few. How can you turn your back on a stable of thoroughbreds? Buffalo remains on the Ponies' menu and then possibly a trip to the Liberty Bowl. The 'Cats deserve it, but their fans don't. Outside the locker room after the G.W. game, Al Atkinson walked up to a group of rooters and said, "I'm sorry we let you down." Maybe it's the other way around.

George Washington Shocks 'Cats, 13-6
Bell's Bombers Drop Second In Row

By Steve Freind

Villanovan's bowl hopes were dealt a severe blow on Saturday as George Washington 's hustling Colonials upset the heavily favored 'Cats 13-6 at Washington Stadium. The loss may well be the kiss of death for any ideas Bell Bombers had about a Liberty Bowl trip to Atlantic City.

Colonial quaterback Garry Lyle, a recently converted halfback, drove the 'Cat defense crazy with his passing and running. The sophomore from Pittsburgh, by far the best back the Wildcats have faced this year, ripped the 'Cat line for 57 yards while adding 47 through the air.

'Cats Score First

As in every game this season, the Bombers were first to rack up a tally. After a scoreless first period, soph quarterback Billy Andrejko, subbing for Dave Connell, unleasned an air barrage which moved the 'Cats 70 yards in six plays for a marker. Twice Andrejko hooked up with end John McDonnell for 16 yard gains, then hit Dick Sernyak with a 32 yard areial to put the 'Cats on the board. Jim Case's placement was blocked and Villanova owned a 6-0 lead.

With three minutes remaining in the half, George Washington made its first offensive move. Starting at the Villanova 35, the Colonials, led by Lyle, moved to a first down at the five. After two dives at the 'Cat line netted only 3 yards, Lyle rolled to his right and appeared to be stopped just short of the goal. The referee had other ideas and signaled a GW touchdown despite the protests of the 'Cat defenders. Mark Gross added the conversion and the Colonials took a 7-6 lead to the locker room.

The third stanza was all George Washington, as the Colonials spent almost the entire period in Villanova territory. Only a goal line stand at the 5 kept the 'Cats from falling more than four points behind, as the Colonials were forced to settle for Gross's 27 yard field goal and a 10-6 lead.

Early in the final period, GW added 3 more on another Gross field goal, this time from 32 yards out and the 'Cats found themselves on the short end of a 13-6 count. With time runnnig out, Villanova coach Alex Bell inserted sophomore Jerry Bellotti at quarterback in an attempt to pull the game out with a late passing attack. Bellotti connected with John Kelleher on a 47 yard bomb to give the 'Cats a first down at the GW 17, but the Colonial defense stiffened and took over at the 9.

'Cat Drive Stalls

After GW was forced to punt, the "Cats mounted their last drive. Taking over at the Villanova 38, Bellotti marched the 'Cats to the Colonial 22 on aerials to John Kolmer and Dick Fabrizio. At this point Bellotti's protection crumbled, the rookie fireballer being dropped for losses amounting to 30 yards as George Washington took the ball and the game.

For the first time this year, the 'Cats were outgained overland as the Colonials racked up 136 yards rushing compared to their opponents meager 50. Tom Brown led all 'Cat carriers with 47 yards while Sernyak added 22. The Bombers outdistanced GW in the air 203-57 with Bellotti accounting for 126 on 6 completions. Kelleher was the leading 'Cat receiver, snagging 3 aerials for 82 yards.

Spark In The Gloom

by Rusty Miller

Last week this writer stated that the flame of desire that had so obviously sparked the Villanova eleven earlier in the season had come close to extinction in the loss to Boston College. It was hoped however that the flame would be rekindled by those outstanding players whose desire is never more than momentarily dimmed. Unfortunately the dousing administered by B.C. was worse than was apparent. Even the team leaders through their example on the field were not able to rescue the entire squad. The team that faced George Washington last Saturday was a mere shell of what had formerly been the number two team in the East. At times they might have been mistaken for a team of bowl caliber—on their one scoring drive to the Colonial's 8, but on reflection it must have been only a vivid memory of the past that projected them as such.

Because of a poor performance in last spring's final scrimmage, Gerry Bellotti, who had started in most of his freshman games, was relegated to the fourth string position among four fine quarterbacks. Though generally considered the best passer on the squad, Gerry has seen limited action. In a passing situation it was felt that the experienced Dave Connell or Bill Andrejko, another good passer, who had displayed a little more poise, would be better relied upon.

Poise Under Fire

Last Saturday in a situation that would have shaken many an untested field general, the balding Sophomore from Union City, New Jersey, displayed his passing ability before a crowd of 9000 in the new D.C. Stadium. He completed 6 of 11 passes for 126 yards and ran for a few. His outstanding contribution to the effort was a 47 yard pass play to John Kelleher which started a heart-breaking attempt at a comeback.

Protection Fails

In a similar situation in any previous game a Villanova quarterback could have expected all the protection necessary to lead a scoring drive when passing the way Bellotti was. On Saturday however he had two separate drives stepped cold by G.W.'s Paul Flowers, who threw Bellotti for 3 losses totaling 28 yards.

Buffalo Remains

A heart-breaking defeat at the hands of a great rival does not, should not completely crush a championship team. Perhaps a lesson could be learned from last year's basketball team which went down in defeat at the hands of the Hawks but came back from defeat to wind up as number seven team in the country. This week in Buffalo the 'Cats will have one more chance to prove themselves to the fans who have supported them so well and perhaps that man named Dudley.

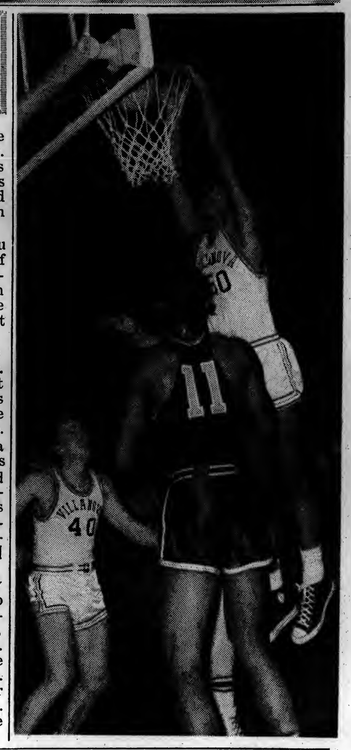
KRAFT'S MAGICIANS RETURN!

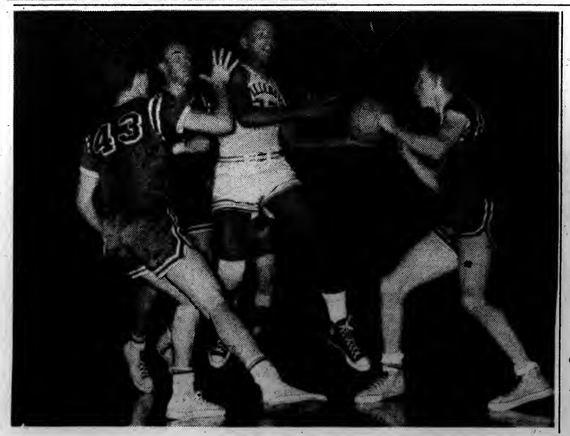
Kraft's 'Cats Are Coming

By Steve Freind

Kraft's 'Cats are coming. It doesn't seem like a whole year since his band of hardwood magicians put on their show. The sound of screaming humanity at the Palestra still rings fresh in the ear. It seems like only yesterday that the 'Cats opened their season at Princeton, began the march that would bring them a sparkling 24-4 record and seventh ranking in the national polls.



Maybe it's just that the 'Cats are hard to forget. You go to see them once and you're addicted for life. The sight of Wally Jones bringing a crowd to its feet with his ball handling wizardry, of Jim Washington slamming the ball through the hoop, of Richie Moore hitting jumpers from every angle on the court was something that you just couldn't forget. It was habit forming; it was contagious; it was great.



Now Wally and Richie are gone and many feel that the show will never be the same, that the circus has lost its color. There are those who believe that the three year magic carpet of Jack Kraft will suddenly be yanked away, that he was strictly a Jones-made magician and now that Wally is gone the annual "Miracle of the Main Line" will cease to take place.

Yes, Jones and Moore are gone but there are still a bunch of scrappy 'Cats that are bent on causing some lumps on the hardwood. Xavier roams in Saturday with a rugged squad and in Steve Thomas they have a boy with true All-American credentials. But when Kraft's defensive maniacs get through with their hand waving zone strangle-hold, accompanied by the gruesome music supplied by 9000 screaming throats, Ohio is going to look like paradise to a battered group of Musketeers.

Yes, it's that time of year again. The mobs have already started at the ticket office. Throats are being limbered up for the coming frolics and the berets will soon appear. Already, some people are checking road maps to Portland, Oregon, which, incidentally, is the site of the NCAA finals.

The most popular place for 'Cat students shifts from the Labor Lyceum to the Palestra and that's really going some. You can feel it in the air, and this Saturday you can see for yourself. The incurable epidemic is about to spread again. It's nothing unusual, though. After all, Kraft's 'Cats are coming.

A Look At The Enemy

By Jim Proud and Jerry Bruderle

Toledo

Toledo lost high scorer Larry Jones from last year's squad, which compiled a 13-11 record, including a 63-59 loss to Villanova at the Palestra.

This year Toledo has plenty of height, from 6-8 Bob Aston to to 6-2 Bob Williams, the smallest starter. In between are Jim Cox, 6-5, Jerry DeLong and John Ayling, both 6-4. Cox was second highest scorer last year, averaging 15 points a game.

Sophomore Bill Backensto, 6-3, is the sixth man and should add firepower following his 32 points per game freshman average. Another soph, 6-7 Len La Fia adds height to the bench.

Much of Toledo's success will depend upon how soon Backensto is pressed into action, and how well he responds.

Niagara

After a disappointing 8-12 record last year, Niagara is faced with a rebuiling job in 1964-65. However one of those eight victories was a 63-57 win over Villanova. Through the first 18 games, this marked the only blemish on Villanova's record.

Sophomore Dwight Bonk, 6-3, will join senior Joe White, also 6-3, and juniors George Phillips, 6-6, Pat Broderick, 6-2, and Art Coleman, 6-3, in the starting line-up.

Bonk averaged 18 points per game for the frosh last year, and he will be joined by another soph, 6-3 Dave Smith. Smith, who averaged 17 for the freshmen, is the sixth man right now.

Although Niagara has not outstanding height, all five starters can leap with much bigger rebounders. They should improve well over last year's record.

St. Francis (Pa.)

St. Francis will be short on scoring this year, due to the loss of Sandy Williams, the eleventh best scorer in the country last year with a 27.3 average. Last December at the Palestra, Villanova opened a 60-27 halftime margin in defeating the Frankies 113-64. That was Villanova's highest point total of the year, as well as their biggest margin of victory. This year's game will be at Loretto where the Frankies are always tough.

Co-captains Jerry Friedrich and Jay Sokolowski, both 6-5 seniors, lead an otherwise young team. Ty Anderson, a 6-6 junior college transfer, and 6-7 sophomore Jack Fitzhenry add height to the starting lineup. Senior Jim Morgan 6-1, should handle the other guard position with 5-8 soph Don Appleman in reserve.

On the bench St. Francis has plenty of height in 6-6 Jim Addleman, 6-7 Gary Lester, and 6-4 Larry Hanchin.

The Frankies will be big, but unless one of the sophomores comes through in surprising fashion, they will have to struggle to finish with an even record.

St. Francis (N.Y.)

St. Francis lost to Villanova in the Palestra last year, 84-48, but two years ago St. Francis upset the NIT bound Wildcats on the home court. This year they again play in New York and St. Francis may have the height and the scoring ability to do it again.

Seniors Ted Kotch, 6-8, and Richie Marquard, 6-7 should gather in plenty of rebounds and will hold their own in the scoring. Junior Mark Turenshine, 6-4, who was injured last year, is the top returning scorer with an 11.1 average. Jack Crispi, a 5-10 junior, Alan Fisher, a 6-1 sophomore, and George Steinmann, a 6-4 senior, will man the guard positions.

Coach Danny Lynch is counting on his big men to improve on last year's 9-12 record, and from the look of things they have the potential to do it.

Detroit

Detroit has four seniors and one junior in its starting line-up in hopes of improving on last year's 14-11 mark, which included a 79-70 loss to Villanova.

Dorrie Murrey, a 6-8 junior, averaged 16.7 last season while only a sophomore. With the graduation of high scorers Dick Dzik and Al Cech, he should turn into a regular 20 point scorer. Sophomore Rick Pine brings a 23.8 average up from the freshmen team and he should add punch to the offense.

But to break into the starting lineup he'll have to beat out one of the seniors. Terry Page and John Watson, both 6-4, and John Schramm, 6-6, all played capably last year behind Cech and Dzik. This year they'll get a full shot at the corner slots. Lou Hyatt, 6-2, and Bill Downs, 5-10, will handle the guard positions.

Like most Midwest teams, Detroit is big, but it will take a big improvement by Murrey and a lot of scoring from sophomore Pine to match last year's record.

Duquesne

Willie Somerset led the Dukes to a 16-7 record last year, and the 5-10 All-American will have to be even better to match that this season. In a series that hasn't always been the friendliest, Villanova defeated Duquesne 73-63 at the Palestra last year. That was the game which Wally Jones wasn't supposed to play in, due to a knee injury, but wound up scoring 22 points anyway.

Somerset averaged 24.7 last year, including high games of 46 and 47. He will be joined in the backcourt by 6-0 senior Ron Willard. These two form one of the best backcourt duos in the East. Seniors Willie Ross, 6-4, Walt Lautslh, 6-8, and junior Tim Brennan, 6-6, give the Dukes height in the frontcourt.

Three more seniors, Ray Brokos, 6-0, Jim McNulty, 6-5, and Pat Masterson, 6-1, form an adequate bench.

Duquesne will be strong again, especially at home where they play Villanova, and with the sharp-shooting Somerset, they should be an exciting team to watch. However, this year opponents will be out gunning for little Willie and his own and his team's accomplishments will suffer.

Canisius

One of the stronger teams in the East will be coming to the Palestra on February 3 to try and avenge their loss to the 'Cats last season. Relying heavily on co-captains Frank Swiatek and Dick McClory they hope to improve on last year's injury-ridden season.

Swiatek and McClory both missed much of the experience they might have gained in playing last season because of an ankle sprain and a twisted knee, respectively.

Another of Canisius's physical problems is a lack of height. The tallest man on the starting team is John Brennan who is 6-4 and is the team's returning center.

De Paul

De Paul will come to the Palestra on February 6, sporting two returning lettermen named Jim Murphy and Dave Mills. Murphy, a 6-2 guard, was high scorer on last season's 21-4 club while Mills at 6-10 was the team's leading rebounder.

Their high scorer last year was Jesse Nash who scored at a rate of 17.5 points per game. He is still in school but is only eligible for the first semester.

De Paul's leading sophomores are a 6-4 forward Errol Palmer and a 6-1 guard Mike Norris who are battling last season's reserves for the starting roles.

St. John's

Coach Joe Lapchick and his brother combination of Bob and Ken McIntyre are headed for one of the greatest seasons in St. John's basketball history.

The two brothers who scored 15 points per game on an average will be added by a host of good sophomores. The main contribution from the frosh team will come in the form of Llyod (Sonny) Dove who stands 6-7 and averaged 20 points per game to lead the frosh team to a 21-1 mark.

Returning lettermen will strengthen the team's first five and also add depth to this pre-season-rated third team in the East.

St. Bonaventure

The biggest loss to the Bonnies last season was the end of the season for with it went all but one of their top scorers. The player who stayed is Bob Barnek a 6-3 senior who averaged only 10.6 points per game and must now take command if his team wishes to have a fruitful season.

In the rebound department the Bonnies are depending on Paul Stappenbach a 6-8 center who is a second year man but will add little in the way of experience. This sophomore — studded team will give coach Larry Weise headaches before the season is over.

Providence

The Friars, who lost to Villanova in the NCAA play-offs at the end of their last campaign, will miss the talents of their great center of last year, John Thompson, but are by no means to be considered as a second rate team in the East.

Coach Joe Mullaney is very high on the season's outlook and feels his squad could be the team to watch in the New England area and perhaps the East.

The reason for Mullaney's hopes lie in the hands of his sophomore Jim Walker, a 6-3 forward who shot at a 22.6 norm as a frosh, and Drexter Westbrook, a 6-7 center who is the tallest man on the team.

Memphis State

The one thing that coach Dean Ehlers and his team will bring to the Palestra that the other teams won't is height. Their two forwards are John Hillman at 6-6 and Harry Johnston at 6-5. These two lettermen along with center Jamie McMahan, who is the biggest man at 6-8, will add scoring ability and rebounds to this high scoring southern school.

Coach Ehlers also has a fine scorer in Sophomore Craig Alexander who set a frosh scoring record with a 22.5 average. Alexander stands 6-5 and plays the forward position but he has a good pair of hands and can play the backcourt as well.

Seton Hall

The Pirates will be a completely different team this season due to the loss of their high scoring ace of the last three seasons Nick Werkman. They are not, however, going to be wholly weakened by his loss. Seniors Richie Dec, a 6-5 forward, and Tony Cuccolo, also a 6-5 forward, will have to take up the slack in the scoring and also get some rebounds.

An added boost to their scoring will come from soph Terry Morawski, a front court man who led his frosh teammates in scoring last season.

The team's main rebound strength will come from two seniors, Harry Slaton at 6-7 and Bob Plocinik at 6-9.

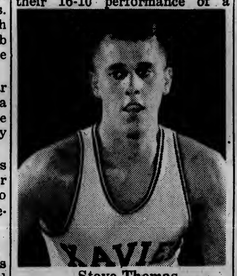
Marquette

Villanova's final game of the regular season will be away at the hands of the Marquette Warriors.

The team has a new coach this year and is in the process of rebuilding after last year's depressing season of 21 losses, 15 of them in a row.

In his rebuilding, coach Al McGuire is starting three sophs. Don Anderson at 6-6 will be the tallest of the new comers and is expected to give needed strength under the boards. The other two are Marty Holmes at 6-5 and Bob Wolf at 6-2.

Tom Flynn last year's team high scorer returns at his forward spot hoping to be the team leader.



'Cats Tackle Xavier Saturday; Face Bradley's Boys Monday

By Steve Freind

Villanova's fast-breaking Wildcats make their first home appearance of the infant cage campaign this Saturday as they tackle a rugged Xavier quintet at the Palestra. Three days later, Kraft's boys face another rough assignment as Bill Bradley and his Princeton Tigers invade the Field House on Monday to lock horns with the 'Cats.

Xavier

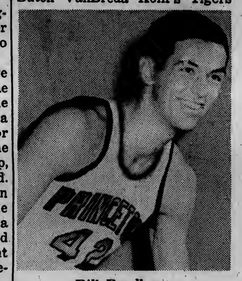
Coach Don Ruberg's charges may be hard pressed to match their 16-10 performance of a year ago. Gone are Bob Pelkington, the nation's top rebounder last season, and Joe Gieger, who averaged 18 points per game.

Steve Thomas

But the Mustketeers still have Steve Thomas and that alone could be enough to give the 'Cats a busy evening. Thomas, a unanimous pre-season pick for All-American laurels, burned the nets last year at a 29.9 clip, seventh best average in the land. The 6-0 senior guard, hitting on 48% of his shots, went over the 40 point mark five times. With a deadly jump shot and good speed on drives, he should present quite a challenge to Kraft's defense.

Thomas' biggest helper will be Bryan Williams, a 6-5 junior who averaged 12.7 last year. The Musketeers are also expecting big things from 6-3 sophomore Joe Hengehold, leading frosh scorer last season with a 25.7 average.

In last year's battle, the 'Cats held off a late Xavier rally to nip the Musketeers, 90-88, on their home court.



Princeton

The Princeton squad can just about be summed up in two words — Bill Bradley. A consensus All-American two years in a row, Bradley can do everything. Last year the 6-5 senior tallied 936 points for a 32.3 averaged, placing him fourth in the country. He shot a fantastic 52.2% while finding time to haul down 360 rebounds and pass off countless assists as the Tigers notched a 20-9 log and the Ivy League crown.

There seems to be little doubt that Bradley is the best college player in the nation. A member of the 1964 U.S. Olympic Basketball Team, Bradley has the pro scouts fighting for his attention, but claims that right now he is only interested in helping the Tigers to another fine season.

Asked to comment on Bradley last year, 'Cat coach Kraft had this to say: "He's definitely a great one. He can do everything. The one thing that makes him so dangerous, though, is his unselfishness. He constantly passed up shots to set up his teammates. This gives Princeton more balance and makes them a better ball club."

Also returning for Coach Butch VanBreda Kolff's Tigers are Bill Haarlow, No. 2 scorer last year, Don Nieman, a two year veteran at center and four guards — Bill Kingston, Wally Uhle, Don Rodenbach and Don Roth. Sophomores Rob Brown and Ed Hummer, 6-9 and 6-6 respectively, are expected to assist Bradley under the boards.

Bill Bradley

Last season the 'Cats defeated Princeton twice, 72-59 in the season opener and 74-62 in the consolation round in the NCAA Regionals at Raleigh.

Wildcats To Face Stiff Opposition In Quest For Quaker Tourney Crown

By Bill McDonough

The 1964 Quaker City Festival will top the past three in the caliber of quality. Wichita, Illinois, NYU, Holy Cross and Pitt are year-in, year-out powerhouses. Add to this impressive collection the likes of Villanova, St. Joseph's and Penn and the Festival looms as a top notch attraction.

In the three year history of the Tournament, the title has never left Philadelphia. Villanova was crowned the first year followed by St. Joe's and LaSalle. With top competition from the outside ths year, it will take some doing to continue this trend.

Illinois

Illinois is an improved team that had a 6-8 record last year in the Big Ten. Coach Harry Combes is expecting big things from his team that did not lose a man from the starting five. Illinois could prove to be a thorn in Michigan and Minnesota's Big Ten title hopes before the season is over.

Skip Thoren is a 6-8 center with good moves and a fine scoring touch. Tal Brody is a real dandy who had a sensational sophomore year season but a disappointing junior. Nevertheless, Brody is being touted as one of the best in the Midwest.

Illinois is also bolstered by a fine crop of sophomores and could be in the thick of the Festival fight.

Wichita

Wichita is the glamor team of the tourney. The Schockers won the Missouri Valley Conference, the toughest in the country, and won 23 out of 29 games. Dave Stallworth is their star and he can do anything on a basketball court. He is a 6-7 All-American who runs out of eligibility at midseason much to opposing coaches' delight.

Averaging 26.5 last year, Stallworth can play any position. Teaming with 6-10 Nate Bowman, Stallworth makes Wichita the team to beat.

N.Y.U.

NYU wants to make up for last year's disappointment in a bad way. They were picked for national honors but never did jell. Barry Kramer and Happy Hairston both graduated, but Coach Lou Rossini has high hopes in 6-7 Ray Bennet who is a good rebounder with a bad temperament. 6-8 Clem Galliard is not the farm boy he used to be and will add with his scoring.

Stan McKenzie, a 6-4 senior, jumps with the best and was a consistent scorer all last year. Two sophs who both averaged 23 for the frosh, Bruce Kaplan and Mal Graham will help out immensely to help keep Rossini in the coaching ranks. NYU will bounce back but not till after mid-season.

Holy Cross

Holy Cross' big problem is their lack of height. The Crusaders do not have a starter over 6-5. In John Wendleken they have a fine shooter who averaged 21.6 last year. Tom Greely, who averaged 26.8 for last year's frosh, will help out, but not enough to get them into a post season tourney.

Pitt

Pitt lost the General, Brian Generalovich, but there are plenty of privates who will try to pick up the slack. Returning mainstays are 6-4 Daryle Ruby, 6-2 Larry Szykowny and 6-6 Bob Lovett, all of whom averaged under 13. Last year the Panthers played in the NIT but don't expect it this year.

Look for Wichita, Illinois, St. Joe's and Villanova to battle it out for the title.

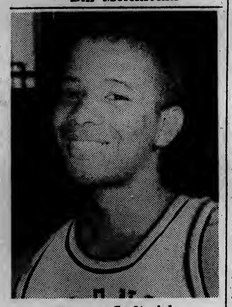
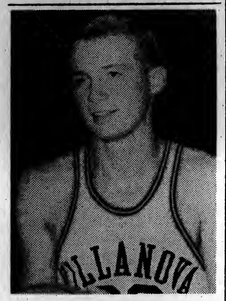
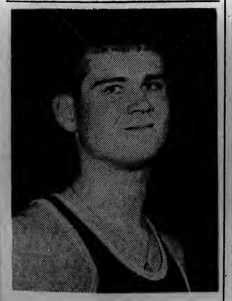
Meet The Wildcats



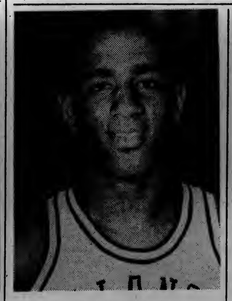
By Bill McDonough



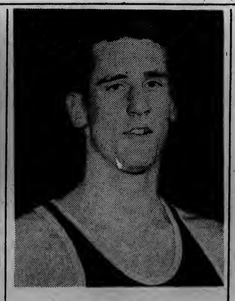
Jim Washington



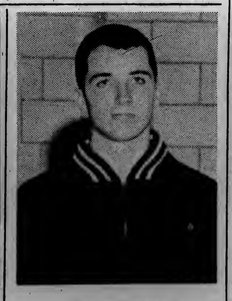
Bill Melchionni



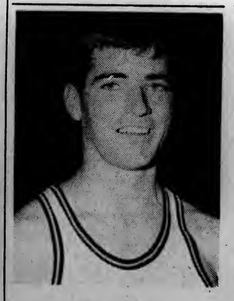
George Leftwich



Eric Erickson



Bill Soens



Pete Coleman

Frank Gaidjunas

Kevin Traynor

Ben Kenny

Jim Washington, a 6-7 leaper from West Catholic High in Philadelphia, is one of the co-captains for this year's 1964-1965 Wildcat squad. Wash was the third leading scorer with a 12.5 average last season behind Wally Jones and Richie Moore. Jim possessses an excellent touch which will enable him to work more effectively out of the corner post.

Washington grabbed 14.2 rebounds last season to lead the 'Cats in that department. He blocks enemy shots as if he was playing in a C.Y.O. league and for this reason, he must be rated as one of the best defensive players in the East. Jim will probably be an early round draft of the NBA, after appearing on the All-American squad.

Bill Melchionni

Bill Melchionni is a slender junior from Pennsauken, New Jersey who has the best shooting eye on the team. Bill picked up invaluable experience last year which will definitely aid him this season when he comes up against the tough defensive measures that will be used trying to contain him. With him manning the point on Kaft's combination zone, he will steal many balls and start fast breaks that will help the 'Cats to offset the loss of the two top scorers from last year. Watch for Bill to up his 10 point average of last year to near the 20 point level which will earn for him the good press rating which he deserves.

George Leftwich

George Leftwich is a 6-0 guard from Archbishop Carroll in Washington, D.C. Now that Wally is gone George will have to accustom his talents to work with Melchionni. "Teddy Bear" averaged 8.2 points a game last year but this season he will increase the scoring of the Wildcats because most teams will be sagging off into the middle with the 'Cats added height under the basket.

If George's knee improves, the 'Cats will have a deadly backcourt pair that will add many gray hairs to opposing coaches. George's selection as co-captain of the squad by his teammates show the respect that is held for him and points out what kind of year they think he will have.

Eric Erickson

Eric Erickson is a 21 year old senior from Monsignor Bonnor in Upper Darby. Eric averaged 5.6 points last year but did not have the opportunity to be a scorer with Moore, Jones, and Washington on the same squad. This year is Eric's last and Coach Kraft is sure he will go out with a bang.

Eric is the most versatile player on the team. He can play either up front or underneath and do both effectively. Eric's experience from the last two years will help to lead the 'Cats again to a post-season tournament.

Billy Soens

Billy Soens, a 6-8 center from Penn Charter in Philadelphia, will be the starting center this year, in all probability. Soens is a former all-city star who has excellent potential both on offense and defense. Soens, co-champion jumper in high school, will help in the rebounding department and will also aid in the scoring.

He will probably blossom by mid-season to his full ability and will play an important role in an attempt to capture Big Five laurels.

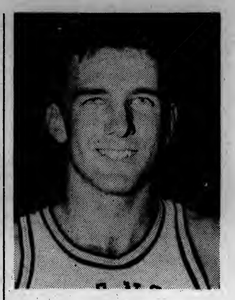
Pete Coleman

Charlie (Pete) Coleman is a 5-11 guard from Darby-Colwyn High School in Darby, Pa. A former high school All-American, Pete averaged 15.8 for the frosh last year, mostly on toe-handed sets reminiscent of cage court days. Coleman is expected to back up Melchionni and Leftwich at the guard slot and probably will see plenty of action.

Pete has quick hands and quicker feet and with these qualities he will be a definite plus in Kraft's defense. Coleman is in the C&F division.

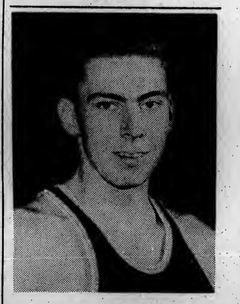
Frank Gaidjunas

Frank Gaidjunas is the tallest member of the squad and will give Soens a tough fight for the center starting berth. At 6-9 and only 205, Frank lacks a little weight, but his aggressiveness will make up for it.



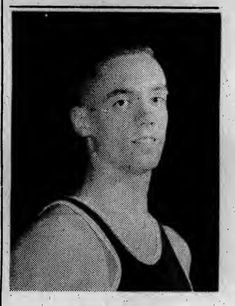
Big Frank was the leading scorer on last year's frosh squad and it is hoped he will keep it up this season. Gaidjunas was a teammate of Joe Turk at LaSalle High School.

Kevin Traynor

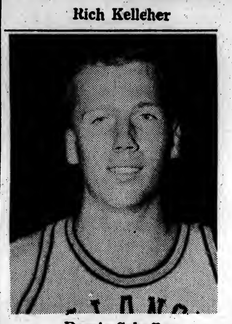


Kevin Traynor is the suprise member of the squad. Iggy played freshman ball but was out last year with a knee injury. The Igloo, like Paul Arizin, did not make his high school team at Bonnor, but is a graduate of school yard basketball. Traynor has good hands and a fine shooting touch which will surely have him playing as a capable reserve in many games before the end of the cage campaign.

Ben Kenny



Ben Kenny is a two year veteran and could see plenty of action this season. A 6-2 guard from St. Matthew's in Conshohocken, Ben also possesses the good hot hand that can open many zone defenses. Kenny is a C&F student interested in giving the working class more time to sleep.



Joe Turk

Terry McGuire

Rich Kelleher

Bernie Schaffer

Joe Turk

Joe Turk is a high-jumping sophomore guard from LaSalle High School where he played on a championship team. Joe is an engineering student and is planning to run track this spring as a hurdler. Look for Joe to be called upon often as the occasion arises for his defensive skills.

Terry McGuire

Terry McGuire is a 6-4 forward from Cathedral Latin in Cleveland. A former all-stater, Terry is one of the six sophs on the team that are expected to give the 'Cats a big lift. McGuire is a Liberal Arts student and averaged 12.7 for the frosh last year.

Rich Kelleher

Rich Kelleher played his high school ball at Pennsbury High in Morrisville, Pa. Kelleher, a sophomore, was the sixth man for the Wildkittens last year averaging 5.6. Rich is an NROTC student who would rather run than march.

Bernie Schaffer

The tough guy of the squad, Bernie is known for his aggressive work under the boards. At 6-5 and 210 lbs., the former Haverford High star has the bulk to dish out punishment while battling for the ball.

Always a steady performer, Schaffer has shown tremendous improvement in his offensive moves and scoring touch and seems a cinch to improve on his 4.1 scoring average of last year.

Bernie was the third 'Cats rebounder last season with 122 snares, following Washington and the departed Richie Moore. Though he will not be a member of the starting five, look for Battling Bernie to come off the bench often to turn in a clutch performance.

NOTICE!

The following announcement is made by the Father President: "In order to obviate the confusion that arises whenever it snows, it has been decided to adopt a policy of no cancellation of classes. It is felt that with the large resident population and the availability of public transportation most students and faculty members should be able to get to the campus. This policy will be in effect for Graduate Studies and University College."

Xavier Tilt Perfect Ending For Juniors' Charity Weekend

By Bill McCloskey

Villanova meets Xavier in the first Palestra tilt of the year for the nationally-ranked Wildcats and expectations are that many juniors and their dates will be using the game as a fitting wrap-up to Charity Weekend.

With the possibility of the Palestra appearance of female members of the cheerleading squad, juniors wil have added incentive for making this the Charity Weekend topper.

But the weekend gets started on a bit more serious aspect on Friday night with the Charity Ball in the Field House. The Villanovans and the Fat City Four, both campus musical groups, will provide top-notch dance music. Tickets for the 8 to midnight dance are on sale in the Pie Shoppe for three dollars.

Missing Link

Also in the Pie Shoppe, at a bit cheaper rate, is the Missing Link Contest that may well establish one of Villanova's basketballers as the missing link.

The contest began on Monday with "voters" donating one cent for each vote. The money is to go to the Charity Weekend Fund, which in turn goes to support the various activities scheduled by the Junior Class for the Orpahns at St. John's Home in Southwest Philadelphia.

On Friday night it is hoped that more money will be raised through the Charity Ball. Tickets are now on sale in the Pie Shoppe.

The main function of the weekend is Saturday when a contingent of Villanovans led by Junior Class members leaves the campus for St. John's. After picking up about 100 of the children at the home, they will travel to 69th Street Shopping Center for a shopping trip.

The shopping will be at the J. C. Penny store at 69th and Chestnut Streets and will begin at 10 and go until noon. In previous years the store has closed during the Orphan's Outing but because "it is so late in the season" the manager of the store decided against this for this year.

The Penny people will distribute free candy to the children and special amusement rides will be offered.

A special matinee kiddie show at an area theatre and lunch at Kosticks Restaraunt will round out the day.

Tickets

Tickets are also on sale for this outing in the Pie Shoppe. The cost of the tickets, which will include the meal at Kosticks is $1.50 for a student and $2.50 for the student and his date.

"Although the events of the weekend are being organized by the Junior Class they are open to all Villanovans" according to Brian Banmiller who heads up the committee making plans for the function.

The members of the committees that are working on the Weekend will go again to the Home on Monday for the Annual Christmas Party for the "Johnnies." Scheduling had to be changed because of the Holy Day on Tuesday. Although it had been the practice in previous years to provide a luncheon type of affair, this had to be cancelled because of the fast and abstinance obligations the day before the Feast of the Immacualte Conception.

Nevertheless Santa Claus will be there with various "goodies" for the children and good Villanovans.

Frosh Use Hardwork, Hustle To Offset Scholastic Losses

Ever-increasing academic qualifications have been a detriment to this year's edition of the Villanova "Wildkittens." Only three of six scholarship men were able to meet the rigid academic requirements for entrance to the school. Therefore, Coach Jack Devine had to choose the remainder of the team from 80 eagerly awaiting candidates from the freshman class.

Coach Devine selected his team and has been working long and hard to mold these boys into a smooth-operating unit. Coach Devine commented that the team "has a lot of hustle and desire. They have been working hard and this hard work is the seed from which victories grow."

Presently playing first team are Mike Glaza, a 6'5" center from Macomb, Illinois, and 6'4" forward, Joe Crews, from Bishop McDevitt High School in Glenside, Pennsylvania. The other forward position is being held by 6'2" Jim Stinger from Bishop Neuman High School in Philadelphia. Guards are 6'1" Frank Guerin and 5'11" Jay Derent. Guerin is from Msgr. Bonner High School in Drexel Hill and Derent is from St. Mary's High School in Sayreville, New Jersey. Glaza, Crews and Stinger are the team's scholarship athletes.

The remainder of the squad includes: 5'11" Denny Carluzzo, from Sacred Heart High School in Vineland, New Jersey; Tom Keaveny, a 6'2" forward from St. Agnes High School in East Rockaway, New York; 6'2" Steve Krines, from Chaminade High School in Long Island, New York; Dave Turtzo, a 6'2" guard from Penn-Argyl, Pennsylvania; 6'1" Al Cresta, hailing from Vineland, New Jersey; Pat Reddington, a 6'1" forward from Rye, New York; Mike Barnes, a 6'3" forward from Elizabeth, New Jersey; and Jim Meehan, 5'11" guard from LaSalle Prep.

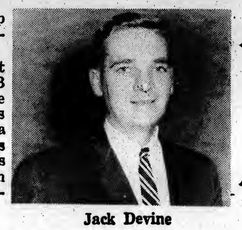
Molder Of Future Stars



By Buzz Langan

Jack is starting his fourth year as Freshman basketball coach at Villanova. He has a four year record of 21 wins and 12 losses. His best year was two years ago when the Wildkittens won the Big Five with a 10-2 record.

A former Villanova all time court great, Devine returned to his alma mater after a fine high school coaching career at West Catholic.

Devine played four years for the Wildcats after being an All-City selection at West Catholic. Revamped eligibility rules during the Korean War made it possible for the 6'4" center to play as a freshman for the Wildcats.

Despite his lack of size for a center Devine held his own with much taller opponents and was invariably called upon to play the opposition's top scorer. He was also an outstanding rebounder.

Jack Devine

During his four years at Villanova he scored 1,263 points, fifth highest in the school's history. Jack was elected captain of Villanova his last two years and was honored by his teammates as the most valuable player on the squad during those campaigns.

Devine coached at West Catholic winning the Catholic League title in his first year, 1958-59 season.

Jack coaches Villanova's freshman team and assists Kraft with the varsity. One of his most important functions is to work with the big men up front to help them develop into as fine a competitor as he was during his collegiate career.

Jack has been married eight years. He and his wife Frances reside in Westtown, Pa. The Devines have two children, Mary Cay, 5 and Jack, Jr., 4.

With him molding the stars for the future, the basketball picture at Villanova will remain rosy. A Devine-Kraft combination is pretty tough to beat.

Villanova Spirit

By Steve Freind

With the coming of the basketball campaign and the long awaited arrived of girl cheerleaders sometime in the near future (which means anywhere from two weeks to ten years), perhaps it's a good time to discuss spirit — Villanova spirit.

It would be nice to proudly proclaim the 'Cats fans a loyal bunch of screaming supporters who always stay with their boys. It would also be untrue.

Let's face it, Villanova fans have always been frontrunners. This was said once before from this corner, producing irate howls from a flock of indignant souls who feel that such an opinion borders on heresy. If the issue is honestly examined, however, one must come to the conclusion that the majority of fans on the Main Line campus have only time for winners.

It never was hard to support a winning club. Even the most lethargic 'Nova fan would find no trouble screaming at the sight of Kraft's speedboys taking apart a foe. No one in Madison Square Garden last year had the slightest difficulty in cheering as their heroes proceeded to cop the Holiday Festival.

But then came the St. Joe's tilt and a different attitude. The lusty throats suddenly dried up and the blue and white rooters began to make premature exits.

There's no point in dwelling on sore spots of the past. The question is, What can be done in the future? Maybe Villanova fans should take a leaf from the book of two schools, namely Notre Dame and St. Joe's.

It may astound some to hear St. Joe's being used as a yardstick by a writer who has never been known for an affection for the boys from City Line. But you don't have to like the Hawks to respect their spirit.

They're a scrappy bunch who would rather see their Hawks win than anything but when Ramasy's boys falter, they're still behind them all the way. The base drum keeps booming, the Hawk keens flapping and the fans keep yelling. You have to respect, and envy, that kind of spirit.

The Notre Dame spirit is legendary but one instance in particular illustrates the kind of support the Irish give to their teams. In 1925 Rockne's scrappers traveled to West Point to battle an underdog Army team. It was the year after the undefeated season of the Four Horsemen, but the Irish expected to have no trouble with the Cadets. Army had other plans and proceeded to hand the Irish a 27-0 trouncing.

Battered and ashamed, the Irish scheduled a train which would bring them back to the campus at 3 A.M., so they could sneak to their rooms and avoid the stares of the student body. But when the train pulled into South Bend, the entire student body was on hand, waving torches and singing the famed Notre Dame Victory March. Tears running down his face, all the Rock was able to say was, "As long as you'll have me, I'll stay at Notre Dame."

For those who opposed the admission of girl cheerleaders on the basis of tradition, the opportunity for tradition is here, a tradition of spirit. But traditions don't just happen. They have to be built.

The coming cage campaign will be a challenge for the 'Cats but it will provide an even bigger challenge for their fans. No matter what happens to Kraft's boys, the season will be a success if, at the end of the year, the Villanova fans can honestly say "We're Number One."

A Welcome Addition

This year's Wildcat basketball team is a very promising one indeed. It has height, depth and enough experience in its six returning lettermen.

True, the remaining seven men are a little devoid of experience, but the first few varsity skirmishes should cure this situation.

In a sense there are seven other Villanovans in the same boat with the varsity rookies. Experience can also be the cure for them. I am speaking of the first girl cheerleaders to hit the Villanova campus.

The Xavier game on December 5 could be the Palestra debut of 1964-1965 Wildcat team and also the debut of a unique experiment to spark up the spirit of Villanova. That evening these seven girls will take their place on the floor of the Palestra to show to the people of the Philadelphia area that Villanova is proud of its athletes and the students who back them.

Through a selective system of try-outs the "elect seven" were chosen on the basis of their exuberance originality and personality. They include two juniors, two sophomores and three freshmen.

Lorraine Farino is a 20 year old junior nurse who makes her home in New Haven, Connecticut. From the same state and same class is another 20 year old nurse, Betsy Grabowski. These two girls were indoctrinated to the true meaning of Villanova spirit by attendance at all home games and active membership in the Basketball Club last year.

In the Sophomore Class we find two girls who look quiet enough at first glance but can let out a resounding chorus of "V for Villanova" and "Let's Go Wildcats" when the occasion arises. Phyllis Greyson is a 19 year old math major from Ardmore and Jane Hulse hails from Beverly, New Jersey. Jane is also 19 and is enrolled in the nursing course.

Heading the list of freshmen nurses on the squad is Jan Zeller from Pittsburgh followed by Sue Quinn of Millville, New Jersey and Cevyn Murphy of Allendale New Jersey. These three freshmen add poise and charm to the growing number ow women undergraduates at Villanova.

As of yet it is undetermined whether the new additions to the Villanova cheerleaders will be able to go on away trips, but it is assured that they will make all home games of the '64-'65 season. Five regular boy cheerleaders will be joined by five of the girls who will rotate in their duties as instigators of true loyalty and good conduct in competitive sports.

We are proud of our "firsts" and hope that the student body will be as equally receptive to them not merely as young college women but especially as true Villanovans.

Freshman lovelies whose cheering is expected to bring sunshine to the Palestra and distraction to Jack Kraft's bench. L. to r.: Cevyn Murphy, Sue Quinn and Jan Zeller.

V.U. Basketball Club To Continue Yelling In Support Of 'Cats

By Bob McIntyre

The Basketball Club, under the direction of Brian Banmiller (Spirit Committee Chairman) and Head Basketball Coach Jack Kraft, will begin its second year as the symbol of Spirit behind the Basketball team on December 7, the night the 'Cats face Princeton at the Field House.

After its inauguration last year, it was noted by many from the start, that it was a Club with esuccess, written all over it. The Club this year doubled its intake of members to around 200. These 200 members form a hard core or nucleus of Villanova's spirit on the Main Line during the winter months.

Banmiller, the founder of the Club, says its main objective is to organize the spirt of the school and so far its purpose has been accomplished as can be attested to, by looking back on last year. He said the Club members would be made up of those Club members back from last year, members of the Spirt Committee in the past and those his committee feels would benefit the Club by their membership.

The Club will also be composed of different sub-committees working under Banmiller and Mr. Kraft. They will include committees for signs, those who will organize the bus trips and those who will take care of telegrams to the team. Other innovations of the Club will be announced later and meetings will take place at 4:30 p.m. on Mondays or when they are posted.

Concerning Girl Cheerleaders

Fellow students,

The much debated topic of female cheerleaders at Villanova has reached fruition. The Student Government Association after two years of heated discussion has indicated by a significant majority that our student body is very much in favor of female cheerleaders. The Administration likewise feels that if the students want females to help renew our lagging spirit, they will, in fact, allow them.

One qualifying factor has however been injected. No females will represent our University unless the students treat our Villanova girls in the manner fitting the dignity of a lady.

In bygone years the Villanova men have viewed the females as interlopers upon their rights and treated them with a corresponding sense of disrespect. During my four years here, however, the girls, because of their increased number, interest and participation in campus activities have elevated themselves to a status of equality and, in some cases, excellence.

I feel that with this elevation has come a corresponding decline in animosity on the part of campus males. To my best knowledge, there have been comparatively few incidents of embarassment or discomfort concerning our girls. This trend must continue and intensify because our girls have, through their actions, proved themselves deserving of full recognition and dignity on this campus.

It is with this thought that I, on behalf of the SGA and all interested Villanovans, both beg and demand that proper treatment be accorded to our female cheerleaders when they appear in the near future. Fellow students, the success of this venture that you have overwhelmingly approved depends solely upon and your attitude towards our girls.

Let there be no mistake. If our female cheerleaders are not treated with the dignity befitting a lady, the cause of female cheerleaders will suffer a paralyzing, if not mortal, blow. Please, men, act like mature university students, not like immature fools.

Demonstrate your responsibility by responding to this Villanova "new look" with dignified responsibility.

Big Five Preview

By Steve Freind

As usual, the race for the Big Five crown shapes up to be a real dog-fight. Temple and St. Joseph's appear to be the teams that will give the 'Cats the most trouble but Penn and defending champ LaSalle cannot be counted out. Add to this the fact that the record books are thrown out in Big Five tilts, and it is obvious that the City Series fight will be as exciting as ever.

Temple

This may just be the most well stocked Owl's nest in the long reign of Coach Harry Litwack. With most of the stars back from last year's squad which posted a 17-8 log and garnered the Middle Atlantic Championship, the Owls have to be given the inside track for city laurels.

Once again, the Temple attack will centered around Jim Williams, the 6-8 junior who led the Owls in scoring his rookie year with an 18.1 average, while hauling down rebounds at a 12.2 clip. With a year of experience under his belt, Williams should be twice as tough.

Teaming with Williams in the front court will be veterans Dan Fitzgerald and Vince Richardson. Fitzgerald, a 6-5 senior, was the Owls' No. 2 scorer last year with a 12.2 average.

Manning one guard spot is Bill Kelley, the 5-10 senior who starred for the Owls in the second half of last season. Coming on when starter Frank Bishop was sidelined with a shoulder seperation, Kelley averaged double figures and was a big spark in the Temple's drive for the MAC title.

The other backcourt slot will probably go to Don Cartwright, a 5-10 sophomore who teamed up with Williams for two years at Norristown High School. Sophomores Joe Hindelang, Chris Kefalos and Pat Carrol will give Temple bench strength than it has had in years.

Hindelang, a 6-4 star from Lincoln High, led the frosh scorers last year with a 19.5 average and could force his way into the starting lineup. For good measure, the Owls will have the full time services of 6-6 Ken Morgan, former West Philadelphia star who was hobbled last season with injuires.

St. Joseph's

Even if St. Joseph's had nothing, Coach Jack Ramsay would come up with a good year. But this year the Hawks are loaded with talent, which means trouble for the rest of the city.

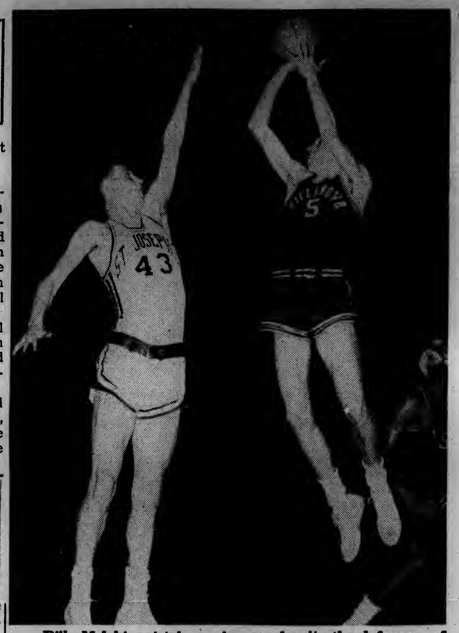
The boy who has everyone talking on City Line is Matt Guokas, a 6-5 transfer from Miami. The former St. Joseph's Prep star is being touted as the most talented Hawk since the heyday of his father, twenty-five years ago. Despite his height, Guokas will team up in the back court with 5-10 sharpshooter Billy Oakes.

Veteran juniors Tom Duff, 6-5, and 6-6 Marty Ford will handle two of the front court posts, while the third slot will go to Cliff Anderson, a 6-3 leaper who is drawing rave notices.

Waiting in the wings are such stalwart performers as Chuch McKenna, Billy McFadden, Vince Curran and Al Grundy. Look for the Hawks to be tougher than ever, especially when the pressure is on.

LaSalle

Graduation hit Coach Bob Walters' defending champs hard but the Explorers could still be rugged. Despite the loss of 6-8 Walter Sampson and the great Frank Corace, LaSalle still has George Sutor, a 6-7 giant who this year could finally realize his great potential. Last year Sutor led the team in rebounds with a 11.7 average while scoring at a 14.1 clip, second best on the squad.



Guard Curt Fromal will be called upon to direct the offense while veterans Al Tezla, 6-4, and 6-5 Joe Carpenter will team with Sutor up front. George Paull, a 6-4 soph from Cardinal Dougherty, could winding up a starting berth. The Explorers could surprise a lot of people but they will be hard pressed to match last year's 16-9 record.

Penn

As long as Coach Jack McCloskey stays at Penn, the Quakers will be trouble. Last year McCloskey took an inexperienced sophomore squad and drove them to a 14-10 season and third place in the Ivy League. Juniors Stan Pawlak and Jeff Neuman will lead the Quaker attack.

Pawlak, a 6-3 forward, led all all Penn scorers last year with a 16.7 average while 6-1 guard Neuman is a ball handling magician.

If 6-8 junior John Hellings and soph Frank Burgess, also 6-8, can control the boards, the Quakers could cause some trouble.

Billy Melchionni takes a jumper despite the defense of St. Joe's Marty Ford during last year's Big Five battle. This season the City Series race should be as exciting as ever.

Portrait Of A Winner

By Joe Maffongelli

In April, 1961, Mr. Jack Kraft took the reins of the Villanova basketball chariot from Al Severance. Before coming to the Main Line campus, Jack enjoyed a successful 20-year career in high school coaching.

His overall record for this period was a commendable 182-113, which included an excellent 25-7 record at Malvern Prep.

A former guard for the St. Joe's five, Kraft made the All-City team in his senior year during the 1941-42 season. In his initial year at the 'Cat kingdom, he led his charges to a second place finish in the Eastern Regionals of the NCAA Tournament.

Such a finish has now become a normal thing for the clubs of Mr. Kraft. Two years ago, a team that had been marked mediocre posted an upset victory over powerful Wichita and a fourth place finish in the NIT.

Jack Kraft

Last season the golden egg was hatched. Led by a boy named Jones, Kraft's cagers completed a remarkable 24-4 season, and a strong performance in the NCAA.

Regarding this season, Kraft is rather optimistic. He remarked that the 'Cats are anxiously awaiting the campaign opener.

Starting Five

"I think that Washington, Soens, Leftwich, Melchionni and Erickson make up my team." he said. "But Schaffer, Coleman, Gaidiunas and Kenny will move in when needed."

Kraft further noted that the first three encounters with Scranton, Xavier and Princeton will definitely smooth out the starting unit and will provide a good indication of the future.

All in all, it appears that the magic man of the court has put together some pretty potent blue and white magic once more.

'Cats Smother Frosh 83-34; NYU Scrimmage Favors 'Cats

By Rusty Miller

Villanova's nationally ranked basketball team passed its final pre-season test with a resounding 83-34 over the freshmen squad. The frosh, having lost most of their height to prep school for a year, offered little resistance to the varsity. The varsity, on the other hand showed need of experience on the part of its sophomores. The offense will undoubtedly be emphasized in practice for the Scranton and Xavier games this week.

A week and a half ago the 'Cats met NYU in a hush-hush pre-season scrimmage in that hallowed hall of Philadelphia sports known as the Palestra. Last year the scrimmage had taken place in Madison square Garden — to give the 'Cats a chance to become accustomed to it before the Holiday Festival. This year the Violets will join the 'Cats in Philadelphia after Christmas for the Quaker City Festival so the Palestra was the natural place to meet.

Last year's match saw the number one and two teams in the East pitted against each other. This year saw a comparatively weaker Villanova team, once again tabbed second in the East meet a Violet five hardly slated for an outside chance for honors.

The scrimmage, which was closed to the outside press and just about everyone else too, proved . . . interesting! It gave a good indications that Villanova will have a much needed twenty point scorer in junior guard, Bill Melchionni. Commenting on Melchionni and Leftwich, coach Lou Rossini of NYU said, "For speed and intelligence, Villanova's backcourt men can stay with anybody."

Villanova's All American prospect, in the pre-season polls, Jim Washington now playing at the forward spot demonstrated his great defensive ability but had some trouble on offense. Playing his favorite spot on defense, just a little to the outside of the center position, he was able to use his great shot-blocking ability. Coach Rossini commented on Washington"s ability to recover on defense and make the charging, inside block. On offense Jim has a beautiful medium distance shot from the side, but the Violets were able to force him to the center and farther out than he would have liked. The result was that almost every one of his outside shots fell short. Coach Kraft is counting on this outside shot of Washington's as a major aid in the scoring column.

The man who could perhaps be the key to success for the Wildcats this season, 6-8 sophomore, Bill Soens, played a fair game, at times demonstrating his great potential. Mr. Rossini felt that "he should develop by midseason" — not a very encouraging note for the 'Cats!

After the initial game period (the scrimmage lasted three hours), the 'Cats tried out the man-to-man defense they have been working on quite a bit. NYU, which emphasizes this type of defense, was able to crack it without too much trouble. Although with more practice the 'Cats may be able to count on the man-to-man up their sleeve, it looks as though the "Big D" will remain for the most part, the patented Witch Kraft zone that has kept them guessing for three successful (64-21) seasons.

In general, the Villanova offense needs more work. The 'Cats, although they dominated the scoring column have not yet reached the same point of smoothness that they had last year at this time.

Ernie Abate Deserves Title: Catholic Youth Of The Year

by Matt Roche

Ernest N. Abate has given the best gift of the Senior Class to the school. He has given himself. From academics to polemics, from the Student Council to Rugby, his time was not only his own — it was anyone's who needed him.

Ernie Abate

A word of encouragement, the time for a meeting, a compliment — Ernie had all that and more. Ernie personifies the theory that a well-rounded man is not a physical impossibility. To him belongs the honor of distinction both in extra-curricular activities and his scholastic field. The Student Government Association awarded Ernie its plaque for devoted time and energy in government affairs. He has maintained a 3.44 average for 4 years. His own class recognized ability and elected him President of the class.

Service to his class and school has been a theme of Ernie's four years at Villanova. This interest in things outside of himself started in his Sophomore year when he was a member of the Freshmen Orientation Committee, and Sophomore Spring Outing Committee. He continued this into his Junior year with membership on the Junior Steering Committee, Junior Mother's Day Committee, and the Junior Dinner Dance Committee. As a Senior and Secretary to the Student Council he was interested in the Senior Steering Committee, Senior Dinner Dance Committee, and Student Union Special Problems, as well as the Religious Affairs Committee.

Ernie received national recognition in "Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities" for his University participation.

Although he has been a member of the Student Council for three years, Ernie has extended his interests to the Blue Key, N.F.C.C.S., and also Delta Pi Mu.

In his first years here at the University he devoted time to the Villanova Singers, Turf 'N' Tinsel, and the Nick Basca Committee. This year he worked for Lynx, implementing his interest in American Literature — especially Ernest Hemingway.

Consequently, his selection as Catholic Youth of the Year is no mere empty honor. Instead it recognizes Ernest Abate's ability in academics, participation in extra-curricular affairs, and interest in his class. Apathy is a foreign word in Ernie's vocabulary of action. Truly a well-rounded man!

Student Government Association Wants Snow, Belle Masque Review

by Tom Krause

Motions concerning the providing of facilities for Belle Masque, right of immunity for SGA members when speaking on the Congress floor, and a request for the Administration to reconsider its policy of no cancellation of classes on snow days were passed at the Student Congress meeting on December 2.

Among the committee reports before debate, Brian Banmiller, chairman of the Spirit Committee, commented on the success of a meeting with big five schools on the subject of Palestra Basketball. Representatives from all big five schools except Penn attended, along with representatives from the FBI, the District Attorney's office and Philadelphia police.

Tom Furst, SGA president, and Banmiller were there for Villanova, and the meeting engendered several proposals for implementation by the spirit committees. Among these were co-cheering by Big Five schools during Palestra doubleheaders, and in general, providing an atmosphere of a micability among Big Five Schools.

Regarding motions, Jim Whalen proposed that the History Club be accepted into the SGA with a one-half vote, and this motion was unanimously passed.

In the second motion, Betty Kelly, Joe Linsalata, and Rick Galli requested through the SGA that the Administration provide proper facilities for undergraduate theatre productions sponsored by the Belle Masque society.

Mike Sutherland, speaking in defense of the motion, succeeded in gaining unanimous passage from the SGA members.

Bill Manfred and Dave Moore moved that the SGA members have the right of immunity from any sanctions whatsoever when

'Uncertainties' Cause Delay Of Girl Cheerleader Debut

By Bob Fennel

Rev. Joseph A. Kemme, vice-president of student affairs, has temorarily halted the enactment of the recently passed motion proposing the establishment of girl cheerleaders.

According to Dave Moore, executive vice-president of student affairs, Father Kemme is in favor of girl cheerleaders but feels that the time for their introduction is not presently favorable, for various reasons. First, he believes that the passage of the motion may not indicate an overwhelming majority of the student body in favor of it. Time is required to determine the actual consensus of opinion.

Secondly, Father Kemme does not believe a proper decorum will be maintained by the students at the present time. Although the conduct this year has been an improvement, the students must still prove themselves.

Furthermore, Father Kemme feels that eventually an allowance for uniforms can be provided for in the budget and suitable uniforms can be designed.

The establishment of girl cheerleaders very soon is conceivable and negoiations are presently underway to establish a definite date.

The motion was first introduced last year by Mike Ferrara and Joe McCarthy. It became a bitterly contested issue which split the SGA. The opposition was led by James Murphy, president of the class of '63, who adopted the policy of "traditionalism." The motion was defeated in the Congress.

This year the motion was again brough to the floor of the senate. It was recommended for passage byt he Congress. After much debate it passed by a role-call vote of 26½ to 14½.

Seven cheerleaders were selected from among 30 contestents They are now practicing in anticipation of the administration's approval.

Congressman William Green To Address Political Union

A Villanova Alumnus who made good will address he Villanova Political Union at 7:30 p.m. on Monday, December 14 in the east lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Congressman William J. Green, III, Alumnus of the Villanova Law School, will support the Supreme Court's legistlative redistricting decision.

The redistricting decisions of 1962 and 1964 are among the most important and most controversial ever to be handed down by the Supreme Court. In substance, they provide that both houses of all state legislatures must be based on electoral distribution of approximately equal population.

According to Charles S. Rhyne, past president of the American Bar Association, the 1962 decision, Baker vs. Carr, "has had and is having a cataclysmic impact on legislative apportionment. Already 42 out of the 50 states hafe begun efforts to conform to it.

While recent union debates have not been marked by party regularity, Monday night's debate is expected to see a reforming of party lines with Conservatives attacking the Supreme Court's decision and Liberals supporting it. Moderates may determine which side wins the debate.

Monday night's talk will be Congressman Green's first appearance before the Political Union. The Law School alumnus was elected on April 28, 1964 to the Congress to fill the vacancy caused by the death of his father, William Green, Jr., who served 9 terms as a Philadelphia Democrat.

Elected at the age of 25, Green is the youngest of the 435 members of the present Congress and youngest ever from Pennsylvania. Re-elected in November of this year, Green has an opportunity to build the kind of seniority which is rare.

Etienne Gilson, noted Catholic philosopher and historian is shown speaking on the "Birth of Lutheranism." Vasey Aud.torium was filled to capacity for this Philosophy Department lecture.

Noted Philosopher Discusses Luther

by Tom Krause

Etienne Gilson, noted Catholic philosopher and historian, addressed a packed Vasey Hall Auditorium crowd on December 3. The Philosophy Department succeeded in bringing him to campus on short notice and students and faculty from neighboring colleges filled the hall as Gilson spoke on the "Birth of Lutheranism."

Gilson delineated the early life of Luther, his monastic period and the doubt which arose in the young priest's mind. Luther entered the Augustinian monastery at Erfurt in 1505 and thereafter led a severe, abeit regular, monastic life.

The answer for Luther's break with the church "lies in the conscience of Luther himself," said Gilson. Luther epected the monastic life to give him "certitude of salvation." He did not feel, however, that he was becoming a better man.

Gilson's statement that, "Monastic vows were taught as being a second baptism (to Luther)," implie the falsity of this teaching. However, in the question period after the lecture, the Rev. Joseph Papin, Ph. D, S.T.D., a Villanova theology professor, mentioned that there is a tradition in the theology of the Spanish Church in which monastic vows are considered a second baptism.

According to Gilson, the main difference between Catholicism and Lutheranism lies in Luther's notion of grace. Thomism states, "Grace does not take away nature; it restores nature."

Villanova Playbox Presents Duprey's, "The Gargoyle"

"The Gargoyle," an original script by Richard A. Duprey, will be presented by the Villanova University Playbox on December 11-13 and December 18-19 at 8:30 p.m.

Mr. Duprey, chairman of the Villanova Theatre Department, based the play on a short story which he wrote under the same title. It is the story of Anton Droller, a dwarfed circus clown, who finally finds meaning in a life plagued by a feeling of alienation from the rest of the world.

The play is pervaded by the humor and pathos of the circus atmosphere and also filled with a festive quality particularly appropriate to the Christmas holiday season.

James Mason, graduate assistant in the Villanova Theatre Department, will play the lead role of Anton. Major roles are portrayed by Frank Broderick, Prudence Barry, and Bob Mathews. Others in the cast include Brian Morgan, Joe Linsalata, Paul Norton, Carole Hodgson, Mary Moesel, Kenneth Resinski, Judy Stone, John Crosson, and Al De Cotiis.

"The Gargoyle" will be directed by Thomas F. Nevins and designed by Mr. Duprey. Reservations may be made by calling the box office from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The panel will consist of Tom Krause, moderator; Essa Abed, Sophomore Arts student; Matt Roche, Junior English major; Walt Baginsky, Sophomore Arts student. The present-day concern of our society about the possible effects of thermonuclear war will also be mentioned.

All students and faculty are invited to attend the symposium.

The society's schedule for the second semester will also be presented to its members at this meeting. Guest speakers and informal literary gatherings are planned for the coming semester.

Unique Lynx Features Poems, Short Stories, Oil Artwork

The Lynx, Villanova's literary magazine, will go on sale January 4. This first issue of the year will feature short stories and poems by students some of whom have previously written for the Lynx.

Recent graduates such as John Brown, Garrett Evans and H. Patric Voelker have also written for this issue.

One of the articles a poem by Evans, former Lynx Editor, now studying at Sheffield University in England, was apparently inspired by the student teacher relationship of Evans and the poet — critic William Empson who currently teaches at Sheffield.

Voelker who now lives in Greenwich Village, writes on the death of a dancer whom he saw immediately before and after his death.

A first in this issue will be a poem by the only full blooded Appache at Villanova, Gene Mitutanayme from Phoenix, Arizona.

Art Work

Among the many pieces of art work is an oil panting by Jim Schleck, and an impressionistic cover design by John Gerowski

The price of the Lynx will remain a quarter and will be sold in the Pie Shoppe and the lobby of the Library.

Untermeyer Speaks On Reading Habits At Villanova Forum

by Bob Fennel

Louis Untermeyer, famed poet, critic and anthologist, spoke before the Villanova Forum on Thursday, Dec. 3 in the Field House. His topic was "What Americans Read and Why."

Using personably subtle humor, Untermeyer began with a short autobiographical sketch in which he characterized himself as ". . . one of DeWitt Clinton high schools most notorious drop-outs."

He introduced his topic by stating that Americans read for basically two purposes; one is escape from the cares and worries of life and the other is the reading one does to learn or rather, ". . . to participate in life."

He cited a statistic that 80 per cent of what Americans read is printed in magazines rather than books. These magazines articles are meant to be little more than aspirin, temporary relief from the headaches of life.

This idea of escape, said Untermeyer, was prominent in the Romantic trend of writing which dominated American literature until twenty or thirty years ago. Today we have a more realistic approach to life. This shows the emergence of an adult attitude toward literature.

The child dreams, always searching for the fulfillment of the world of "make-believe." As he grows up he learns to face reality. In this way the American people have adopted a realistic attitude which is at times extreme.

He used the analogy of the pendulum which swings from one extreme to the other, its range growing smaller and smaller until it rests at a central point. Eventually, said Untermeyer, American literature will achieve a blend of the Romantic and Realistic schools.

Head to Come Here

In a recent edition a proposal was set forth for the construction, here at Villanova, of a Culture center, ". . . to provide a stimulus for the arts," to ". . . include facilities for numerous concerts," and to ". . . furnish the students with a place to pursue their theatrical ambitions."

Since then several facts have been brought to light which reveal both the need and urgency for such a project.

Last April 16, the Mainline Times reprinted a letter written by Leopold Stokowski, following his performance here at the Field House. Mr. Stokowski was "struck by the fact" that no concert hall exists on the Mainline.

His words provided the needed impetus for movements which have since reached notable dimensions. A Mainline Committee for a Culture Center was formed, and an Arts Forum was founded.

Along the Mainline are situated eight colleges, one University, and a citizenary for incomparable esteem and wealth. The need for an arts center is obvious.

On campus, the theatre in Vasey Hall has been transformed from an auditorium into a classroom. The Field House, needless to say, is a sports center and, though inadequate even in this respect, so it should remain.

The University informs us that no plans are currently under consideration for a culture center of any sort. The reasons are obvious: we cannot afford such a luxury at this time.

We feel, however, that this is not a luxury, but rather, for a large University, a necessity. The time is right to bring such plans at least under consideration. Villanova cannot afford to be without such a center.

Edmund Burke once said "You can never plan the future by the past".

Letters To The Editor

To The Editor

Let us take a deeper look into two premises of the Belle Air in their exclusion of all but a few "general interest" organizations (the SGA, WWVU, and some publications) from the 1965 yearbook.

First, just what, or who, defines general interest, or to what extent a particular organization serves the University as a whole? A Fascist or Communist government demands that every element of its society be openly and primarily dedicated and primarily dedicates to the whole society; individual or seemingly specialized interests are not tolerated. Now the Belle Air seems to be applying the same standards to a university, even though these standards are a contradiction of the nature of a university.

Can it be said that those few organizations the Belle Air will feature actually represent Villanova? This assumption is absurd. If this University has the diversified interests that can initiate and maintain over sixty clubs, how can the eleven or so most general (or it it the most prestige-laden?) possibly be representative? Each individual club, by itself, may show only one small part of Villanova. But the combination of all these small parts shows the essence of a university — the stimulation of thought and activity in all fields. It is this combination, and this essence, that the Belle Air deems unimportant.

In the past, these club pictures have been dull; just groups of people with names under them — one picture with many captions. The fault for this lack of imagination lies as much with the individual organizations as with the Belle Air photographers. But the Belle Air can not tolerate any break from uniformity, hence the temptation toward better club pictures has been conquered by simply removing these pictures.

And so the 1965 Belle Air will be more unified, so we are told. But just whom is this so-called unity supposed to impress? If non-Villanovans receive a favorable impression of the University from the yearbook, some good has been accomplished, but this is not the purpose of a yearbook. The measure of the Belle Air is not the opinions of those who know of Villanova only through its track and basketball teams, and care less, but the memories it rekindles in the graduates ten, twenty, or more years after the yearbook appears.

The Belle Air must not only be a story told by the class of 1965, it must be a story told to the class of 1965, summing up for the graduating class their college years. If the Belle Air fails in this, no words of praise from those not connected with Villanova can justify the Belle Air calling itself a yearbook. And if the Belle Air excludes the vital element of diversity in college activities, as they plan to do, then from where will these meaningful words of praise come?

In Defense Of BELLE AIR

by Bob Williams, Editor-in-Chief, The Belle Aire

The Belle Air has set a precedent this year by meeting its first deadline on time, by having a semblance of organization, by having the largest number of senior pictures taken, and by creating a controversy that has touched even the here-to-fore unactive and uninterested Villanovan.

This said person or persons so ably circulated flyers throughout the campus which describe this year's Belle Aire as "useless" . . . flyers which, by the way, were not approved by the Student Union committee of the S.G.A. although appeared they were.

Despite the protests of the unknown pamphleteer, it is untrue that only eleven groups will be represented in the yearbook. Following the trend of other university and college yearbooks throughout the country, this year's Belle Air will include coverage of all organizations on campus, giving special emphasis to those that gave direct service to the entire student body.

These are: Blue Key, Spirit Committee, WWVU, Lynx, Concept, Belle Air, Villanovan, Photo Department, V.U. Band and Singers and the Women's Glee Club.

It was felt by the Editorial Board of the yearbook, in consultation with student and administration leaders in the field of student activities, that the major groups chosen are open to all members of the Villanova student body and that most of those who really are interested in student activities are in these groups. It is these activities, for the most part, that are truly extra-curricular. Many of the activities which will have the less extensive coverage are actually extensions of class activities, in that they are closely related to the students' field of study.

We honestly feel we have slighted no one. All seniors will continue to have activities that they have participated in (regardless of how actively or inactively) listed below their names in the senior section of the book, and all organizations will be mentioned. Often times specific small organizations will be mentioned within the Division section of the yearbook.

Because of our interest in the apearance of the overall book, and our experience in past years with handling so many groups, we feel that it is far better that these organizations get less but better coverage rather than haphazard pictures of small cliques who show up for the picture taking and nothing else.

From The President's Desk

by Tom Furst, President SGA

Anyone who attended Big Five basketball games in the Palestra last year recognizes, I am sure, the need for change in some of the so-called "expressions of spirit." The student officers of the city schools saw the need and acted on it, drawing up a set of regulations which will govern the spirit of the respective schools. Has it been successful thus far? The degree of cooperation between Villanova and St. Joe's to date would startle the average Villanovan.

One part of this resolution calls for co-cheering at Palestra doubleheaders. At such times the two school's cheerleaders shall aid each other in leading cheers. To those who consider this ridiculous, let me point to the NCAA basketball regionals in College Park, Maryland, three years ago. Villanova and St. Joseph's played different teams in a doubleheader. The Hawks cheered for the 'Cats, we reciprocated and anyone who was present knows the effect.

This type of co-operation exists in many other cities — just tune in almost any away Villanova game when there is a second game involved. There is no reason why this should in any way hurt the traditional rivalry of an inter — Big Five game, but if successful this program could make the Palestra even more devastating to visiting schools than it is now.

Coexistence And Communism

by William E. Miller

William Miller: The 1964 Republican candidate for vice-president. Graduated from Notre Dame University and Albany Law School of Union University Member of the committee on Judiciary and past chairman of the Republican National Committee.

The number one question in the 1964 campaign is: Shall we continue to preach accommodation of the Communists and coexistence and thus suffer one defeat after another as we fight the cold war on the Reds' terms; or shall we return to firmness and bolster the courage of the remaining free world.

The one sure way to prevent war in our time is to make sure that communism knows it cannot win a war if it starts one.

Wherever our strength has been applied, the enemy has yielded. And there has been no war as a result!

When our Marines landed in Lebanon in 1958, the world did not move closer to war. It moved, for a brief moment, closer to peace.

When our ships blockaded Cuba in 1962, we removed, for all too brief a moment, a bold Communist threat to the peace.

Surely aggressive moves will plague us again and again if we do not move resolutely in the future.

Threats

Cuba remains communism's open-door to Latin America.

Zanzibar has been newly opened as a side door to Africa.

Viet Nam threatens to be a revolving door in Southeast Asia.

Indonesia may be a trap door in the same area.

And, meatime, in the original heartland of freedom itself, in Europe, our NATO alliance teeters on the edge of disintegration.

If men who share such a heritage of freedom, such a heritage of history and such a history of conviction cannot agree even upon their common defense against a common enemy, then freedom's cause is sick indeed.

The tragedy is that it need not be! I refuse to believe for an instant that the break-up of NATO is inevitable, that the Western powers are doomed by forces of history to split and squabble, to be divided and conquered, that the days of Western civilization are numbered.

It is only Communist theory that reads history that way! And those who share the reading in any way have lost their fight at the outset — worse, they have lost their faith!

The Boat

Our generation, our nation, was not born to sit in easy-chair silence. The umbrella of false security is not the symbol we deserve. The plea of "Don't Rock The Boat" is not the slogan we deserve.

Either we seek the victory of freedom, the peace of freedom, or we are not worthy of the name American.

I implore all those who are concerned, all those who will listen to ask of the men who propose themselves for the responsibilities of foreign policy formulation — to ask of them a single question:

Ask what they think of Communism. Ask what they think of the profound crisis of the soul which produced it. Ask whether they are prepared to come to terms with it — or whether concretely they would oppose it.

Ask and demand an answer to that, for that is the question of war and peace in our time. It will be the question of tomorrow.

Sartre: Nihilism For Fun And For Profit!!

by Ron Javers

A man looks at himself. He realizes the fact of his own existence. He observes his breathing, moving, changing, pulsating body. He thus concedes those two terrible words, I AM. After admitting to the validity of his existence, he next asks himself why does he exist? Why am I alive, he asks. Why do I breathe? Why do I love, hate, laugh, and cry?

The man cannot answer his question. His existence then, is absurd. His life is a continuous chain of circumstancial experience based on nothing meaning nothing. The man's name is Jean-Paul Sartre and this year he has refused the coveted Nobel Prize. He said, 'It does not matter to me if I sign my books — Jean-Paul Sartre or Jean-Paul Sartre, winner of the Nobel Prize."

Limelight

What glorious detachment the man has! It is rare that public recognition or acclamation is granted a philosopher; and still rarer when that philosopher deems to refuse the honor.

Sartre chooses to ignore the clamoring of the multitudes it seems. He is more concerned with the absurdity of himself, than with the fame or notoriety it may accidentally bring him.

Jean-Paul Sartre is probably the most eloquent of the current crop (bumper crop) of "existentialist" auothors. Nowdays it seems fashionable to attribute this adjective to any author who wrires books of an essentially introspective nature. In short, everybody has suddenly become an existentialist. (The word seems so RIGHT at cocktail parties!)

Anybody Can Play

What has caused the rapid spread of this philosophy of existence? It has a divergent popular appeal, being quite adaptable and easily expounded in the novel or drama. It can be absorbed readily through these vehicles and doesn't require long-winded, highly complicated texts or treatises for its promulgation. In consequence anyone who has read one or two of Satre's popular works, consider himself fully aware of existentialism in all its intricacies and refinements.

The Works

Sartre's first and one of his most popular novels, La Nausee, was published in 1938. It deals with the adventures of one Antoine Roquentin, a philosophy teacher in a provincial town. The character Roquentin is obviously a representation of Sartre himself. The tone of the work gives a profound sense of the contingency and absurdity of all human existence.

Most of Sartre's plays and novels veritably drip with deviates and erotic episodes. The author expounds repeatedly that life is fundamentally absured must be lived, that man is "condemned to be free."

As in his precursors, Kiergegaard, Nietzsche, and more directly Martin Heidegger, there is much paradoxology in Sartre. The terminology in his more serious works is formidable. He never attempts to prove his reasoning as a logical case. Instead, he gives enigmatic glimpses into the total experience of a self-conscious being. He asks us to accept these glimpses as proof of his doctrine. He asks us not to reason but to continuously observe, not to think but to be aware. In effect, he asks too much. It is here that his whole system falls down before the gates of reason.

Influence

Existentialism, irrational and revolutionary as it seems to most legitimate philosophers, does have a considerable influence on contempory thought and literature. Jean-Paul Sartre has come full cycle in his conception of existence. He seems to repudiate himself with each new utterance. It appears that even he is not certain of the commitment his philosophy entails.

Sounds Of Note

By Bill McCloskey

Alas, the plot thickens.

A few weeks ago in this column I reported the imminent swap ordered by the FCC between WRCV/ Philadelphia and KYW/Cleveland. Now it turns out that the whole thing may be put off by as much as a year. The story goes like this.

About eight years ago Westinghouse traded its Philadelphia stations KYW Radio and WPTZ-TV to NBC for its Cleveland property. The FCC never was overly pleased with the deal, but it stood pending appeal after appeal. At one time there were allegations that NBC was withholding network programming from WPTZ until Westinghouse agreed to the trade.

Then about a year ago reports were that NBC entered into a deal with RKO-General to swap NBC's Philadelphia for RKO's Boston properties (WNAC). Now that the FCC has ordered NBC back to Cleveland RKO is getting mad that their deal cannot go through. RKO is appealing to the FCC. Now it appears RKO may be ready to rest its case.

While all of this is going on Westinghouse and NBC are not allowed to tell their personnel what changes are contempleted nor are permitted to look for personnel in their new city.

If the RKO attempt is successful look for another delay of about a year. If not, a source inside Westinghouse indicates KYW/Philadelphia will be on the air by January.

Meanwhile, a sourse close to WRCV says that the present radio staff of the station will remain under new ownership. It is speculated that Bill Bransome will hang on. As a real pro he will be able to adjust to any new policy. Reggie LaVonge will also be able to handle the expected rock format. The others ? ? ?

An' All That Jazz

by Barry Bornstein

Quite bugged that someone had switched the nob on our radio to AM-and even more bugged that what blared out was WIBG (Whailers, Illiterates, Beetles, and Gorillas), we bolted madly back to the scene of the crime to evacuate those foreign sounds-but then ! -and hit like Pearl Harbor on a Sunday in December, we stood mesmerized in our tracks-3 quick rolls of a twinkling piano, light refreshing twinge-and the emergence of an ever-so familar voice punctiliously freeing "another night-another moon . . ." Well it was Ray Charles, and the song was his latest-"MAKIN' WHOOPEE," an old standard. And it's untouchable. It is definitely not a rock-piece, but a profound and eternally pleasurable excursion into SOUL MUSIC (the best argument for the existence of a soul yet) set to a jazz piano. The humor and personality that are displayed in this track are amazingly unfathomable, uniquely captured in Ray's final salutation "you know what I was doin!" It's a top sound, probably available in single and album. And on WIGB yet!

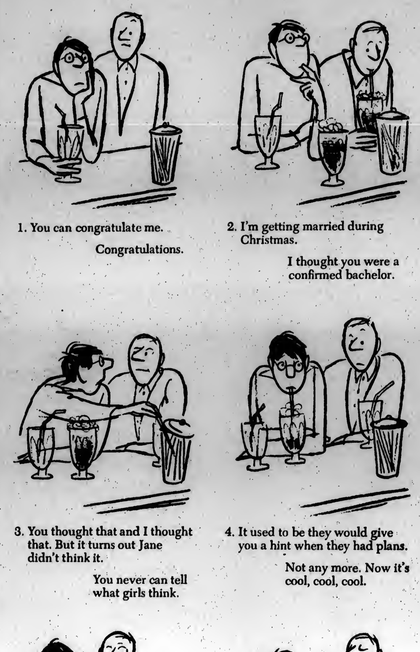
To most eyes, or, we guess in this case, EARS, it looked (sounded) like J. Edgar (Bergen) Hoover had won this week's HOT HORN AWARD by default, on the merit of his 4th grade level of verba hot-air blasts directed at Martin Luther King. "Hoov" blue a sour note to the tune of:



"Marty, I'm not a vibrant crier. But you're just the biggest liar."

However, not one to be outdone, that old cow-puncher from Johnson City, Texas came in with a late and discreet low blow. In the wake of all of last week's population-condensation in the Congo, L.B.J. went and appointed a South Carolinian, who believes in the "Southern system," as ambassador to Liberia. So we have a draw this week between two eminent hornblowers.

Songs Of The Times:

It was revealed that, in San Francisco there were so many WET PAINT signs that it got 400 votes in the election . . . ANOTHER SIGN: One week before the election, unsuccesful aspirant Goldwater bought time for a telecast on a Tuesday evening at 9:30. Mysteriously this time slot was changed to Wednesday night. The reason? The Republicans were afraid to compete with Peyton Place . . .

Student Congress Meeting

when speaking on the Congress or Senate door. This motion was passed.

For the first time this year, a motion was defeated on the Congress floor. Moore and Manfred wished to establish a Student Govenment Association suggestion service. With Brenden Brett forming the main opposition, the bill was defeated.

The next motion also made by Moore and Manfred dealt with a change in the SGA constitution, giving the Senate power to make judicial decisions concerning an individual member. Confusion arose over the interpretation of the constitution and the motion, after research has been done on it, will be voted upon at the next Congress meeting.

The last three motions were unanimously passed. The first, proposed by Tom Krause, requests the Administration to reconsider its policy of no cancellation of classes on snow days. The reasons given were the inadequacy of public transporation and the creation of confusion among students as to whether cuts will be excused.

The free day for the student body, chosen by the SGA at the meeting, will be April 21, the day when classes were to resume after Easter. An added provision was made to change the free day to the weekend of the NCAA finals in the event Villanova makes it to the finals.

Finally, Steve Friend moved that the SGA on behalf of the students extend both its praise and thanks to the players and coaches of the football team in recognition of their fine calibre ofplay and sportsmanship this year.

NOTICE

The following announcement is made by the Father President: "In order to obviate the confusion that arises whenever it snows, it has been decided to adopt a policy of no cancellation of classes. It is felt that with the large resident population and the availability of public transportation most students and faculty members should be able to get to the campus. This policy will be in effect for Graduate Studies and University College."

Villanova Swimmers Secure Second Place In ECAC Relay Meet

By Joe Maffongelli

Paced by captain and All-America Rick Girdler, the Villanova mermen finished second to mighty Maryland in the annual E.C.A.C. relay carnival. The early season affair, held at Rutgers University on December 5, saw them shattering seven meet records. Five of these marks were topped by Maryland and two others fell to the 'Cats.

The inspiration provided by Girdler was evidenced the fact that he was a member of all three VU relays which gained first pale decisions. Also, two of these events were the 'Cats record breakers. These were the 400 yd. freestyle relay — 3:19.4 — and the 500 yd. crescendo relay — 4:17.0.

Girdler's splits in these events were 47.1 and 1:50.9 respectively According to Ray Curran, team manager, "Girdler is picking up where McDonogh left off."

The 'Cats picked up a second place finish in the 400 yd. backstroke relay. Bill Livingood paced the team, also composed of Sullivan, Frey, and Doyle, with his 56.7 clocking in the anchor leg.

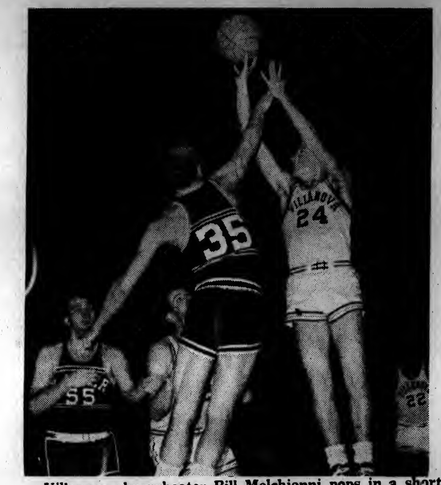
More Seconds

The 'Cats picked up another "red ribbon" in the 400 yd. medley relay. In this event sophomore Joe Parell turned in a 51.2 timing in the final stretch. Livingwood, Herr, and Sperr, made up the rest of team.

The Blue (fish) and White garnered thirds in the 200 yd. medley and 400 yd. breakstone-butterfly relays to complete their scoring in the swimming events.

Bob Biese and Bill Bohrmann gave the 'Cats 422.6 points in the low board diving competition. This was enough for a third place finish behind Rutgers and Maryland.

In providing such a good account of themselves the 'Cats qualifield in eight of the nine events and amassed seventhy points compared to 100 for Maryland and forty-six for Rutgers.



Maybe Next Time

The unavoidable absence of Tom Brennan and Roger Guthrie was unforunate. Their presence may make a difference when the Main Liners again clash with Maryland, December 9, in what promises to be one of the best dual meets in the country.

In Review

by Rusty Miller

Last Saturday night a mass of humanity that falls under the general category of college sports fans gathered at Penn's Palestra (9000 bodies under a roof) to witness the biggest college double-header in the nation. Those who were fortunate enough to have seats below "the cloud" were treated to eighty minutes of outstanding basketball. Those unfortunates who purchased their tickets late will be relieved to know that a movement is under way to have the concessionaires rent gas masks and goggles. A typical Palestra night, ten people were treated for smoke inhalation, twenty-five for eye burns, and three for nose bleeds.

In the first game of the double-header the boy-wonders of that all-time great jinx known as Sports Illustrated were served up a tasty dish of crow by—who else, but the Hawk. Once again the Philadelphia sports fan had impressed on him the calibre of coaching in the Big Five. Jack Ramsey exhibited a team that, with any kind of luck might even be mentioned by the aforementioned magazine this week. Ramsey, who over the years has proven himself one of the greatest coaches in the country, took twelve men, only one of whom (Matt Goukas) promised to be a college standout, judging by his high school performance, and whipped up a team that must be considered a threat to any national power.

The second contest, of more immediate interest, proved a field day for the backcourt men. Steve (the machine) Thomas was fantastic, shooting off balance, with either hand from anywhere on the court, driving at full speed and changing position without breaking stride. But, as one of our more distinguished Philadelphia sports writers said, "he was no more flambouyant than his backcourt opponent, Bill Melchionni."

Melchionni was joined in the backcourt by a man who hasn't been seen around Villanova for three years. Someone should have hung a "Welcome Home George" sign in the dressing room because George Leftwich of the famous Leftwich, Jones and White returned that night with his confidence and his "eye" under his arm, ready to play ball like he used to.

During the double-header a strange phenomenon was observed, Villanova fans openly cheering for the Hawk and the St. Joe Boosters (half obscured by the cloud as they were) actually cheering as a body for the Cats. Pride in Big Five basketball seems to have an overwhelming and permeating effect. Let it continue!

Cross-Country Team Finishes Third In IC4A University Championship

By Buzz Langan

Villanova finished third in the 56 annual IC4A University Division Cross-country championship.

Georgetown placed first and Notre Dame finished second.

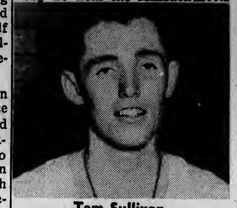
Dave Hyland

Georgetown's Tom Lynch five mile tour time eclipsed the 24:46.8 previous record set by Villanova's Vic Zowalak last year.

Villanova placed two: sixth place Dave Hyland, and Lewis Kotekas who was 25. Tom Sullivan, Noel Carroll and Marty Ferko finished 27, 34, and 45 respectively.

Hyland started slow because of an injured foot and at the end he could not catch the five leaders. The cold weather seemed to upset the whole team except Hyland.

On November 23, the NCAA Cross Country Championships were run at Western Michigan University. Villanova finished 12 with Western Michigan taking top honors. Dave Hyland finished 15, and by doing so won himself All-American Honors. Tom Sullivan finished 25 and Lew Kotekas finished 26.



Hyland who won All-American Honors hadn't run since October 15, because of an injured achilles tendon. None of the eastern teams performed well due to the fact that the meet was run in heavy snow, a condition which the eastern teams are not accustomed to.

Hyland of the Wildcats and Joe Lynch have been having a head-on battle which should come to the fore in the indoor two mile run. The problem is that no one knows if the indor track meets will be held because of the feud between the NCAA and the AAU.

The Freshman have the top Cross Country Team in the nation. Every four years seems to be the big year for the Wildcats in Cross Country.

The Wildkittens finished first in the Freshman Cross Country with a total of 69 points with Messenger 1, Patrick 1, Sanborn 19, Sellito 25, and Hamilton 31.

The indoor track season is tentatively slated to begin January 16 with the Massachusetts

Tom Sullivan

K. of C. Meet in the Boston Garden, and it will run through March 19, with a total of 14 meets.

one of the finest shooters in the nation as he proceeded to hit from every single angle on the court with his unorthodox, off-balance shots. Were it not for key baskets by Melchionni and Washington in the closing minutes, the Muleteers might have taken a victory back to Ohio.

In all, Thomas riped the nets for 29 points, connecting on 13 of 24 attempts, while hitting 3 for 3 from the charity line. But, if there was little doubt that the 6-0 guard was an All-American, the same opinion held true for Melchionni. "Cyclops" racked up 28 points, was perfect on all 6 free throws, passed off 6 assists and directed the 'Cat attack flawlessly.

Erickson also turned in another fine job with 10 points and 10 rebounds. He also steadied the 'Cat offense when it began to get ragged. Perhaps Kraft was most pleased with the play of sophomore Soens. The 6-7 star from Penn Charter dropped in 16 points while hauling down 10 retrieves. "He played a great game, especially considering that this was his first real test. I couldn't ask for much more from him tonight."

As in the Princeton game, Washington turned in a lackluster performance, grabbing only 9 rebounds. Kraft noted that despite Thomas' performance, the 'Cats would have had a much easier time were it not for the extra shots the Musketeers were getting. "They scored at least 8 baskets on taps and rebound shots," he said. "We were really weak on our defensive boards. I don't know what's the matter with Jimmy."

In the campaign opener on December 1, the 'Cats rolled past an out-manned Scranton squad as Washington paced the attack with 2 0points.

Wildcats Nip Princeton In Overtime, Xavier Falls In Palestra Opener

By Steve Freind

Villanova's hustling Wildcats fought to their third straight victory on Monday, rallying to edge Princeton's charged-up Tigers 61-60 in a heart-stopping overtime battle before a sellout Field House crowd. Three days before, the Kraft-men made their Palestra debut before another capacity throng by holding off a late Xavier rally to edge the Musketeers 93-89 despite a fantastic shooting performance by All-American Steve Thomas. In the opener of that doubleheader, St. Joe's added another gold start to the Big Five cage ledger by derailing No. 1 ranked Davidson, 77-64.

Bill Bradley led a hungry herd of Tigers into the Field House last Monday and the boys from the Ivy League almost left with an upset. Employing a deliberate obense against the Villanova zone, Princeton jumped to a 28-25 lead at the half. Only Eric Erickson's shooting kept the 'Cats in the game as the self made senior star turned in his second straight standout performance. In the second stanza, Bill Melchionni regained his second torch but the 'Cats were unable to open up any kind of a lead. With 1:45 left in the tilt, the count was knotted at 54-all and Princeton had the ball. The Tigers tried to set up a shot but the 'Cats zone remained air-tight and Princeton coach Butch Von Breda Kolff called for a time out with 18 seconds left. It was here that Jack Kraft pulled off a coaching gem.

Villanova's Eric Erickson hooks over the outstretched hand of Xavier defender Carrol Williams as 'Cats downed the Musketeers 93-89.

When play resumed the Tigers found Villanova in a man-to-man defense for the first time all night. Flustered, the Tigers called for another time out, Kraft then switched his boys back into the zone and at this point the Tigers were ready to drop back ten and punt. Unable to set-up a decent shot, Bradley forced a jumper from the corner at the buzzer, but his attempt fell short and the game went into overtime.

Bill Soens, who hauled down 11 debounds and showed no signs of sophomore jitters, netted three quick points on a beautiful driving hook and a foul shot before fouling out. The Tigers countered with a two pointer but Melchionni's jumper seemed to ice the victory. But Tiger Don Rodenbach hit with a stab, Pete Coleman's pass was intercepted for an easy layup and Princetor led 60-59 with 40 seconds remaining. With the poise of a pro, Melchionni calmly drove drove downcourt and dropped in a duce to put the 'Cats back in lead. When Rodenbach was called for walking, the Cardiac Kids were home free.

Kraft had praise for Bradley after the game. "I am absolutely elated that we do not have to face Bradley again. Is he better than before? No, he couldn't be any better. He's the best."

Kraft also was pleased with his own All-American prospect, Billy Melchionni. "He's a great ball player. He'll lead our team the same way Jones did." The junior deadeye led all scorers with 24 points, hitting 8 of 16 attempts. Erickson added 15 while the incomparable Bradley paced Princeton with 23.

One disappointing aspect of the contest was the play of co-captain Ji mWashington. The 6-7 leaper had a miserable 2 for 13 shooting night and lacked any kind of enthusiasm under the boards. Consequently, the 'Cats were out-rebounded 47-40.

Xavier

Playing before a screaming Palestra crowd of 9200, the Kraftmen put on a torrid first half shooting display, then held on for dear life as Steve Thomas ignited a Xavier charge which almost caught the 'Cats. On the shooting of Melchionni, Erickson and George Leftwich, whose performance with reminiscent of the George Leftwich of three years ago, the 'Cats raced to a 58-44 halftime, before Thomas began to warm up.

When he did, the crowd saw

Freindly Foolishness

A Final Tribute

By Steve Freind

A champion likes to end his career in a blaze of glory. Like Ted Willilams hitting a homer his last time at bat, Marciano battering Moore and then retiring, or, more locally, Wally Jones scoring 34 points against Princeton at Raleigh and leaving the court with the cheers of his adoring fans ringing in his ears.

This is the kind of finale the Villanova football team deserved, especially the boys who would not be back next year to don a Blue and White uniform for Alex Bell. Instead, their career ended in a hotel lobby in Buffalo, losing their last game, and an invitation to the Liberty Bowl, to the weather.

It's not fair what happened to Bell's Bombers. Maybe it's a trite line, but they deserve a better fate. These were the boys who battled their heart out all season to bring a winner to the Main Line, the boys who played the pride of of Boston to stand still on that November afternoon.

Exit A Legend

It's hard to single out any one man for special recognition. They were all great. But one name in particular will be remembered around Villanopa for a long time. Last year there appeared in this column an article entitled "Exit A Legend" concerning the final game of Wally Jones.

The same title can be applied to the last time Al Atkinson pulled on his pads to lead the 'Cats into battle. There's not enough that can be said about Al. He was everything—athlete, gentleman and a tremendous person. Suffice it to say that the sight of Number 74 breaking up everything in sight will always remain a cherished memory. In fact, the opinion here is that his number should be retired. No one will ever be able to wear it in quite the same way.

The 'Cats had a wonderful season. It should have been capped by a trip to Atlantic City. The only ones who will profit by the selection of Utah are the boys from West Virginia. Ever since that night in the Palestra three years ago, the Mountaineers have made it a point to avoid Villanova. The Dudley spectacle promises to be another lackluster affair. Bell's Bombers could have changed that, but the Liberty Bowl board seems to have a short memory. The sight of Villanova battling Oregon State on even terms seems to have been forgotten.

So now the basketball campaign is in full swing and the memories of the Pony Backfield are rapidly drifting away. Four of the members of Bell's '64 edition have been gobbled up by the pros—a school record. But there are a lot of rugged Wildcats still around, waiting for next year and another shot at a perfect season. They may get it, for Bell still has quite a bit of talent in his stable, but they'll have to go some to match this year's bunch of champions.

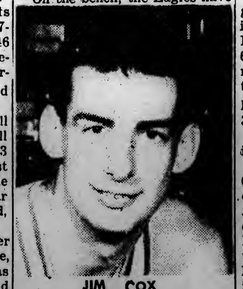
If Jack Kraft's charges can match their gridiron counterparts in spirit and guts, there will be a March victory party in Portland.

Wildcats Tackle American Thursday, Host Toledo In Field House Tuesday

By Jerry Bruderle

Villanova travels to Baltimore, Md., tomorrow to play American University, and then entertains Toledo in the Field House on Tuesday in a week which includes a rare saturday off-night.

American was swamped in its opening game by Syracuse, 127-67. Then they dropped a 71-46 decision to Buffalo before defeating Adelphi 84-69 last Saturday. The Eagles also entertained Lafayette last night.



This year, the Eagles will be led by co-captains Ben Still and Jim Buffler. Still stands 6-3 and scored 11.2 per game last year. He had 13 points in the 'Cats 84-49 victory of a year ago. Buffler, a six foot guard, averaged 7.1 per game.

BoBo Farrer a 6-5 transfer from Phoenix Junior College, was rated in pre-season drills as "the team's best shot." He and Still, in the forward slots, should do most of the scoring.

At center will be 6-6 Jack Townsend, the tallest member of American's squad. Townsend can not be judged as much of a scorer off last season's 4.1 average, but his rebounding is needed, and his scoring will improve as he acquires experience.

Tony Jiorle will be Buffler's sidekick at guard. He stands at six foot even and scored at a 6.5 clip last season.

On the bench, the Eagles have

JIM COX

6-5 Jim Wendt, 6-4 Howard Schater, and 6-5 Bob Bartin ready to play the frontcourt. Gary Yates and Bill Mason, both 6-3, fill in at guard. None of these reserves scored over 3.5 per game last year.

Toledo arrives this year minus Larry Jones, their high-scoring honors. Backensto, who averaged 32 points for the freshmen last season, scored 14 before fouling out late in the game.

The Rockets defeated Kentucky Wesleyan 76-71, in their opening game, and last night hosted Wittenberg.

In the Kenstucky game, Aston tallied 18 points to garner top guard of a year ago, now playing for the Philadelphia 76ers. Instead they depend upon their 6-8 center, Bob Aston and sophomore hotshot Bob Backensto for their offensive punch.

Toledo is strong up front with 6-5 Jim Cox at one forward, and either Jerry Delong or John Ayling, both 6-4, in the other corner. Cox averaged 15 points last year and assists Aston in the rebounding. Sophomore Len LaFla, 6-7, fills in if anyone gets into foul trouble.

The other guard is Bob Williams, who, at 6-2, is the smallest starter.

Middle East Scholar Khouri Speaks At Political Lecture

By Bob Elschner

Dr. Fred Khouri spoke last Wednesday at the Political Science Department Lecture Series. The Villanova Professor has been at Villanova since 1951. He has just returned from a three-year visit to the Middle East where he taught at the American University in Beirut, Lebanon. His most recent publication was "Review in Politics."

In beginning his lecture, "American Foreign Policy and the Middle East," the lecturer sketched the recent historical relationship between the U. S. and the Middle East. He stated that before World War II the American interest in this specific area was largely cultural and missionary due to the isolationist policy of the U. S.

As a result of the non-political interest "America was highly trusted," he continued. At the end of the war, Dr. Khouri explained, "respect and trust of the U. S. took serious blows." By taking positive action during the war, the Western power has "to step on some toes." Such action resulted in the American foreign policy facing dilemmas.

The dilemmas faced by the U.S. are the following, he continued. The legal and practical need to maintain relationship with these governments no matter how corrupt they are, is the first difficulty the American government faces, the professor mentioned. He said that the Eisenhower Administration made a mistake when it just supported governments pro-western disregarding neutral nations. He claimed that the government was deceived when it believed that once an alliance was made by the Middle East a security was enforced.

Another dilemma faced by the U.S., the professor continued, is that the U.S. seeks to establish stability in the area and at the same time to recognize the need for a change. If change does not come quickly, Dr. Khouri claimed that the people will turn to the extremists. Americans must come to realize that instability will have to exist in the Middle East and that the people there are "not going to move in exactly the same way we did."

The American Military position in the Middle East is a serious problem, Dr. Khouri explained. He believes that we are establishing military bases where we are not wanted. It would be better if we withdraw them and "win the people by showing them that we have something in common with them."

In his concluding remarks, the professor emphasized that Ambassadors to the Middle East should be stationed there for a longer period of time than they are now.

Female Cheerleaders Appearance Secure For 'Big Five' Opener

By Bob Fennel

Female cheerleaders will make their debut on Friday January 8 in the Palestra when the 'Cats encounter LaSalle in their "Big Five" opener.

This innovation in the cheerleading squad is the result of a motion passed before the SGA on November 11, this year. Its enactment was delayed by the administration for various reasons. Among them was the selection of a time when they could be assured that a proper decorum would be maintained. Secondly, arrangements had to be made for uniforms.

The uniforms have not been disclosed at present. However it is expected that they will consist of blue skirts and sweaters and white sneakers.

No Surprise

The seven members of the female cheerleading squad have been practicing in anticipation of this announcement. They are: Betsy Grabowski, Lorraine Farino, Jan Zeller, Sue Quinn, Phyllis Greyson, Cevyn Murphy and Jane Holtz.

SGA Holds Meeting Tonight To Consider Seven Motions

By Tom Krause

Tonight the Student Government Association will deliberate on seven motions dealing with a sidewalk running from Lancaster Pike to the Philadelphia and Western Railway station, an extension in the time period for course changes, and the seating of NFCCS in the SGA. The meeting will begin at 6:30 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Unanimously recommended for passage was the motion introduced by Steve Freind and Bill McCloskey at the Student Senate meeting on December 7. The duo moved that the SGA ask the Administration to pave a sidewalk running from the eastbound station of the Stadium stop of the Philadelphia and Western Railway Station to Lancaster Pike.

The next motion proposed by Friend and Jim Griffin asks the SGA to support a policy whereby students can continue to change courses after pre-registration and registration, if there is good reason for this and within a reasonable period of time.

Return to Middle Ages

Jim Griffin explained that the makers wish to return to the Medieval concept of a university where students and teachers had a close relationship. This relationship would be created when students have a chance to choose their own professors.

At this meeting, Bob Dean requested that committees be established to examine, organize, and codify all properly approved past legislation and rulings of the SGA and of the former Student Council which may be of a long-standing or permanent nature. This motion was unanimously recommended for passage.

An enlightening motion by Bob Beattie proposed that the SGA request the Administration to consider illuminating the spires of the chapel in lieuof, or in addition to, the present floodlighting of the steeple atop Dougherty Hall. This motion was recommended for passage.

A motion by Beattie requesting the Vice-President for Financial Affairs to direct all offices under his jurisdiction to afford all tax exemptions and refunds to students was tabled at the meeting.

Dave Moore moved that the SGA establish a committee to inspect and regulate the contents of all campus publications to insure that these contents are in conformity with the will of the student body. This bill was unanimously recommended for defeat.

NFCCS

Jim Whalen, chairman of the Elections Committee, proposed that the National Federation of Catholic College Students be admitted into the SGA with a half-vote. John Shade, speaking for this motion, gained unanimous recommendation from the Senate.

The final motion was also Whalen's as he proposed that the SGA seat the Girl's Glee Club with a half-vote. It was recommended for passage.

All students are urged to attend this meeting and exercise their privilege of participation in student government.

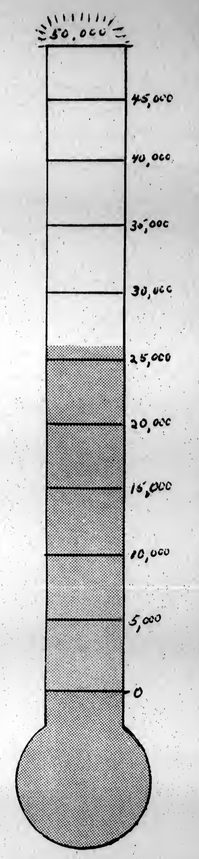
Parents' Program Sets $50,000 This Year For Campus Progress



The Parents' Program, designed to raise funds for improvements on the Villanova campus was initiated by the Villanova Development Office in 1960. Since no particular goals were set, the amount received never exceeded $10,000 per year.

Then last year, under the chairmanship of Mr. Louis C. Stengel, the president of the Manhattan Shirt Company, and with Pete Federico apponted full time director, a goal of $25,000 for improving the library was set. The drive realized $31,000, and won the National Award for Success in higher education fund raising — one of three awarded last year.

Cronin Chairman

This year the chairmanship of the drive has passed to Mr. John D. Cronin, an executive vice-president of the Freehold Raceway. Based on last year's success and the needs of the campus at the present time, the goal was raised to $50,000 this year, over half of which was received in the first month of the drive.

Cronin and Federico thank those who have contributed and urge those who have not to do so. The amount is not important.

NFCCS Regains SGA Recognition; Members Active In Social Workings

The Student Senate unanimously recommended for passage a motion proposed by James Whelan, chairman of the election committee.

It proposed that the "National Federation of Catholic College Students be admitted to the Student Council with one-half vote."

Passed Unanimously

The motion passed unanmiously and the NFCCS is now looking for a similar happening in the Student Congress. This means that the NFCCS will be represented in the student government of Villanova, and will also be the representative of Villanova in the National Congress.

The NFCCS organization is a union of students of Catholic Member Colleges, consisting of of some 15 regions. The NFCCS is a communion link among all Catholic colleges in the United States. It unites through four secretariats, each providing its own news services and through National Congress held in the Summer of each year. These secretariats operate in four areas — student, religious, social action, and international affairs.

NFCCS was organized in 1937 by Catholic college students and by a member of the Youth Department of the National Catholic Welfare Conference.

NFCCS programs deal with such problems as civil rights, race relations, foreign affairs, and religious affairs.

At present the Villanova chapter of NFCCS is involved in "work-camp projects" in Philadelphia with the Catholic Community Relations Commission. This series of projects consists of painting and repairing homes for large, low income families who would otherwise be homeless.

Social Work

NFCCS is also involved in social work in Northeast Philadelphia through the Casa Del Carmen charity house, run by the Sisters of the Blessed Trinity. The activities here include everything from painting to First-Aid.

At St. John's Orphange, also in the City, Federation members are running a "Big Brothers" program. This involves keeping 85 young boys busy during the winter months.

Similar to last year, NFCCS is going to aid V.A.M.P. in their fund raising drive. This year tiger tails are being sold by Sam Votta, a member of NFCCS to raise money.

Anyone interested can join in 103 Corr Hall on Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. for V.A.M.P., and the same room on Thursday at 4:30 p.m. for NFCCS.

State YR Chairman Addresses Villanova GOP Organization

by Jim Brennon

John Acton, newly elected state chairman of the Young Republicans, recently addressed the Villanova Collegiate Young Republicans.

Acton spoke about state Young Republican Clubs and Villanova's place in the organization.

He explained that Villanova has two votes in the Montgomery County organization and is entitled to send two representatives to the county meetings.

The State Chairman went on to give some prospects for the Republican Party. He said that they have to agree on principles in which all can believe and to rebuild the Party from the bottom.

Interest

He said that there seems to be a real interest in the Party and that a three point program has been established in Pennsylvania.

The first aspect of this program will be a leadership training school in Harrisburg from January 21-23. Governor Scranton will give an address at this educational activity, and there will be discussion groups concerning polls, race relations minority groups and other political problems.

Registration

There will also be an increased drive on registration. Acton stated that this is the most effective way one can help the party. Continuing, he said it is good to contribute ideas but these ideas are useless unless you can produce votes to back them.

In giving the reasons for the existence of Young Republican Clubs, he said their two most important functions are to serve as a training group for political workers and to procure new members.

Acton ended by declaring that if everyone does his job a strong Republican Party can be formed that will help towards the betterment of our nation.

Avante-Garde VU Drama Gives Trio Of Brief Plays

The Belle Masque Drama Society is presently choosing a play to do for the spring semester that will compare to the last productions of The Typist, Masks of Angles, and The Lesson.

Judging from the response of the audience and the critique after each performance, the plays were successful in providing an evening of the Avant-garde theatre, over the week-end of Nov. 20.

The house was completely full on Friday night, and Saturday night extra chairs had to be provided to accomodate all those who came to see the show. Approximately 20 people were eventually turned away from the door Saturday because of lack of seats.

Due to the impressive performance given by the cast, both Pennsylvania Military College and The Main Point, a local Coffee house-night club, has invited the society to bring the three plays to their stages. But because of the rehersals needed for presentation on a proscenium stage, the society has turned down PMC's invitation. However plans are now being made to present the plays on the stage at The Main Point during the month of March.

The club's president, Rick Galli personally thanked all who contributed to the success of the production and especially Mike Sutherland for his work as production manager.

With the written approval of their Dean, Villanova University students may enroll in the pre-session.

In accordance with the recent change of policy regarding transfer of credit, credit earned by Villanova students in the Villanova Summer Session is applicable to a student's cumulative average; credits earned elsewhere are not.

Russian Scholar Dr. Procko Speaks On Khruschev Ouster

Dr. Bohdan Procko, an associate professor of History at Villanova University, spoke on "Khruschev's Ouster — What Next?" on Thursday December 10. Dr. Procko, who has been at Villanova since 1949, is a scholar on Eastern European and Russian history.

Dr. Procko treated his topic from an historical point of view with special emphasis on the succession of Soviet Party leadership. Soviet Governmental and Communist Party structure were discussed at the outset to clarify official Russian succession.

Dr. Procko then drew an analogy between the circumstances and events after the ouster of Lenin and Stalin to the recent ouster of Khruschev. In both cases, a secret coup took place resulting in collective party leadership by several men.

However, with historical precedent as a basis, Dr. Procko assumed that the present collective leadership will eventually evolve into single leadership similar to Kruschev's. The reason given for Ghruschev's retirement was old age and poor health, but as Dr. Procko brought out, it probably had a great deal more to do with personality conflict among Soviet leaders and the loss of prestige in the Cuban crisis.

In conclusion, Dr. Procko said that Soviet policies will now remain basically the same as they were under Khruschev because of the impossibility of again making Russia a military state as it was under Lenin and Stalin.

Christmas Vs. Christmas

In a few days we will be going home for a vacation to commemorate a holyday. Yes, it is essentially a holyday and not a holiday.

It is a sad fact that too many people in this country do not understand or do not desire to understand the true meaning of Christmas—that is the birth of the Savior, the Son of God.

Many of us are lost in a sinking boat on a sea of materialism. We cater to the gluttonous wants of the body and ignore the hunger of the soul.

One has only to go to a large shopping center to see this exemplified. We have viewed two such centers in different states, where the decorations were most extensive, ranging from reindeer and Santa Claus to tinseled fur trees. But what of a Nativity scene—was there one? No, of course not!

Perhaps such a scene would interfere with the pseudo-philosophy of the Madison Avenue magicians to create a mania to buy, purchase or procure. For after all what is Christmas to some people but a time to receive gifts.

Then there is the usual sign, "Xmas trees for Sale." We guess some individuals feel it would be too costly to use the extra materials necessary to have the word Christ appear.

Christmas cards are another disappointment. How often do you receive a card depicting a fat snowman instead of a scene at Bethlehem?

Parents could help to overcome this trend in the future by stressing to their young children the significance of the birth of Christ and the unimportance of the present-laden Santa Claus.

We, ourselves, must remain cognizant of the facts and not get lost in a maze of worldliness.

'Hands Off, Mr. D'Ortona'!

By Barry Bornstein

It seems evident that lately the new vogue in politics is to wave the "bloody pocketbook," yell "thrift," and massacre a budget request, regardless of its validity. Starting with "LBJ and the lightbulbs" to McNamara and the military bases, it's materialized into an avalanche. And two weeks ago the "new vogue" reared its ugly head, here in Philadelphia, in the person of Paul D'Ortona, president of city council.

This newly-arrived advocate of "save" vented his energies in attacking the 1965 budget of the Philadelphia Board of Education. To the Board and its budget, politician D'Ortona affixed such terms as "stupid" "beyond reason," beside personally attack School Superintendent C. Taylor Whittier and School Board President J. Harry LaBrum.

Since the board itself has openly admitted its faults and deficiencies—it is needless to further emphasize the explosive student — teacher ratio, or the lack of sufficient advanced programs for superior students, or the low standards for teachers. However, it does seems quite intriguing that in New York City this week, the school board was awarded its budget request plus additional funds, reportedly in the neighborhood of two million dollars.

If this be the case, is it true that New York students are more deserving of better educational opportunities than Philadelphia students? Or is it true that New York students have more potential than Philadelphia students? Or is it true that Philadelphians are not concerned with the education of their children? With the possible exception of the last, I doubt the truth of any of these conclusions.

So the finger seems to point to the politicians. But should they have the right to wield such power in regard to the school system? Are they qualified enough?

Shouldn't the control of the school system be removed from the low realm of politics?

One of the most serious practical problems facing residents has been the small number of telephones in the dormitories. This number has been so small thanks to some ignorant students of two or three years ago who seemed determined to destroy every phone on campus.

Two weeks ago I invited representatives of the telephone company to visit the campus and re-evaluate their decision concerning the replacement of phones. The result of our discussion was that approximately ten new phones plus booths will be installed in Sheehan and Sullivan Halls.

All that is asked of the Student Body in return is that an amount of due respect be given this equipment. Misuse of the property can only lead to renewed inconvenience for all concerned.

Quite a number of people have been impressed by the attitude of Villanovans at our basketball games thus far. This praise has emanated from our administration, from Philadelphia sports writers and from the other Big Five coaches. It is a pleasure to pass this praise on to you.

To anyone who still questions the effectiveness of cooperation and co-cheering among Big Five schools, I point to the sixteen and one record of the city teams to date. Having 2000 fans pulling for a team is good; having 6000 cheering has to be better.

Letters To The Editor

To The Editor,

At Monday night's Princeton-Vilanova basketball game, we could not help noticing that nearly the whole east stands of the Field House were occupied by non-students, presumably general admission customers.

We would like to know why one half of the Field House was occupied by non-Villanovans, while so many students were refused tickets.

It was our understanding that the University exists primarily for the students. If so, why are they not given first consideration for tickets?

The basketball team is perhaps the most important single source of school spirit at Villanova. Why then are so many of us denied the chance to attend games and display the spirit and enthusiasm which is traditional at Villanova?

Granted, the school does make considerable financial gain through the sale of tickets to the general public. But the school is neither operated for the general public nor for financial gain. Besides, the undergraduates do pay an activities fee for attendance privileges at school functions.

We feel that ALL the students should be given the opportunity to display their school spirit; that the majority of the seats in the Field House should be reserved for Villanova students.

Audley Clamporcero, '67
Mark Bibro, '68

To The Editor,

Though not an alumnus — circumstances not of my own making prevented me from completing my studies — my interest in the university and the satisfactory experience in noting the physical examination and academic improvements in recent years brought me to write you with reference to the frequent use of the Field House for the purposes for which it was not construoted, that as a result days and it would seem almost a week, would pass without it being at het disposal of the freshmen or varsity basketball squads. This certainly must handicap players and coaches.

Couldn't Vasey Hall which is more suitable and sufficiently large for vast lectures be used for this purpose rather than the gym?

Couldn't fewer dances and what not be scheduled without interfering too much with the social life of the student body? Couldn't an honest-to-goodness effort be made to schedule advisable activities at times that would not greatly handicap the basketball teams?

These few thoughs will not, I hope, be taken as destructive criticism. I trust that you will find it possible to print this communication in the Villanovan. I believe it is of sufficient merit to be considered seriously by the party or parties that are empowered to make arrangements for the use of the Field House.

Matthew Brennan

To The Editor,

Permit me to salute the Villanova student who took it upon himself to inscribe "What about next year?" on the door of our brand-new automobile which was parked in the Villanova parking lot after last November 7 the Boston College-Villanova football game. He will no doubt be delighted to learn that his artistry resulted in a $32.50 removal bill.

This act obviously required much ingenuity and speaks well of the type of sportsmanship which apparently prevails at your university.

It hardly seems comprehensible that a loss on the football field justifies such irresponsible and childish conduct.

On Understanding The K. Of C.

By Bill Manfred

Of the many organizations on the Villanova campus there is one whose existence and nature are grossly misunderstood by much of the student body. This misconception is generated through ignorance of the history, nature, and purposes of the organization.

The Knights of Columbus is not, strictly speaking, a student organization but is an organization consisting mainly of students and one which is under its own central, national government.

History

The history of the Knights of Columbus dates back to 1882, and to a young priest at St. Mary's parish in New Haven, Connecticut. The Rev. Michael McGivney was the first born in a family of 13 children and was of Irish extraction.

Although the family lived a life of poverty, Michael was able to receive an education and at the time of his father's death, Michael was enrolled in St. Mary's Seminary in Baltimore.

Shortly after his ordination in 1877, Father McGivney was assigned to St. Mary's Parish in New Haven where his greatest work was performed. Father McGivney died suddenly in 1890, at the age of 32, less than seven years after his ordination.

Father McGivney

The background of poverty and suffering was a great influence on Father McGivney as he met with a group of young men in his parish and persuaded them of the need for a Catholic layman's organization.

Through dedication and untiring efforts, he and his young parishioners worked for a charter of the Knights of Columbus which was granted in March 1882, by the State of Connecticut "for the purpose of rendering mutual aid and assistance to its members and their families."

Since that date in 1882, when the Knights of Columbus consisted of eight men, the organization has grown and has established itself on a nation-wide basis. Today the Knights of Columbus has over 4,500 councils and over 1,300,000 members participating actively in the 50 states of the United States, the 10 provinces of Canada, in the Canal Zone, Puerto Rico, Mexico, Cuba, and the Philippines.

K of C and Church

The Knights of Columbus, in close contact with the Catholic Church, has three purposes or ideals which are realized in a unity with the Catholic Church. The first of these purposes is material aid to members, including insurance benefits and mutual aid to sick, disabled or needy brother Knights.

This material purpose is fulfilled through an insurance program for members, which provides protection for the members and their families and assistance to other Knights.

The second purpose is intellectual and consists of encouragement of higher education through libraries, periodicals, scholarships, lectures, loans, and grants. The third purpose is religious in nature and is fashioned to encourage the charitable endeavors of the Church.

In this aspect, the Knights of Columbus gives assistance to the poor and to war victims, provides religious education for orphans, needy children and converts, fights communism and obscene literature, and in general, supports the Catholic Church.

Some of the accomplishments of the Knights of Columbus are these: The paying of $6,000,000 in benefits to insurance beneficiaries in 1959; the defense of the Catholic Church through the Catholic Advertising Program; and the support of education by its scholarships.

Also included are: loans and grants; the complete microfilming of the Vatican Library and the depositing of it at the University of St. Louis; the charitable action in cases of disaster; the establishment of the Columbian Squires.

Also: the distinguishing war record; the building of the Knights Tower at the National Shrine to the Immaculate Conception in Washington, D.C.; and the many other programs instituted by individual councils to assist in worthy causes — Cardinal Tardini, Cardinal Gibbons, Calvin Coolidge, General Pershing, and many others have praised the Knights of Columbus for its great works.

Secrecy

The secrecy of the Knights of Columbus, which has resulted in much misunderstanding, is an essential element only in its degrees and meetings. The secrecy of the Knights of Columbus has been held as legal and moral in many court decisions.

The Knights of Columbus, following the principles of Charity, Unity, Fraternity and Patriotism, are an example of the layman's important to the Catholic Church and are exemplary of true Christian living.

Sounds Of Note

By Bill McCloskey

A new sixty day extension has been granted in the Westinghouse-NBC switch discussed in this column last week but that no longer leaves WIBG with a rock and roll monopoly in Philadelphia.

"The Difference" you've seen advertised for Radio 56 (WFIL) since last Monday has been what we hear is a gradual switch to what is called "Chicken 40" format. "Top 40" is, of course, more is less what Wibbage is following. "Chicken 40" is WIBG without the really screaming sounds (e.g. "The Jerks," by the Larks or squeaky Little Anthony's "Going Out of My Head").

Among the indicators: the two new DJs are from WBZ, Boston and KQV, Pittsburgh, both hard rockers.

A Villanova group "The Fat City Four" was a smash at a Frank "X" hop at the Main Line Skating Rink next to Ho-Jo's a week ago. Bill McCloskey (that's me for those of you who don't read by-lines) spins the records for Frank at this fast-rising hop. Might not be a bad idea for your Friday night excursions. After all there's nothing closer.

Other groups on campus really scoring are "The Critters" whose records on Musicor have sold 40,000 copies in the Midwest and the "Defenders" who have one out on Parkway.

Talking to people in the business it looks as though the FCC will find no violations in Philadelphia during its new payola investigation . . . with one possible exception . . . whom we understand can duck the charge on a technicality.

New Recording By Dave Brubeck Marks His Return To Active Jazz

By Ed Bride

The contributions of Dave Brubeck to the art of Jazz have been negligible in the past three years, as opposed to the first ten years of his existence as a leader.

However, he took a step in the positive direction December 3. when he appeared in a concert with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

It appears that Brubeck has becomes the rich man's jazz man; his commercialism has become outstanding. However, he is the perfect picture of class when he takes the stage, and commands the respect of the audience and of conductor Ray-Wright. The first half of the concert was dedicated to the thin line distinction between jazz and classical music, while the second half (entitled "Improvisations") emphasized the commercial end.

Premiere

The Orchestra performed the opening selection without the quartet; entitled "Patterns," the piece was written by conductor Wright, and this was the first performance of the piece. It seemed to be an unchallenging bit of writing, but the performance by the orchestra was flawless. Whether this was classical music based on jazz, or jazz based on classical writing is a question which remains, and was undoubtedly intended.

Brubeck and the quartet (Joe Morello, drums; Paul Desmond, alto sax; Eugene Wright, bass) then joined the orchestra for an impressionistic performance of "Variations for Jazz Combo. Strings, and Horn." This, too, seemed unchallenging for the strings and French horn, but it was performed well, and the quartet was superb.

Well-developed Piece

Brubeck's "Elementals," with the full orchestra, was fitting close for the first half. The piece, hailed by critics previosly as "mediocre," was well-developed, in good taste, and employed each section to its fullest. It was balanced in its emphasis, and the quartet fit in with the orchestra, so that neither was dominant.

The second half opened with a few popular tunes done in Brubeck's newly-found "light-fingered" approach. Included were "Take the 'A' Train," Brubeck's hit "Take Five," and a few blues numbers. Most of the selections were recognized by the audience . . . Brubeck gave them just what they wanted to hear.

Art, Commercialism

Divided as it was, the program contained art in the first half and pure commercialism in the second. This is just as well, for jazz needs to be enjoyed, as well as studied.

The crowd, nearly a capacity one of 2,800, called the quartet back for an encore . . . devoted to humor. Brubeck and drummer Morello traded choruses of countless tunes, with Morello making his drum sing.

In science and technology, the accomplishments of today are but direction for tomorrow. Why? Simply because resting on the accomplishments of today is a luxury we cannot afford.

Recorded "live," this high-spirited spoof includes Sherman's hilarious parody of "Peter and the Wolf" (which includes such items as Beethoven's Fifth Cha-Cha-Cha and Aida in Dixieland) plus the fresh and funny "End of a Symphony." And Allen makes his conducting debut here in a slightly swacked rendition of "Variations on How Dry I Am." It's all great fun—as 13,327 listeners who heard these selections in concert can attest. Recorded in Dynagroove sound, it's an album you'll enjoy over and over again.

Management Society Hears Dissertation By Union Negotiator

The Society for the Advancement of Management, at a meeting last week, presented Mr. La Farge who spoke on the National Builders Contracting Association where he has been Director of Industrial Relations since its conception 30 years ago.

Mr. La Farge told the members the Association's function is to work out the differences between the different labor unions, such as bricklayers and carpenters, concerning the jurisdiction of certain jobs. This problem of jurisdictional disputes has resulted in walkouts by many unions causing harmful delays.

The Society is now involved in contacting Mr. Casey, personnel representative for Typographical Union in Philadelphia, to speak at their next meeting. He will be expected to talk on the history and effects of unions in the newspaper world. Also he will discuss the ramifications of the important New York and Detroit strikes.

Applications for new members for SAM will be accepted the first two meetings of the second semester. Dues will be $2 for new members. Applications are open to all students of Villanova regardless of major. The Society realizes the students in the College of Liberal Arts and, Engineering will be involved in the business world upon graduation and hopes these students will take advantage of the opportunities offered by SAM.

Besides its lecture series, which will continue in the second semester, SAM has plans to visit the New York Stock Exchange, Westinghouse, Schmidt's brewery, and Allenwood Steel Company.

Duprey's 'The Gargoyle' Captivates Playbox Audience With Compassion

By Tom Krause

The Villanova Playbox now has on exhibit a fascinating play by the chairman of the Graduate Theatre Department, Richard A. Duprey. The play captures and records vividly man's inhumanity to man.

Duprey's The Gargoyle, tells the story of a midget circus performer — the gargoyle — who is embittered at a society that excludes him. Superb acting by the cast and imaginative direction by Thomas Nevins give this play an aura of professionalism.

The only regret the spectator has is that the performance is over too soon. The Gargoyle fits into the Playbox's theatre-in-the-round as a baseball player's hand snuggles into an old glove.

Portraying Anton Droller in the title role is James Mason who is marvelous as the "gargoyle." Twisting himself into the form of Anton, Mason becomes at once a convincing, hostile clown. As the play begins, Anton is seated with several other passengers on a train heading toward a small New England town. He is going to visit the grave of his beloved wife, Elna, and the dramatic action is presented in a series of flashbacks.

A World of Love

Prudence Barry is impressive in the role of Elna, an Australian miss, who falls in love with Anton and "gives him the world" — a world of love and compassion. Jock, her father, admirably played by Ken Resinski, becomes Anton's best friend after helping him out of a tough jam.

Charlie, the circus owner, is a guiding force in Anton's life. Frank Broderick is entertaining and convincing as the fast-talking, hard-hearted Charlie. His advice to Anton is "Don't plug in the heart."

Although the play's theme is serious, the playwright injects humor by means of several conversations that take place on the train. Brian Morgan plays an ideal fatman and Joe Linsalata a crude antagonist who engage in hilarious dialogues.

Real Dialogue

Duprey mentioned after the play that he had done research on these dialogues by riding on a train from Buffalo to Harrisburg. If you close your eyes during these conversations, you will find yourself riding on a real train with real passengers.

Struggling to force love into his alienation, Elna marries Anton after a confrontation with a narrow-minded priest. The "beauty and beast" marriage gives Anton a fresh view of life. However, Elna's tragic demise in a circus fire results in his disaffiliation from the world.

Mason provides some warm comic touches as the sad sack type of clown in the Emmet Kelly tradition. Especially moving is the final scene where Charlie observes Anton in his clown garb giving homage to his wife at the cemetery in the form of a comic act.

Paul Norton, Carole Hodgson, Morgan and Linsalata, Mary Moesel, and Judy Stone turn in convincing performances in a variety of roles.

Philadelphia Holiday Fare Set With Three Exciting Plays

By Joe Linsalata

During the Christmas holiday the Philadelphia theatres will welcome the premieres of a musical comedy, a comedy and also the continued successful run of a play that The New York Times has acclaimed as the best play of the year.

Kelly, a musical by Eddie Lawrence and Moose Charlap, premieres at the Shubert Theatre on Monday, Dec. 28. The play is considered to have one of the finest musical casts of the season. Featured in the show are Ella Logan, who appeared last in the Broadway production of Finian's Rainbow, Jesse White, former star of Born Yesterday, Philadelphia's own Mickey Shaughnessy and Marty Ingels.

The play was inspired by the saga of Steve Brodie who allegedly leaped off the Brooklyn Bridge in the 1880's. It will remain in Philadelphia until January 16 when it shall go to Boston preceding its opening on Broadway, February 16.

The Family Way is a new comedy written by Ben Starr with Jack (Bart Maverick) Kelly and Collin Wilcox playing the lead roles. It opens at the Walnut Street Theatre, Saturday, December 26. The show's director, Michael Gordon, has just returned from Hollywood where he directed a new Doris Day-Rock Hudson comedy.

Gripping Play

Blood Knot, a gripping drama about two brothers, one Negro and the other white, struggling for their survival within the racial tensions of South Africa. It will enter its eighth week of performance at the Philadelphia Playhouse at Broad and Vine Streets.

The two-character play is set in the native country of its author, Athroll Fugard. Eight shows are given each week — Tuesday through Friday at 8:30 p.m.; Saturday at 7:30 and 9:45 p.m.; and Sunday at 3:00 and 8:30 p.m.

FORD MOTOR COMPANY BUILDS A TOUGH ONE

IT SWIMS

Ford Motor Company's new military truck floats. Air-inflated seals and internal air pressure keep the body and mechanical components dry. Its water speed is 2.5 mph.

IT CLIMBS STEPS

Climbing over a 27-inch high step or negotiating a 60% grade when fully loaded is no problem for this Ford vehicle. Proof that it can go over rough cross-country terrain.

IN FACT, THE ARMY'S NEW TRUCK GOES ALMOST ANYWHERE

Early in 1963, Ford Motor Company received a contract from the U.S. Army to design and develop a 5-ton cargo truck for use in tactical military operations. Before the end of that year, the first test unit had been designed and built.

This new vehicle, called the XM656 cargo truck, was sent to the Aberdeen Proving Ground for 40,000 miles of testing —twice that required for military acceptance. The vehicle was tested against road conditions that might be found anywhere in the world: swamps . . . loose sand . . . hilly backcountry . . . and highways. During the test, the truck carried a 10,000-lb. payload and, half the time, towed a 13,000-lb. load.

Outstanding characteristics of the truck's design are its floatability, improved cross-country mobility, light weight, reduced need for maintenance and a multi-fuel power plant that will run on anything from diesel oil to gasoline.

This is only one of many exciting new developments at Ford Motor Company. From manufacturing to marketing, we are finding better ways to do things. Career opportunities at Ford Motor Company have never been better. Schedule an interview with our representative to find one just right for you.

Mermen Top Quakers, 68-27 After Loss To Powerful Terps

By Steve Freind

Bouncing back from a 77-18 thrashing at the hands of Maryland, Villanova' swimming team sank Penn last Saturday 68-27 at the Field House. The Quakers sported the only doubles winner in Kurt Kenddis, who splashed to victories in the 200 and 500 yard freestyle, but Ed Geisz's Merman captured eight the eleven events.

Relay Victories

The 400 yard medley relay team of Pat Sullivan, Ken Herr, Tom Brennan and Joe Parell got the 'Cats started by racing to a triumph in 3:59.3. The 400 yard freestyle quintet of Doug Reback, Denny West, Frank Muscio and All-American Rick Girdler followed suit with a 3:32.3 clocking.

Placing second and third behind Kendis in the 200 yard freestyle were 'Catfish Jim Lowery and Frank Conlin while Ray Donnelly and Reback followed Penn's only other winner, Lou Kozoloff, in the 50 yard freestyle.

Beaver Doyle notched a first place for the 'Cats in the 200 in the 200 yard backstroke, with yard individual medley in 2:14.2 and Chris Fisher nailed third. The Mermen also bagged a first and third in the 200 yard butterfly as Roger Guthrie took top honors with a 2:16.0 timing and Eddie Sperr took the bronze spot.

Diving

Bob Biese and Bill Bohrmann combined for eight points in the diving event, placing first and second respectively. Biese took the event with a winning point total of 188.65. In the 100 yard freestyle, Donnelly blazed to victory in 0:49.4 with Girdler taking in a third in the colsest event of the day.

Bill Livingood gave the 'Cats another first place with a victory Sullivan finishing second. Livingood was clocked over the distance in 2:10.8.

The Mermen also finished 1-2 in the 200 yard breaststroke as Pete Ancona took the event in 2:32.7 with Phil Desjardin right behind. Fisher and Brennan placed second and third respectively behind Kendis in the 500 yard freestyle to round out the day's scoring.

Maryland

Last Wednesday, the Mermen traveled to College Park, Maryland, and were swaped by the powerful Terps, 77-18. Maryland, which always sports a rugged swimming squad, simply outclassed the 'Cats, and Geisz's boys never were really in contention. Yesterday, the 'Catfish traveled to Rutgers but the results of the meet were not received in time for this printing.

After the Rutgers meet, the 'Cats are off until January 6 when they face Seton Hall in the Field House. The rest of the schedule is as follows:

Freshmen Basketeers Sporting 3-1 Record After Princeton Win

By Bill McDonough

The 1964-65 edition of the Wildkittens are now sporting a 2-1 record. The Frosh lost an opening game squeaker to Scranton 74-72 and then proceeded to win two overtime thrillers defeated St. Joseph's 75-69 and Princeton 80-77.

Scranton's Royals scored a last second field goal to hand the Kittens their opening game defeat on the winners' hardwood. In a game marked by freely tooting referees (47 personal fouls were called, 26 against VU), Joe Crews, Dave Turtzo and Frank Guerin combined for 58 points which weren't quite enough to overcome the upsetminded Royals. Crews' 22 points led all scorers and Turtzo and Guerin contributed 20 and 16 respectively.

Hawklets Fall

A balanced array of scoring proved to be too much for the St. Joe's Frosh, as Coach Jack Devine's boys evened up the record with a 75-69 overtime victory. The foul line was a decisive factor as the Kittens hit on 23 of 35 attempts while St. Joe's hit on only 13 of 31 as 46 penalties were detected, 23 against each team. Crews led the scoring with 20 points.

Princeton's Ivy Leaguers were the next victims. In their first home game of the year after being behind the entire game, the Frosh were swept into victory behind the great display of spirit shown by the 3200 partisan fans.

A great team effort carried the Kittens to an 80-77 victory after tying the game 69-69 in regulation time. Guerin led the winners with 25 points. Close behind was Crews with 22. Crews and Guerin scored 31 of their 47 points after the intermission to spark the comeback.

Freshmen Cross Country Team Captures IC4A Championship

By Jim Proud

Villanova's Freshmen harriers won the annual IC4A Cross Country Championships by defeating some of the best teams in the country. In the meet held last Nov. 16 at the Vancourtland Park course in New York, the frosh capped their undefeated season with this, their most coveted achievement.

The race was won by Charles Messigner in 14:58.6 to lead Villanova to one of its finest seasons in recent years. The Frosh's top runner of the season, Dave Patrick, was running with Messinger halfway through the race when he clipped his leg on a rock and had to drop back. Patrick was able to hold on, however, and finished third to be Villanova's second place runner.

67 Teams

Competing in the race were also 67 other teams. Following Villanova in the scoring was Maryland, who was 49 points behind. Taking the bronze position was Army, five points behind Maryland.

The top five runners for the Kittens were, as for the entire season, Messinger, Patrick, Sanborne, Sellitto and Hamilton.

Messinger and Patrick both came from the same high school, Kinwood in Baltimore and were instrumental in the school's victorious season.

Clean Slate

The team's season log was a clean sheet of victories. The biggest wins were over St. John's, St. Joe's and LaSalle. The meets held in Fairmount Park primed the Kittens for their IC4A vitory.

The Kittens' next three runners in the season finale finished 16, 21 and 25 respectively.

In the 16 position was Sanborne, who finished well ahead of the 17 runner. The 21 position wastaken by Hamilton, a student from Ireland.

The freshmen, as well as the varsity, are now preparing for the indoor season and, barring any further action by the AAU, the 'Cats should be able to practice and turn in a usually triumphant season.

Wildcat Rifle Team Sweeps To Three Wins, Owls, Bullets, Pop Fall

By Steve Freind

Sweeping to victory in their first three meets, Villanova's Rifle Team is currently sporting an undefeated record. Coached by Sgt. Joseph A. Migliacci, the Wildcats shooters have notched impressive wins over Temple, Philadelpha College of Pharmacy and Gettysburg.

In the Temple tilt, the 'Cats outshot the Owls, 1378-1366, as Capt. Joe Smith led all gunners with a 284. Ed Casper followed with a 275 while Ed Millison, Mike Wilhelm and George Walko posted scores of 274, 273 and 272 respectively to account for the 'Cats total.

The following day, October 29, PCP fell to the Wildcats 1394-1349. This time Wilhelm was the leading Blue and White marksman posting a 281 total, while Casper took second placed with 280. Walko and Smith each shot 279 and Steve Pribula added a 275.

Gettysburg

Last Friday, the 'Cats hosted Gettysburg University, posting a 1389-1378 triumph. Ted Lewandonski led the deadeyes with a 283 score, followed by Casper and Smith who both shot 278. Wilhelm and Walko rounded out the "Cats scoring with 277 and 273 respectively.

Last year the 'Cat shooters compiled a 7-4 with a team shooting average of 1388.5. Coach Migliacci fells confident that his squad can improve on this record. The team now has a two month vacation before resuming their schedule against Bucknell on February 20 at John Barry Hall.

'Cats Face Rugged Opposition In Quest Of Tourney Crowd

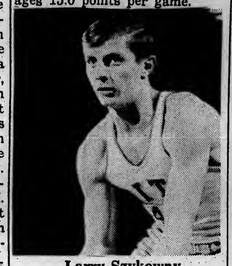
By Rusty Miller

Last year during the Christmas season the Wildcats (plus followers) invaded the neighboring town of New York, fought through an impressive list of teams in the Holiday Festival, and finished in a blaze of glory with the winners cup and the MVP award. This year the Cats will stay at home and let the talent come to them and come it will. They will be joined in the Quaker City Tournament by the likes of Wichita and Illinois not to mention St. Joseph's and Penn. The pairings go something like this:

Afternoon Double-Header

In the first game Wichita faces the Panthers of Pittsburg. This meeting shouldn't amount to more than a warm-up for the Shockers. Hapless Pitt graduated six out of their first seven men last year, loosing all five starters. Their tallest man is a 6-6 reserve. Their high scorer, Larry Szykowny broke his arm just before the season and is just getting his touch back. He has averaged 19 points per game in their first four games. So far the Panther's record stands at 2-2. They won their opener with Carnegie Tech 83-52, downed V.P.I. 74-69, lost to a highly touted but unimpressive Miami (Fla.) team 71-85 and lost to Big Ten Wisconsin.

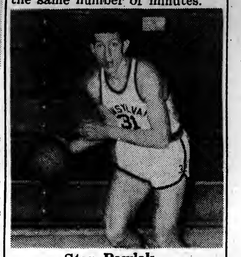
Skip Thoren



Wichita, on the other hand, boasting All-American Dave Stallworth—27.8 ppg 12.8 rebounde per game—and Nate Bowman—15 ppg and 11 rebounds, has been picked as high as third nationally in the preseason polls. The Shockers record stands at 4-1. They have topped Long Beach State 114-78, 73-55, high ranked Brigham Young twice, 93-66 and 81-65 and on Monday night lost to top-ranked Michigan 87-85.

The second contest pits Holy Cross against St. Joseph's. Once again, this should not prove too much of a contest. The Crusaders are 3-0 at this point in the season, having notched victories over American International by 25, and Yale by 2. They lost a squeeker to St. Johns 67-63 which saw them come back from a 20 point deficit to within 2 of the Redmen. Only their inconsistency kept them from victory. Their biggest problem, like Pittsburg, is height, their tallest man being only 6-5. Their outstanding player is senior, captain John Wendelken a good outside shooter and good passes.

Unfortunately for the Crusaders however, they are not in the same class as the Hawk, recent conqueror of high-ranked Davidson and now 4-0. Little need be said of the Hawk's two outstanding sophomores, Matt Goukas and Cliff Anderson. Their latest achievements have spoken for themselves.



Second Twin Bill

The first game of the evening double-header will see Illinois take on the Violets of NYU. The Illini have their starting five back and pose themselves as even a greater scoring threat than last year. In their three home games they have topped the century mark each time, downing UCLA 110-83. Bowling Green 100-62, and Washington (St. L.) 103-59. Their single defeat has been at hands of St. Louis 64-79. The Illini's top scorer is 6-8½, 232 pound Skip Thoren. Thoren, the team captain, leads the squad in both scoring — 22 ppg. and rebounding — 12 per game. Their other standout is guard, Tal Brody, a top defensive player who averages 15.0 points per game.

Larry Szykowny

The luckless Violets, now—for the season shouldn't prove too much trouble for the visitors from the Big Ten. NYU has the hustlers but they just don't have what it takes to be a championship team. Their standout, Stan McKenzie doesn't have the other four men to work with. Their big man, Ray Bennett is just a little too anxious and draws his five personals in about the same number of minutes.

Stan Pawlak

The final contest of the night pits the remaining two Big Five rivals against each other. The Villanova-Penn game promises to be the best match of the day from every viewpoint. Pennsylvania is now sporting a 4-0 record with wins over: Rutgers 100-75, Navy 61-58, Delaware 77-34 and Tulane 88-57. With junior standouts Stan Pawlak—21.0, and Jeff Neuman—15.3 ppg leading the way it should be a close battle all the way for the Cats. The pick—the Cats to advance to the semi-finals, of course.

Last Chance To See Stallworth

The first day of play will be merely a warm-up for some of the talent present but the second and third rounds should prove to be some of the best basketball to be played in the East this year. It will also afford a chance to see Dave Stallworth competing in the last of his college games — Stallworth's eligibility runs out at semester's end.

Villanova Booters Drop Two Early Games But Show Potential

By Oliver Snird

Villanova's new and exciting soccer team proved to the world they would be a power to contend with in future years. Despite two setbacks in their opening games, the Wildcat booters displayed a spirit and rugged play that could only characterize a tough and agressive squad bent on destroying the competition.

The 'Cat booters journeyed to Haverford College in the season's opener and managed to hold the opposition's highly touted forward line scoreless for twenty-five minutes in the first half. Fullbacks Jan Mantero and Ted Lavin along with center half Dietmar Parchinger broke up many of Haverford's scoring thrusts.

Villanova, meantime, kept hammering away at the enemy goalie but, Haverford's short passing and excellent ball control proved to be the deciding factors as they proceeded to score five quick goals in the second half and down the Main Liners 5-0.

Still on the road, Villanova clashed with the highly touted Hawks of St. Joseph's College. The Hawks had missed the NCAA soccer tournament by one goal and compiled an 8-2 record in the process.

The 'Cats proved to be a much tougher opponent then expected for St. Joe's as Red Wolleb made 16 saves for the visitors. Two long passes from Tom Willson to Parchinger came close to hitting pay-dirt, but missed by inches as the Hawks emerged victorious 2-0.

Frosh Mermen Open Season With 3 Impressive Victories

By Jerry Bruderle

The Villanova Freshmen swimming team opened its 1964-65 season with three victories at the start of what may be their most successful season. This talent-laden squad boasts three high school All-Americas and five mermen who captained their high school squads.

With this strong squad available, the frosh defeated Monsignor Bonner 58-36, St. Mary's High School of Greenwich, Conn, 51-44 and this past Saturday, the University of Pennsylvania frosh 64-29.

Hometown Boy

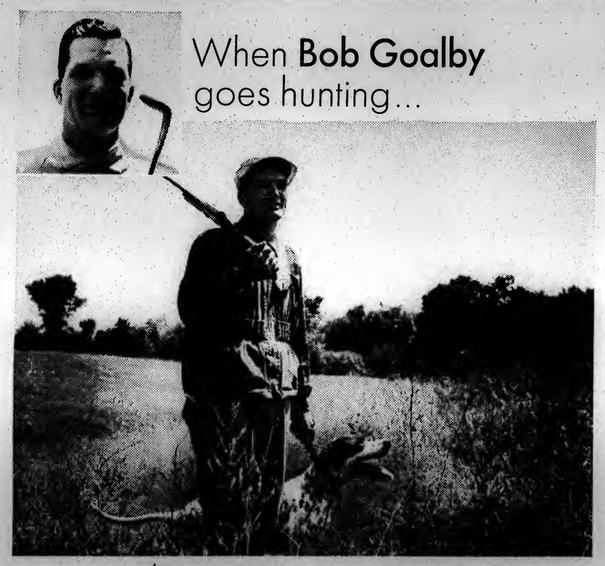
Greenwich, Conn., is also the home of Villanova's Mike Fitzgerald, who attended St. Mary's and Malvern Prep. Mike was rated the number one Prep school freestyler in the nation last year, and achieved All-America rating in four events. He is the National Catholic record holder in the 50, 100, and 200 yard freestyle.

The other two All-Americas also come from nearby Malvern. Ed Ritti made All-America honors in the freestyle relay, although he had been swimming competitively for only two years.

Paul Hornsleth is a versatile swimmer, who was captain at Malvern in both his junior and senior years. His best event is the 200 yard individual medley and he will swim in the 400 yard relay.

In the meets against Bonner and St. Mary's, Fitzmaurice and Ritti garnered four first place finishes, while Hornsleth took two-second plave finishes and three-thirds.

Rich Lamb, from Essex Catholic in New Jersey, is another freestyler who captained his high school team. He also captured four events in the first two meets.



Frosh Talented

These are only four of a very deep and talented team. The turnout for this year's team was the largest at Villanova in the history of the sport. The present squad includes 19 members. Freestyler Allan Fischer and backstroker Jonh Doherty are two promising swimmers from the New York area. Bob Brenker, from Waterbury, Conn., is the 'Cats main hope in the backstroke.

Len Cappelaro is a very capable diver from nearby Abington High School. Len captured first place against Bonner and St. Mary's.

The rest of the squad includes: breastroker Dan Rogers, butterflyers Chuck Friday, a six foot 214 pound giant from Pittsburg, and Jack Hartley, backstroker Frank Helies, freestyler Tom Brady, Jim Hazelton, Mike Hopkins, Bill O'Connor, and Steve Tarnell.

The success of the Villanova swimming program is due largely to the work of freshman coach Jack Lumsedn, and coach Ed Geisz. Without the aid of swimming scholarships the Wildcat mermen have attained a lofty position in Eastern and National Collegiate swimming. Last year Villanova placed eighth in the NCAA meet which determines the national rankings of the teams.

Pistol Team Wins Three Meets; Coast Guard Looms As Battle

By Steve Freind

The Villanova Pistol Team is showing every sign of continuing their shooting success of the past. The 'Cat marksmen, who last year posted a brilliant 23-5 log while copping the National NRA Pistol Championship, have swept to easy victories in their first three meets.

On November 21, the 'Cats downed the University of Massachusetts, 2153-2101, in their first meet in the newly formed Northeast Intercollegiate Pistol League. Co-captain Tony Mascia d the way for the shooters with 549 total and Jim Bushong rang up a 547. The 'Cats other Cocaptain, Bud Brennan took third with 534 followed by Rick Hunter's 523.

The 'Cats then traveled to Rutgers on December 4 to hand the Knights a 2162-1946 lacing. Gary Leidecker led the 'Cats with a fine total of 555 with Mascia adding a 547. Jim Durborow notched a 534, while Brennan rang up a 526.

Triangular Meet

In a triangular meet last Saturday between Villanova, the Merchant Marine Academy and PMC, the 'Cats garnered first place with a team score of 2142, followed by the Merchant Marines' 2088. PMC finished last with 1884.

Mascia led the 'Cats barrage with a 548 while Leidecker shot a 539. Ted Laven and Bushong rounded out the 'Cats scoring with 532 and 523 respectively. On January 9, the Wildcat marksman host the United States Coast Guard Academy in what looms as the biggest battle of the year. Coach GySgt. Joseph A. Migliacci expressed confidence that the 'Cats would triumph in the meet and procced to capture the league title.

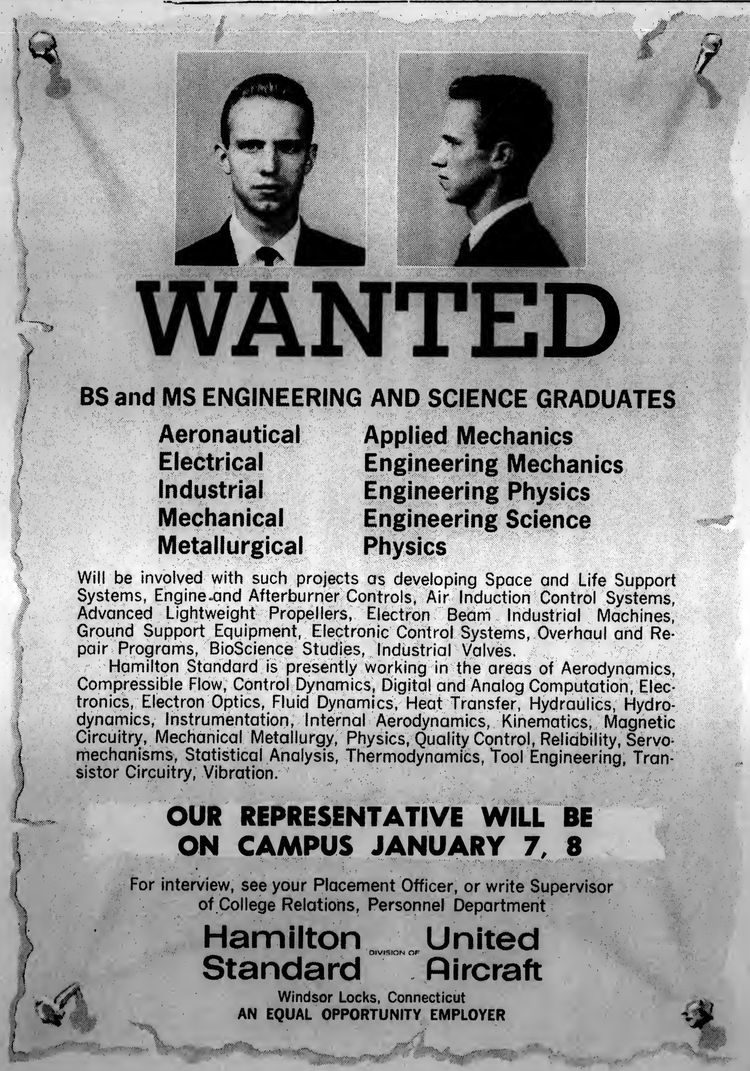
"The Academy should present our boys with quite a challenge," Migliacci said. " I have confidence that the team will be able to chalk up a victory, which would be a big step towards the championship."

'Cats Weather Freeze To Top Eagles; Melchionni, Erickson Sparkle Again

By Steve Freind

There's not much a team can do when the opposition doesn't want to play ball. Villnova's unbeaten basketeers learned that last Thursday when they handed the Eagles of American University a 65-48 thumping in a dull battle at Baltimore. Tagged with three huge losses early in the season, one a 127-67 thrashing at the hands of Syracuse, Eagle Coach Jim Williams made it a point to keep the score down by having his boys hold onto the ball.

Saying that the Eagles held onto the ball is putting it mildly. It was more like a deep freeze as AU took as long as five minutes to set up one shot. Coach Jack Kraft opened up his defense more than usual in an effort to entice the Eagles to shoot. When this failed, Kraft sent the 'Cats into a zone press and Villanova opened up a slight lead, taking a 34-27 advantage to the locker room at intermission.



Kraft Pleased

The 'Cats stayed in the press until they held a 12 point lead early in the second stanza, then let the Eagles play their slow-motion game. Overall, Kraft was pleased with his team's performance. "Considering the game American played, I think we handled ourselves well. We pressed in order to get a cushion and then let them freeze for as long as they liked."

Once again, Billy Melchionni led the 'Cat scoring attack. The deadeye guard sizzled the nets for 21 ponts, connecting on 9 of 17 attempts from the floor. Eric Erickson also turned in another standout performance with 16 points while George Leftwich added 10. Jim Washington netted only 6 points, but the 6-7 co-captain hauled down 8 rebounds and showed spot signs of regaining his AllAmerican form.

Although the Eagles' freezing tactics made for a boring game, Kraft welcomed such a tilt in one respect. "This kind of a game gave our boys good experience in dealing with a deliberate offense. Some of the teams on our schedule who can't run with us will employ the same tactics."

With the game out of reach in the waning moments, Kraft cleared his entire bench. Leading performers among the subs were Bernie Schaffer, who tallied 6 points while grabbing 8 reboundeds and Pete Coleman, contributing 4 points plus a fine floor game.

V. U. Hockey Club Performs Creditably In First Two Tilts

By Jim D'Agostino

An outclassed Villanova Hoc-Key team lost to the University of Pennsylvania in their first game.

After playing for 7:25 of the first period to a stalemate a Penn freshman slapped a rebound past the Villanova goalie, Paul Viano, for their first score. For the next ten minutes a well-positioned Penn team fired in five more goals.

Villanova's uncoached team played well in the second period, holding the U. of P. skaters to three goals. Tough checking by Bob Birmingham kept the Penn boys from the VU nets.

In the third period, down 9-0, the Wildcats became wild in their attempts to score. A pushing match broke out in front of the Penn cage which sent four Wildcats to the "sin-bin". But at 8:53 of the period the skating Cats finally scored.

Brian O'Shey, a fast skating center, ripped one in from twenty feet out. The score was now 11-1. To end the period a real free-for-all broke out in front of the VU bench. Captain, John Clement, and Dixie Page were banished along with one of the Penn brawlers ending an exciting hockey game.

After the game the Penn coach said, "With some school financial support, Villanova's hockey team could be a fine contender in the college ranks".

John Clement, acting coach, asks that any faculty member or anyone interested in coaching the team contact him at MI 9-9413.

V.U. Ace Jim Huggard Made Assistant Coach At Scranton University

By Dan Ding

Jim Huggard, former Villanova University star, has been named Assistant Basketball coach at the University of Scranton.

Huggard graduated from Villanova in 1961. During that time he was twice selected to the All-Big-Five squad. In 1960 and 1961 he was All-American Honorable Mention, in 1961 he was selected on the All-Catholic All American.

For the past four years he has been playing professional basketball with the Eastern Professional Basketball League. He spent time with Sunbury and he is now in his second year at Scranton. In 1962 he was rookie of the year with Sunbury. Always a brilliant playmaker. Huggard is now leading the league in assists with Scranton.

'Cats Battle Niagara Saturday; Hit Road For St. Francis Tilts

By Joe Maffongelli

With the coming of the holiday season people turn their minds toward traditions of all types. One of these traditions will be of special interest to all Villanova court fans. On Saturday, December nineteenth, the always tough Purple Eagles of Niagara University will attempt to cage the powerful 'Cat paw.

Coach Johnny Gallaher will bring a team consisting of nine returning lettermen, from a disappointing 8-12 record, into the "neutral" territory of Philadelphia's Palestra.

Although this flock of Eagles has been labeled mediocre, the 'Cat cagers will have to be wary of that ever present Christmas magic. Two years ago another mediocre Niagara club stole a 72-70 victory from the NIT bound 'Cats, at the final buzzer on this same "neutral" court. Furthermore, no VU fan will soon forget last year's contest which left the only blemish on the 'Cat's record through the first eighteen games.

Having won only two of their first five encounters, two of Niagara's losses have been at the hands of a couple of the better teams in the nation — Miami and LaSalle.

Though not an exceptionally big team, the Eagles have some excellent shooters and are getting clutch rebounding from 6'6" George Philipps who is also the second leading scorer on the squad. The leader of the vital shooting corps is 6'0" senior Tom Lenney who has averaged just over seventeen points per game. A pair of 6'3" forwards, Dave Smith and Joe White, can also find the range on most occassions. The team is rounded out by 6'2" Wally Thompson.

More Surprises

Besides Niagara, Santa Claus has a couple of other surprises in his (schedule) bag. A pair of Saint Francis Colleges will be around to usher one year out and another in.

State Rivalry

The first of these Saint Francis clubs, from Loretto, has not fared too well with the 'Cat hoopsters in the past as they've been successful in only two of thirteen previous meetings with Main Liners.

Coach Skip Hughes will pick from nine returning lettermen when his Frankies collide with the 'Cats at Altoona in a pre-Christmas eve spectacle on December thwenty-third.

Inexperience and poor foul shooting have hampered the first five to date. This is evidenced by their single victory over Iona in five contests. Though they lost to Steubenville by a single point, the Frankies have been completely outclassed by Duquense, Mount Saint Mary's and most recently by Saint Bonaventure.

Though this squad is loaded with height, their rebounding has not yet been up to par. The potential is there however, due to the presence of 6'7" John Fitzhenry, 6'8" Sam Harris, 6'6" Garry Lupek, and 6'7" Jim Kuten who has been missed in the early season via a broken nose.

Harris and Lupek, both frosh. have been pacing the shooters at eighteen and fifteen point clips respectively. Bill Coyle, a 6'1" sophomore, and 5'9" Don Appaleman have played consistent ball, but it appears that this club needs something more than consistency at the present pace.

Trip To The Big City

The 'Cats will take on their other Saint Francis rival in New York City on January sixth. Coach Danny Lynch also has nine returning lettermen on had

This Terrier club is loaded with experience as their thirteen man squad only boasts three sophs. This experience paid out with victories over Pace and Kings Colleges, but the Red and Blue failed the acid test — 55 86 — with Providence on Saturday night.

In each of the initial twin victories junior Jack Crispi netted twenty-three points while playing only one half of each contest. Ted Kock, a 6'8" giant who tips the scales at 230, has been the club's top rebonder. Another junior, Mark Turenshine, had averaged eleven points per outing up until last weekend. Sophomores Allen Fisher and Paul McGuire round out a promising club.

Kraftmen Top Toledo For Fifth Win; Stage Set For Niagara On Saturday

By Steve Freind

Villanova's high-flying Wildcats hammered to their fifth straigtht victory last night, downing Toledo before another overflow crowd at the Field House. The win set the stage for Saturday's Palestra clash with Niagara, who barely lost to unbeaten LaSalle in overtime last week.

Employing their zone defense effectively against the Rockets' deadly outside snipers, the 'Cats battled to a 44-22 halftime advantage as Bill Melchionni and Eric Erickson led the first stanza scoring parade with 15 and 7 respectively. Bob Aston was the leading Toledo point producer during the first half, tallying 8. Ken Miller followed with 7.

Overall, Bill Melchionni ended up with 22 points to pace the Wildcat attack while 3 others had netted 13. As usual, Melchionni turned in a sparking performance. The junior All-American prospect ran the Villanova offense flawlessly while turning in another fine defensive job as point man in Coach Jack Kraft's air-tight zone.

On the whole, Kraft was pleased with the 'Cats showing. "I thing we looked pretty good tonight," he said. "I'm pleased with the job we did on defense and I feel that with every game we're developing the cohesion that is needed to enjoy a successful season."

Asked about Melchionni, Kraft had this to say. "He's a great ball player. I have all the confidence in the world in him. He'll run the team just like Jones did."

By defeating the Rockets, who are now 2-2, the 'Cats increased their series lead to 6-2. Villanova's next opponent after Saturday's tilt with Niagara will be St. Francis of Loretto at the Frankies home court, where they are notoriously rugged. After that that, it's tournament time for the Kraft-men as they try to recapture the Quaker City Festival crown they captured in 1961.

Freindly Foolishness

Past And Present

By Steve Freind

Hang around any sporting set and sooner or later the standard comparisons are sure to pop up. You know, comparisons like Mantle or Mays, Russell or Chamberlain, Liston or Louis and Taylor or Reynolds. Hang around a Villanova sporting crowd and the relative worth of another set of celebrities is likely to be discussed, namely the deeds of the king 'Cat of the hardwood, Wally Jones and his backcourt successor, Billy Melchionni.

It's not really fair to compare the two, in a way it's almost sacriligeous. Any conclusion reached is sure to slight a hallowed hero—either Jones, a Villanova legend, or Melchionni, the current Main Line man of the hour. But the urge to stack the two roundball wizards beside each other is irresistible.

To those who were fortunate enough to watch him perform for three years in Blue and White skivvies, Wally Jones was a Genghis Khan in sneakers, a rare type of athlete who had the ability to bring a sellout throng roaring to its feet simply by doing what came natural to him. Unlike many backcourt flashes, Jones was at his best when the pressure was on.

He had great scoring moevs (though his shooting tapered off slightly after his sophomore year) yet he seemed to enjoy playing defense more. The usually quiet Jack Kraft made like Hubert Humphrey when the topic of his Jones boy was brought up and many still refer to Number 24 as St. Walter.

Now all of a sudden, a frail undernourished looking youth is threatening Jones' title of Top Cat. It's like kicking the bones of a martyr or knocking motherhood, but this brash youngster has legitimate credentials.

No Surprise

The rise of Bill Melchionni comes as no great surprise. As early as his high school days, the baby-faced bomber was tabbed for greatness. Last year, as a sub, he was described by Jack Cherry, sports publicity director at Xavier, as "the finest sophomore guard prospect since Oscar Robertson." In the 'Cats five wins so far, Billy has scorched the nets at a 21 point pace. Twice already, Cyclons has faced All-American opposition, (Steve Thomas and Bill Bradley), and neither time did he suffer from such exposure.

Melchionni has to be given the nod over Jones in the scoring department. His eye is more deadly and he has the ability to go both ways, while Wally, hampered by a bad knee, had difficulty moving to the right. Jones also was reluctant to drive, depending on long jumpers for most of his points, but Billy uses his blinding speed to full advantage on darts to the basket.

On defense, Melchionni lacks the arm waving Jones' girations and as yet has not become fully accustomed to playing the point in the Kraft zone, but with a few more games his catlike moves should rival Wally's. In this category, there's not much to pick between the two.

The comparisons could go on and on, but no real conclusion could be reached. Each have their followers and no amount of discussion could change their opinions. Sufice it to say that rarely does a school receive two such athletes in such a short span of time.

With tourney time coming up, the memory of the Quaker City Festival three years ago is brought to mind. It was then that a rising young backcourt flash named Jones led the 'Cats to the Festival championship, copping the Most Valuable Player award in the process.

It has been said that lightning never strikes the same place twice. Billy Melchionni may be hard to convince.

Basketball Club Head Announces Selection Process For Members

By Steve Freind

Brian Banmiller, Chairman of the Villanova Basketball Club, has announced the final plans for the selection of the club's members. During the past three weeks, season ticket books for all Villanova games at the Palestra have been on sale in the Ticket Office. The purchasing of one of these ticket books, which have now been sold out, is the first requisite for membership.

In all, 500 of these ticket books have been sold. However, only 200 students will be permitted in the club. Membership in the organization will guarantee one of the 200 best seats available to Villanova students for each Palestra game.

Besides ownership of a season ticket, the other considerations for admittance to the club will be participation in last year's club attendance at the recent club meetings and the written answers on the application forms.

With the formation of the club, it is hoped that the student spirit in the stands will match, or even exceed, that of last year. The first appearance of the club will be at the Niagara game on December 19.

Forum Features Dr. Martin Luther King

By Walt Baginsky

"The Challenge of a New Age" will be the topic of address as Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., the 1964 Nobel Peace Prize winner, makes his inaugural appearance on the Main Line campus.

The lecture is slated for 8 p.m. on the evening of January 20 in the University Field House. This will be the fourth in a series of cultural events sponsored by the Villanova Forum in conjunction with the Student Government Association for the 1964-65 school year.

Dr. King's adamant philosophy of non-violence has caused him to emerge as the champion of the negro in America today, and as an eminent international dignitary. At his recent meeting with King Olav V at Oslo, Norway, he officially received the Nobel Peace Prize.

Non-violence

King Olav V extolled Dr. King with these words: "He has led his race's monumental struggle without ever losing the faith and idealism that gave inspiration to his people." Also, at that meeting, Dr. King expressed his philosophy with this statement: "Non-violence is the answer to the crucial political and moral question of our time — the need for man to overcome oppression and violence without resorting to violence and oppression."

This eloquent young statesman while endeavoring to achieve a non-violent new frontier has recently become a rather controversial figure. He took a verbal slash at Mr. J. Edgar Hoover while claiming that Mr. Hoover did not effect thorough F.B.I. action in Mississippi. In regard to this matter, Dr. King has stated that "Justice delayed is justice denied."

Besides these current activities, Dr. King, who is President of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, has been the most ardent spokesman for negro civil rights in the past decade. In 1956, his preaching on non-violence ended segregation in the buses of Montgomery, Alabama. Time Magazine conferred upon him their "Man of the Year" award in 1963, and Yale University presented him with an honorary degree.

Harrier Coach Jim Elliott Named Chairman Of Lay Advisory Board

James F. Elliott, partner in Elliott & Frantz Contractors Equipment Company, has been appointed Chairman of the Advisory Board of Lay Trustees at Villanova University. The Rev. John A. Klekotka, OSA president of the University, made the announcement this week.

Elliott, associated with the University for many years as track coach, succeeds Harry R. Halloran who has served as chairman of the group for the past year.

The Advisory Board of Lay Trustees is a group of nearly 200 outstanding Philadelphia area citizens who are aiding Villanova in its development program. The Board was organized ten years ago when the University opened a long range expansion program.

The Rev. William E. Farrell, OSA, assistant to the president for development, is director of the general campaign.

Top Coach

A successful businessman and Villanova alumnus, Elliott has gained the reputation as one of the world's top track coaches. Over the years his teams and athletes have brought fame to Villanova and Philadelphia. Three years ago as coach of the United States AAU team ,he guided the Americans to a clean sweep with victories over Russia, Great Britain, Germany and Poland.

Since its organization, the Board has rendered invaluable service to the University in terms of counsel and financial aid. Among the members are representatives of business, industry and the professions. The Lay Trustees Board has contributed more than a half million dollars to Villanova in the past eight years. The campaign goal for this year is $75,000.

A goal of seven million dollars has been set for 1968. Funds will be used in projects such as a debt reduction plan, expansion of the institution's scholarship program, improvement of the faculty, and enlargement of library facilities.

No time for parties: no time for card games; no time for that afternoon siesta. Villanova students are busier than bees as they prepare for the semi-annual event-final exams.

Tutorial Program Bolstered By 55 Villanova Volunteers

The Rev. Richard D. Appicci, dean of student activities, announced that 40 Villanova students participated in a remedial reading workshop on Saturday, December 12 held at LaSalle College.

The program is sponsored by the Archdiocese of Philadelphia for the purpose of assisting students in the urban area who have encountered difficulties in reading and reading comprehension.

Since that time, 15 more volunteers have joined forces with the original volunteers to compose a contingent of 55 from Villanova. The program coordinators were especially pleased with the Villanova turnout, because until that time, only a handful of male students, needed to teach boys, volunteered from area colleges.

The Archdiocesan Tutorial Program will begin again in February. The Villanova volunteers, who can choose their own tutoring time, will devote a few hours each week to aid these young students who need help in reading.

Father Appicci expressed his thanks to those who did participate in the program. He also mentioned that volunteers were still needed for the number of students seeking help is great.

Father said, "We now have 55 Villanovans who are willing to give a few hours of their week to help these young children. Please assist them." Anyone interested in volunteering should contact Father Appicci in 311 Sheehan Hall or the Student Activities office, Dougherty Hall.

Campus Poll Indicates Controversy Over Administration's Snow Policy

By Tom Krause

The Villanovan recently conducted a campus poll in order to determine some measure of student opinion concerning the administration's decision to hold classes on snow days.

Earlier in the year, Father President Klekotka announced that "a policy of no cancellation of classes" on days that it snows. Among the reasons listed by Father President in this notice were: "availability of public transportation, a large resident population," and the elimination of confusion (due to phone calls, indecision,, etc.).

Confusion has disseminated among some students because of the situation regarding excused cuts. The office of the Rev. Joseph Flaherty, OSA, vice-president for academic affairs, told us that excused cuts will not be given for class absences due to difficulties in snow storms.

The following question was asked of those who consented to the interview: "What do you think of the administration's policy of no cancellation of classes on snow days?"

Replies

Rick Hunter, a senior physics major from Wallkill, N.Y., now boarding in Wayne, Pa., answered:

Rick Hunter

"The administration's policy seems a little bit unreasonable. If a student really can't get to school, he shouldn't be required to attend classes. If a student is excused because he is sick, then he should be excused for being unable to get to school during snowstorms.

'Because of the weather, my ride may not arrive and I wouldn't want to be marked absent for this reason. Also, trains are often late during snowstorms, making students late."

These remarks came from Tom Sproul, a junior majoring in Industrial Administration, who lives in Clifton Heights, Pa.:

"In past years, it has taken me two hours to get to school when it would normally take me 35 minutes. The chances of having an accident in snow are far greater than on clear days.

Tom Sproul

"Many students will drive on snow days because of inadequate public transportation. Even the buses and trolleys in operation have to put up with cars that get stuck in front of them.

'One day last year I almost had an accident as my car slid for 30 feet in the snow. A friend of mine who drives had an accident on this same day.

"The administration's policy should be reconsidered because both students and teachers who live off campus face dangers in coming to school."

Public Transportation

Faith Connor, a senior in the nursing division, from Paoli, Pa. a day-hop, stated:

"I live eight miles from school and have found public transportation to be totally inadequate for the purpose of getting to Villanova on days when it snows. Bus schedules never coincide with class schedules.

Faith Connor

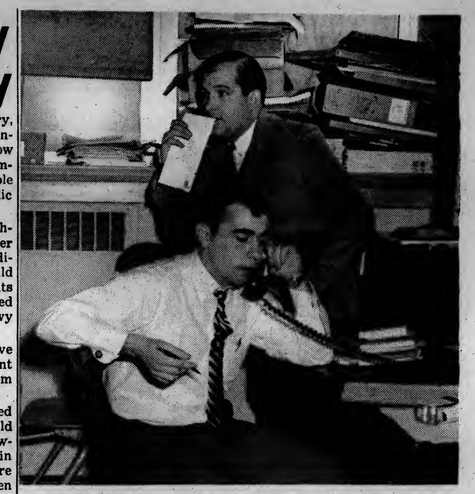
"The administration's policy is not geared to the realities of the present situation. Another thing which must be considered is the road condition.

'Roads in the Villanova area are slippery, slide-prone, and generally dangerous and hazardous on snow days. They are usually jampacked with cars, since people realize how inadequate public transportation is.

'Every car on the road without necessity adds more danger to the already hazardous condition. The administration should consider the individual students whose lives may be endangered by venturing out on snowy days."

Rusty Miller, an executive vice-president of the Student Government Association, from Havertown, Pa., commented:

"The administration stated that public transportation would be adequate on snow days. However, public transportation in the Philadelphia area (where many Villanovans live), even during the slightest snow fall is obviously anything but adequate.



Rusty Miller

'Having attended high school in the City of Philadelphia for four years, I am well aware of the conditions which exist during snowstorms. Even for those students who drive, the main arteries are completely clogged, making progress extremely difficult.

'Due to these factors, I feel that the administration should reconsider its present policy."

All the above students expressed opinions contrary to the present policy. If anyone supports the policy, they are invited to write letters to the editor.

Communist China's 'Justice' Discussed At VU Law Forum

By Walt Baginsky

"The Quest for 'Justice'" in Communist China was the topic of an address as Professor W. Allyn Rickett of the University of Pennsylvania spoke at the third meeting of the 1964-65 Law Forum.

In his introductory remarks he traced the development of the complete legal system in China but noted that its continued presence was dispensed with as the Marxist ideology gained dominance. With the advent of Chinese communist terrorism and the detrimental revolutionary atmosphere which it brought, the Professor stated that in China's position, "Revolution itself is the antipathy of legality."

Professor Rickett spoke not only with much educational felicity but also with a deep sense of personnal experience with Communist China's 'justice'. As a Fulbright scholar to China, he and his wife were imprisoned in Peking from 1951 to 1955 on charges of espionage.

In the body of his lecture, the Professor detailed his harrowing experience with Communist China's farce legal procedures. He stated that "they have no regulation against murder." Most of their laws deal with economic and social matters-criminal law was irrelvant. Also he revealed that right of defense to personnal accusation was "alien to Communist China's ways of doing things." In general, he added, human rights as we in the western world know it were "not known, let alone asserted, by the Communist Chinese regime."

In his concluding remarks, Professor Rickett cited that the central problem facing present day Communist China in regard to true justice is the need for "true independence of the court system and legal profession from communist party dominance."

Psychology Department Adds New Physiological Lab Course

Dr. Eugene Albrecht, chairman of the Psychology Department, has announced Villanova will be the fourth university in the U.S.A. to inaugurate a striking, new lab course on Physiological Psychology."

The course will differ from biological or physiological lab courses in that it will mainly be concerned with relationships of central nervous system controlled physiological processes, and those behavioral manifestations normally studied by psychologists.

The course's objective will be to create an awareness of psychophysiological correlates of behavior. In regard to this matter, Dr. Albrecht has added that the central nervous system's anatomy and endocrinological factors responsible for behavioral adjustments in given stimulus situations will also be studied along with certain basic chemical agents capable of influencing behavior.

In his final observation, Dr. Albrecht included that the inception of this novel course at Villanova reflects the growing emphasis that in order to understand "Behavior" the biological concomitants deserve greater emphasis.

All those interested in obtaining further information on this specific course should contact either Dr. Albrecht or any faculty member of the Psychology Department.

Letters To The Editor

To The Editor,

A few important remarks in defense of Mr. Sartre are called for in view of Mr. Javers' article, "Sartre: Nihilism for Fun and Profit," in the Villanovan of December 9.

First of all, the title . . . of the article is ambiguous. One . . . interpretation is that Sartre's primary intention is fun and profit and that he is not a serious-minded philosopher. Another . . . is that Sartre is a philosopher who enjoys his work and publishes studies which happen to make money. The former of these interpretations is not a light one to make against a man like Sartre and should be backed up with objective evidence. Mr. Javers admittedly (to me) used the title as an "eye-catcher," his only evidence being that Sartre's publications do make money. This "evidence" could hardly, by itself, back up the first interpretation.

Secondly, Mr. Javers mentions that one of the reasons for the "rapid spread" of existentialism is that it can be readily absorbed in novel and drama form. Then, Mr. Javers remarks: "In consequence anyone who has read one or two of Sartre's popular works, consider (sic.) himself fully aware of existentialism in all its intricacies and refinements." With this I agree. It is no wonder, then, why I am surprised to see Mr. Javers offering criticism of Sartre's "more serious works" since he, admittedly (to me), has not read Sartre's serious philosophical works.

On the whole, Mr. Javers' criticisms are unfounded (although he agrees with some commentators on Sartre). For example, he writes: "He never attempts to prove his reasoning as a logical case. Instead, he gives enigmatic glimpses into the total experience of self-conscious being." This is not entirely correct. In such an important matter as his denial of God, for example, Sartre offers the reader of Being and Nothingness at least three arguments for his own position. Again, Sartre's philosophy would indeed appear "enigmatic" to someone who has not made a study of the "more serious works." One could hardly understand Sartre's "glimpses" into consciousness without knowing what Sartre means in The Transcendence of the Ego when he states that he accepts all that Husserl has to say about the "constituting consciousness." Certainly, one could not expect to discover these "reasons" in a novel or play, for no literary artist is concerned with such things explicitly.

Finally, Mr. Javers' knowledge of the existential movement is, admittedly, from secondary sources. Many of these works deserve suspicion of the "fun and profit" tag far more than Sartre's works. All of this is not to say that I am in complete disagreement with Mr. Javers' remarks on existentialism nor is it to say that I agree with Sartre's philosophy. There are many important areas of Sartre's philosophy which, I think, fail to stand up to human experience. But, his philosophy demands philosophical criticism, and this in turn requires a knowledge of the philosopher's own writings.

It is good to see an article about philosophy in the Villanovan. This letter, by no means at all, wants to cut short something so commendable or important. But, we can hope that future articles will be better researched.

Thomas W. Busch
Instructor of Philosophy

To The Editor,

In the December 9 issue of the Villanovan, there appeared the article, "Sartre: Nihilism for Fun and for Profit," by Ron Javers. As a reason for refusing the Nobel Prize, Mr. Javers apparently misquotes Sartre as saying, "It does not matter to me if I sign my books — Jean-Paul Sartre or Jean-Paul Sartre, winner of the Nobel Prize." Sartre made it quite clear in numerous statements that it did matter, and that is why he refused the prize.

The following quotation of Sartre is taken from the November 6 issue of LIFE magazine: "All the distinctions a writer receives lay his readers open to pressures that I do not judge desirable. It's not the same thing if I sign Jean-Paul Sartre or Jean-Paul Sartre, winner of the Noble Prize."

In another passage of his article, Mr. Javers states: "Sartre chooses to ignore the clamoring of the multitudes it seems. He is more concerned with the absurdity of himself, than with the fame or notoriety it may accidentally bring him." Since this seems to be a criticism, I wonder if Mr. Javers is suggesting that the philosopher should be "more concerned with the clamoring of the multitudes" and with the "fame or notoriety his philiosophy will bring him?

Further, Javers states, "He (Sartre) never attempts to prove his reasoning as a logical case." Indeed Sartre does not, but he clearly indicates that such reasoning is not a part of his methodology. If we are to be fair, we must attempt to understand any man on his own terms, especially when he clearly defines his terms. And I might add — to destroy a common misconception — understanding by no means implies acceptance. Intellectual humility is also a virtue, if not a moral resopnsibility. However, the final impression and tone of Mr. Javers article, unfortunately, is one of personal invective rather than serious and responsible criticism. In conclusion, nilhilism is a rather dreary business — hardly "for fun" — and I suspect that if it were "for profit," Sartre would have accepted the Nobel Prize.

I have no connection with the Belle Air and yet I feel that the nonsense and foolish tripe being written about it . . . must stop.

I feel . . . that the editors and staff of the Belle Air deserve the commendation of the entire student body and not the condemnation of a few self-centered individuals.

President Declares War

By Tom Bruderle

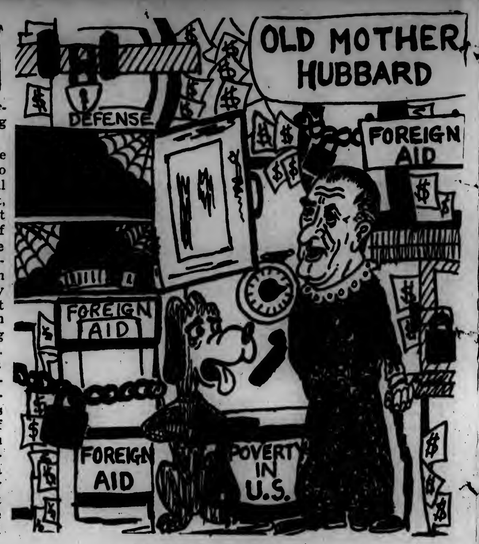
Last year, for the first time since 1941, an American President called for a declaration of war. It was not a call to arms to fight an external foe, but rather, one that is within our shores. It may be found in our cities, our towns, our industrial centers, our mountains and our valleys. To many it is unconsciously unseen, to others it is deliberately unseen, after all, poverty isn't a very pleasant thought.

Coming as it did, in an election year, many proclaimed the President's War on Poverty to be a politically inspired dole at the expense of hard-working Americans. Regardless whether it has poljtical implications or not, it is an attack on the vast under-developed sector of the American economy.

No Dole

And no, it is not a dole! The poor, despite their problems, are staunchly individualistic, but individualism stands little chance in a vicious circle of poverty breeding poverty. Hopelessness replaces aspiration, despair replaces initiative, and nothing can replace the youthful exuberance of the young who leave.

The key to a brighter tomorrow, for both the poor and the United States as a whole, lies in the aid which only the Federal Government can supply. Local communities are stymied by a lack of funds, while many supposedly progressive states are locked in the archiac grip of a rurally dominated conservative legislature. The buck is passed on to Washington, as indeed it must and indeed it should.



Only the Federal Government can provide the funds and administrative ability necessary to successfully handle an undertaking of such scope. Poverty may be found in many fields: housing, education, old age, unemployment and so on. Any comprehensive plan to eradicate this "other America" in its entirity, will require the type of massive attack that can be mounted only in the nation's capitol.

No Immendiate Results

The President's Applachia program will not immediately yield results, but its mere conception and programming mark important first steps. Not only do the poor lack the tools to better themselves, but they are enveloped by a feeling of complete desolation and utter hopelessness because no one cares. They have no political voice on the federal, state, and/or local levels to even to threaten to effect a change.

But now it appears that someone does care, no matter what the motive, there is even reason to dare to hope. Although it probably never will destroy poverty by itself, hope is important because it is something that was not present earlier.

Perhaps the benefit of the doubt should be extended to those who cynically believe the War on Poverty to be a political stunt. If it accomplishes the goal of enabling one-third of our population to enjoy the economic and social fruits of the world's most properous civilization, we will have reason to take pride in our much-maligned political system.

All right, all right, I'll open the cubbard!

Reapportionment Necessary

Like any major judicial decision, last year's "one man-one vote" re-apportionment ruling handed down by the Supreme Court will be analyzed from any number of viewpoints.

The purpose of re-apportionment is to rectify the present inequality of proportional representation between the heavily populated urban areas of our states and the now dominant yet sparsely settled rural locales. Because of this artificial preponderance state aid to education, as well as to other fields, is thwarted, with the end result being a request from both the state and local levels for financial assistance from Washington.

Amidst the clamor for Federal aid are the murmurs of those condemning the National Government for entering an area where only the states should tread. Granted that Federal funds for education are to be avoided when possible, but when the cities with large and overcrowded public schools are unable to secure money from their state legislatures, where else are they to turn?

The problem does not lie solely within the area of education, but also in such programs as mass transportation, urban renewal and slum clearance, and President Johnson's War on Poverty. These and many other state problems could be met, at least partially, on the state level were it not for rurally managed and manipulated state legislatures and assemblies. In many instances, those who chastise the high tribunal's "one and one" decision are placed in the awkward position of criticizing the fruits of their own archaic and supposedly self-righteous traditions.

Laurels Predicted For Cinema Production Of 'My Fair Lady'

By Tom Bruderle

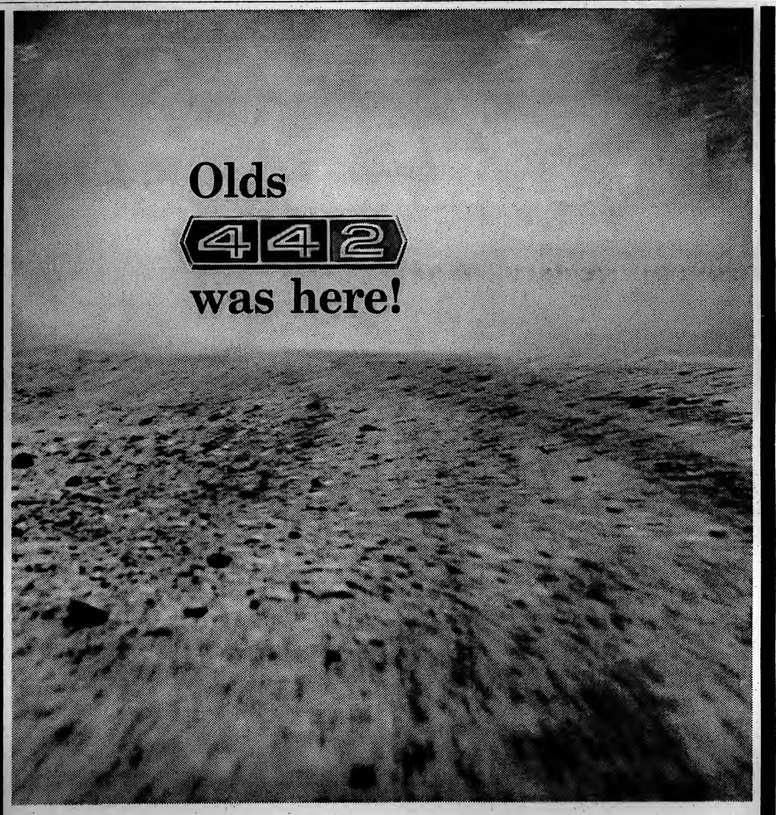
Several years ago a leading cigarette concern began its advertising on radio and television with the words "couldn't be done, couldn't be done!" spoken in an echo chamber. That very same comment could be used to describe the here-to-fore chastisement of Hollywood for its many futile attempts at producing a smash Broadway show on film.

Happily and surprisingly, the movie version of My Fair Lady, now appearing at the Stanley Theatre in Philadelphia, proves this euphenism to be, at least temporarily, wrong. In fact, "Lady" which has been at the Stanley since mid-November, has been tabbed as one of the season's top motion pictures.

As nearly everyone must know by now, this adaption from George Besnard Shaw's Pygmalian, deals with the noted fictional linguistics expert Professor Henry Higgins, played by Rex Harrison, and his attempts to fashion a mature and sophisticated young lady from an illbred, cockney flower-girl, played by Audrey Hepburn.

Harrison, who played the Professor on the stage, turned in a masterful and engaging performance as the woman-hating yet pitiable Higgins. Yet Miss Hepburn somehow appears out of place as the piece of "cabbage" (or so says Higgins) known as Eliza Doolittle in her shabby clothes, uncouth mannerisms and dirty face.

For some reason, Miss Hepburn just doesnt bear much resemblance to a flower-girl, with all due respects to her make-up artist. Eliza's introduction into society brings out the real Audrey Hepburn and the change is stunningly beautiful. Despite this mild drawback, she turns in a better than creditable performance.



The best character of all has to be Eliza's irrepressible father, Alfie. Although he doesn't play an important role, Stanley Holloway's rollicking impersonation of the still spry old man, particularly in the numbers "With a Little Bit of Luck" and "Get Me to the Church on Time," was lively and a joy to watch.

From here, the most humorous scene of the picture occurred during Eliza's debut in the staid, refined British society via a day at the races. The race itself cannot be seen by the movie audience, however. The horses do blur across the screen as they pass in front of the actors.

With a two-pound wager on one of the contesting plugs, it appears that Eliza's horse is doing well. She, nevertheless, does not agree and momentarily forgets herself as she none-too-quietly suggests that it (the horse) can do better by more strenously activating a certain portion of its anatomy.

It isn't necessary to detail the reaction by both audience and actors.

My Fair Lady has all the songs, characterizations, cleverness, sarcasm and sheer enjoyment of its stage predecessor. The only criticism that can be leveled at the production is that it unfortunately has to end.

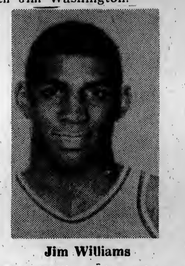
With the graduation loss of Frank Corace and Walt Sampson, Coach Bob Walters charges were a big question mark. But the Explorers have jelled remarkably well and should provide the 'Cats with quit a chalng. Currntly sporting a 7-3 log, th Explorers copped fith place in the Holiday Festival, losing to eventual champion St. John's 78-71 in the opening round, then coming back to down Syracuse and Temple.

In their only Big Five contest to date, LaSalle put on a strong second half spurt to defeat Penn going away. The Explorers also number N'agara and Miami among their victims, the Niagara win coming on the Purples' home court, no mean feat.

The sparkplug of the Explorer attack is senior guard Curt Fromal. The 5-9 speedster has been averaging close to 15 points while leading the LaSalle fast break flawlessly. Considered the fastest backcourt man in the city, Fromal should provide a strong test for the 'Cats defense.

Mainstay in the Explorer frontcourt is 6-7 veteran George Sutor. So far this season Sutor has been inconsistent, but on a good night he can be rugged under the boards. By far Walters' most pleasant suprise this season has been the play of rookie guard Hubie Marshall. The 6-0 star from Coatesville High has displayed a deadly shooting eye and gives a consistent scoring punch to the offense. "He's going to be one of the finest guards in the city's history," said Walters. " He's really coming along."



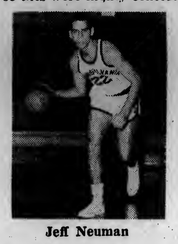
George Sutor

Rounding out the Explorers' starting lineup are George Paull, a 6-4 sophomore star from Cardinal Doughtey who hits the boards hard and never stops hustling and Al Tezla, the vastly improved 6-4 senior who has turned into LaSalle's top defensive player.

Temple

This was the year that Temple was supposed to wni the Big Five championship, but from the way they have played so far, you'd never know it. Owl coach Harry Litwack has possibly the greatest amount of talent he has ever had in his long reign at Temple, but his charges have been somewhat less than outstanding to date, posting a lackluster 5-4 record.

The only consistent performer for Litwack has been his 6-8 center Jim Williams. The junior from Norristown High leads the Owl scoring parade with a 17 plus average while hitting the boards for almost 19 rebounds a game. Greatly improved over last year, when he was an All-City selection, he should hook up in quite a backboard battle with Jim Washington.



Jim Williams

After Williams, it's take your pick, as none of the other Owls have displaye danything even resembling a sustained effort. Chris Kefalos, a 6-4 sophomore guard, has shown signs of becoming a deadly outside shooter, as in the Penn game, but so far he has been sparodic. 6-6 Ken Morgan can be rugged off the boards and a decent shooter from the corner, but the West Philadelphia junior needs to acquire some finesse.

Dan Fitzgerald, Bill Kelley and Vince Richardson, all heavily counted on by Litwack at the season's outset, have been unimpressive. If Litwack does not receive help from this trio, the Owls could be in for a long season.

Penn

This could be the grudge game of the year as the 'Cats will be anxious to swamp the Quakers after being almost upset by Penn's ball-control tactics in the Quaker City Tourney. Despite a 5-4 record, Coach Jack McCloskey's boys can be rugged. Three of their defeats came at the hands of city rivals LaSalle, Temple and Villanova, but all three tilts were highly contested.

Jeff Neuman

Leading the Quaker offense is Jeff Neuman, a 6-1 guard with blazing speed, great playmaknig moves and a deadly shooting eye. The other half of the Penn scoring punch is 6-2 forward Stan Pawlak, who despite his size, has good scoring moves in the pivot.

then anchored the 400 yard freestyle relay.

Rich Lamb and Allan Fischer, both of whom swam on the relay team, also garnered individual specialities. Lamb took the 200 yard freestyle, while Fischer captured the 50 yard freestyle.

Len Cappellaro won the diving competition for Villanova for the fourth straight meet.

This Saturday, both the varsity and the freshmen travel to Princeton, New Jersey.

This past Wednesday, Villanova swept every event in defeating Seton Hall 78-16, in the Field House. The Wildcats placed first and second in seven of the 11 events in extending their record to 3-1.

Rick Girdler was the meet's only double winner, capturing the 500 yard freestyle, and the 200 yard individual medley.

Other winners for Villanova were: Ray Donnelly in the 200 yard freestyle, Dug Rebak — 50 yard freestyle, Roger Guthrie — 200 yard butterfly, Joe Parell — 100 yard freestyle, Bob Frey — 200 yard backstroke, Pete Ancona — 200 yard breast-

Villanova Catfish Drown Rutgers 56-39 As Records Are Set

By Jerry Bruderle

Villanova's varsity swimming team upped its record to 2-1 by splashing to a 56-39 victory over Rutgers University in a meet in which two pool records were established by Villanova. The freshmen also defeated the Rutgers freshmen 52-43 to remain undefeated and set one pool record in the process.

Varsity captain Rick Girdler set a Rutgers pool record in the 200 yard freestyle, and also captured two other first place finishes. Girdler did the 200 in 1:52.0, seven-tenths of a second faster than the old record.

Rick also took the 500 yard freestyle, and then anchored the 400 yard freestyle relay to victory.

Pete Ancona set a pool record in the 200 yard breaststroke, clipping half a second off the old record.

Ray Donnelly, who swam in the freestyle relay, also placed first in the 100 yard freestyle and second in the 50 yard freestyle.

Bill Livingood in the 200 yard butterfly, also placed first for Villanova. In the freshmen meet, Villanova, recorded its fourth straight win. Mike Fitzmaurice captured two individual titles and one relay triumph in addition to setting a pool record for the 200 yard medley.

Mike chopped 12.6 seconds off the existing mark. He also captured the 100 yard freestyle and

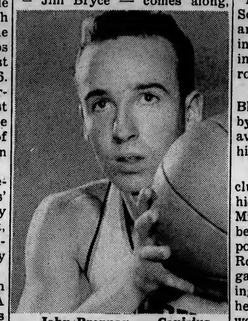
Rough Road Ahead For Kraftmen

By Joe Maffongelli

Within the next month the Wildcat cagers will face an eight game schedule which would be enough to scare a Hawk. Aside from the Big Five contests with LaSalle, Temple, and Penn, the 'Cats will face five other clubs whose combined won and lost record now stands at 31 and 16.



The Titans of Detroit University, winners of six of their first eleven starts to date, will face the 'Cats in the first games of a twin bill at the Palestra on Saturday evening, January 23.

Coach Bob Calihan has literally put together five 'Titans' for his crew as only one boy stands under 6-4. He, Lou Hyatt, happens to be the team's leading scorer at about twenty points a clip.

Being hot off a 63-64 season which saw them crack an NCAA record by averaging 96.1 points per game, they've already hit the hundred mark four times this season and entered the Motor City Tournament averaging over 90. The scoring ability of this club is further asserted by the fact that four of the five starters have consistently hit in double figures. Of these four, three have averaged over ten rebounds per contest also.

The tallest of these 'Titans is the center — Dorie Murrey — who towers at 6-8. John Schramn stands 6-6, while Terry Page and John Watson are a "modest" 6-4 in stature. Hyatt is the only midget of the five at 6-2.

Coach Calihan has praised this club for their balance and their improving defense. He added that when his sixth man — Jim Bryce — comes along, he'll be in excellent shape. This lad was a Junior College All-America for two years at Burlington before donning the Cardinal and White.

John Brennan — Canisius

A team with such scoring potential whose only losses have been at the hards of Prudue Notre Dame, Indiana, Penn State, and Minnesota can always be counted on for a real tough game.

On Sundray, January 31, the Civic Arena at Pittsburgh will see the 'Cats take on the Dukes of Duquesne. This should be a real thriller.

Wildcat guard Billy Melchioni will have a rough time leading the backcourt men in scoring while playing on the same boards with Willy Somerset. "Playing better than ever," Somerset has averaged right around thirty points while leading his team to seven victories in the first ten games of its roughest schedule in years.

The potency of the Red and Blue backcourt is strengthened by Ron Willard who has been averaging over twenty points on his own.

Big 6-8 Walt Lausteh provides clutch rebounding strength from his center position, while Frank Mineotas and Jim McNulty can be counted on at the forward posts. Another regular — Wille Ross was injured in the opening game of the season after scoring 18 points. His recovery will help to strengthen an otherwise weak reserve corps.

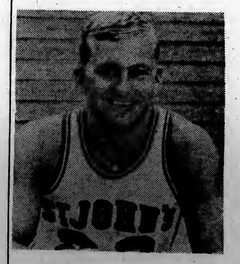
On Wednesday, February 3, the 'Cats should encounter their only breather of the eight game skein. The Griffins of Canisius seem to be suffering after a poor showing last season. The only high point in their season has been the victory over touted Georgetown.

Bob MacKinnon has a rather small and inexperienced starting combo. Frank Swiatek and John Brennan stand 6-4 and are the only starting seniors. A pair of 6-1 sophs — guards John Morrison and Andy Anderson — are the only double figure scorers, while another soph — center

Willie Somerset — Duquesne

6-7 Dennis Miska — is the team's leading rebounder.

Three such fine sophomores provide hope for the future but little else for the present.



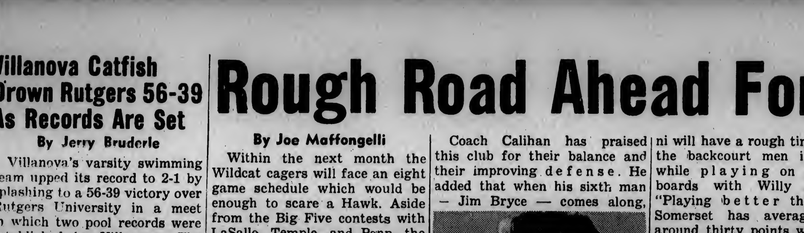
A different story will be read to the 'Cats when the announcer presents the Blue Demons to them in the Palestra on February 6. This DePaul quintet, coached by Ray Meyer, has suffered only two losses so far. These were to Indiana and a one pointer to Louisville. The Demons have won the other eight games which they've played.

Having no real super-star, this club is carried by five consistent ball players all of whom have been hitting double figures on most occassions. The center — 6-10 Dave Mills — is the only 'giant' member of the Scarlet and Blue cast; but Jesse Noah, Don Swanson, Jim Murphy, and Tom Meyer all stand over 6-1.

The hectic eight game streak will end on February 9 in the VU Field House. At that time the Redmen of St. John's will attempt to scalp the 'Cats. All sports enthusiasts who followed the Holiday Festival in New York City realize the caliber of this club.

Led by Bob and Kenny McIntyre, the Redmen have been topped only by St. Joe's and Kansas. Their seven wins included the likes of Temple, Miami, and Notre Dame, before they tore through the Christmas classic with victories over LaSalle, Cincinnati, and powerful Michigan.

While Kenny McIntyre is leading the point department with



Ken McIntyre — St. John's

17 per game, brother Bob is the rebounder with 11 per game.

Bob Duerr, Jerry Houston, and Lloyd Dove, the other three starters, are all capable and strong competitors.

If the field house jinx on foes continues the 'Cats may return to the top while the Redmen will probably play there for the last time.

Hawks Win Tourney; Wildcats Fourth

By Steve Freind

St. Joseph's did it again. Employing their patented defensive hustle to the fullest, Jack Ramsay's Hawks clawed their way to the Quaker City Tournament title, knocking over Holy Cross and national powers Illinois and Wichita in the process. The triumph kept the tourney crown in Philadelphia for the fourth straight year and rocketed the Hawks to fourth and sixth place in the national polls, despite a loss last Saturday to unbeaten Providence.

By winning, St. Joe's also became the first team in the history of the four year tourney to cop the title twice. Villanova won the inaugural tournament, followed by St. Joseph's and LaSalle.

Jack Kraft's Wildcats placed fourth in this year's clash, edging Penn in overtime in the opener, then dropping close decisions to Wichita and Illinois.

Penn

In a preview to their Big Five clash with the Quakers, Villanova overcame an eight point second half deficit and eliminated Penn in overtime, 52-47. Quaker Coach Jack McCloskey, saddled with two straight losses to LaSalle and Temple, decided to play this one close to the vest and ordered his charges to use ball control tactics.

The tempo of the game is illustrated in the 19-19 halftime score as Penn took as much as five minutes to set up a shot. On the outside sniping of Jeff Neuman and the baseline drives of Stan Pawlak, the Quakers jumped into a commanding 30-22 lead with nine minutes gone in the second stanza.

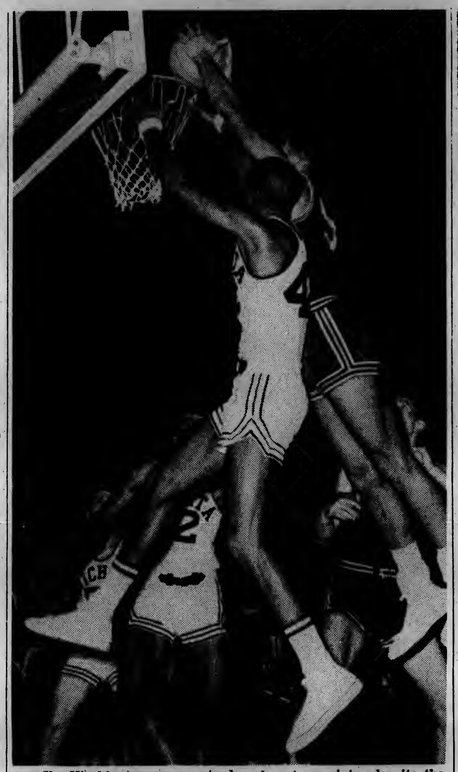
Unable to overcome the Quakers' freeze tactics with his normal zone, Kraft sent the 'Cats into a man-to-man with eight minutes left in the tilt. Sparked by a Bill Melchionni steal and a jumper by George Leftwich, the 'Cats rallied to a 40-37 lead with 3:51 remaining on the clock. Neuman and Pawlak got hot again and knotted the score at 42. With 1:18 remaining and Penn in possession of the ball, Kraft inserted reserve Kevin Traynor to guard Pawlak head to head.

The hustling junior barely gave Pawlak room to breathe and Penn called time out with 20 seconds left to set up a final shot against the 'Cats man-to-man.

The overtime period was all Villanova's. When Neuman fouled out with only a minute gone in the extra stanza, school was out for the Quakers. Leftwich hit a jumper and four fouls, Melchionni connected with a jumper and sub Pete Coleman added two fouls to give the 'Cats their victory. Melchionni led all scores with 16 points while Leftwich added 13. Jim Washington, completely recovered from a mild early season slump, dumped in 12 points and was a demon off the boards, hauling down 17 rebounds. Pawlak and Neuman led the Quakers with 12 points apiece.

Wichita

The Villanova victory streak ended at eight as Wichita's fifth-ranked Shockers handed the 'Cats an 86-74 setback. The 'Cats battled their towering opponents on even terms the first half, gaining a 37-37 tie at intermission. With ten minutes remaining in the game, the Shockers began to open up a lead as the 'Cats went cold from the floor. Kraft sent the 'Cats into a man-to-man to combat the Wichita freeze but the Shockers would not be denied.



Two factors were directly accountable for the 'Cats' loss. Most important was the 'Cats' miserable display of foul shooting, connecting on only 18 of 34 attempts from the charity line. Had the 'Cats hit their fouls, they could have taken a 10 point lead to the locker room at the half.

The other factor was a rare off night for the 'Cats scoring ace Bill Melchionni. The normally deadly guard hit on only 4 of 17 attempts from the floor, netting only eight points. In all fairness to Melchionni, it must be remembered that Wichita employs a full court press the entire game. Melchionni had to bring the ball up almost every time and, tired by this, many of his second half shots were short.

Standout among the 'Cats was Jim Washington. The 6-7 leaper was sensational, hauling down 19 rebounds while burning the nets for 23 points on 8 for 17 shooting. Gerge Leftwich and Eric Erickson added 15 and 11 respectively. Shocker star Dave Stallworth, ultimate MVP of the tourney, lived up to his All American rating, tallying 29 points, along with 12 rebounds and 6 assists.

Illinois

Villanova dropped their second game in a row in the consolation round to the ninth ranked Illini, 74-65. Putting four men in double figures, Illinois jumped to a 46-35 halftime lead.

Jim Washington goes up to drop in a two pointer despite the efforts of Wichita's Dave Stallworth. Washington starred in the game but the 'Cats dropped an 86-74 decision to the powerful Shockers.

Christmas in Review

By Steve Freind

The holiday tournament dust has finally cleared and it's interesting to reflect upon the Christmas classics and exactly what they proved. To begin with, they once again illustrated the high caliber of ball played in the East.

Each Christmas the high scoring, midwestern powerhouses invade the East to do battle in the Quaker City and Holiday Festivals. Arriving with their typical run-and-shoot offenses, top national rankings and a complete disdain for anything that even resembles defense, the western lads receive a lesson in how basketball should be played almost every year.

Last season, for instance, the likes of Loyola and Northwestern charged into the Quaker Tourney, only to have LaSalle walk off with all the marbles. The New York scene was little different as western powers Dayton, Utah and Minnesota fell prey to tourney champion Villanova.

This year, the script was the same. Mighty Michigan, ranked No. 1 in the nation, rolled into Madison Square Garden and were odds on favorites to take the title in a cakewalk. The handwriting was on the wall for the Wolverines when Princeton played them off their feet before succumbing by two points. The only reason Michigan was able to emerge from that one unscathed was that Bill Bradley, the Oxford-bound wunderkind, fouled out with four minutes left in the tilt, leaving his teammates a 12 point lead which they quickly squandered.

The Wolverines' joy was only short lived as St. John's, a 15 point recent loser to St. Joseph's, rallied from a 17 point deficit in the final nine minutes to topple the favorites 75-74 and preserve eastern court prestige.

Meanwhile, back in Philadelphia, the St. Joe's Hawks were doing their bit to enhance the roundball rating of eastern basketball. The Hawks blew a 16 point lead to heavily favored Illinois, then came back to edge the Illini when the pressure was on. But Ramsay's Raiders were only warming up. The boys from City Line proceeded to run Wichita's second ranked Shockers off the court. True to form, Shocker Coach Gary Thompson began to shed tears over the unfair refs and unruly crowds, vowing never to return to the Palestra.

True, discretion is the better part of valor, but Mr. Thompson seems to forget that his own home court is regarded as nothing less than an absolute snakepit. The truth of the matter is that, while the Hawks and St. John's did enjoy a decided home court advantage, they triumphed merely because they play a better brand of basketball than their western foes. Out west, they define defense as that period of time without the ball and therein lies the tale. Nine times out of ten, a team that playes defense will prevail over a run-and-shoot outfit. When a western team comes up against a zone defense, they have to call time to figure out what it is. The same holds true for most southern teams. Thus it is that such powers a Davidson, Illinois, Michigan and West Virginia generally leave a tilt with an eastern team with the taste of defeat in their mouths, only to return home and fatten their ratings against their no-defense counterparts.

Which brings up another point, namely the criticism of Coach Jack Kraft for the showing of his Wildcats during the Quaker City Tournament. The complaint goes that Kraft's boys are entirely devoid of an offense and put together a pitiful showing during the tourney. There may be some truth to the statement that Kraft somewhat neglects offense. This has been the case throughout his entire career at Bishop Neuman, Malvern Prep and Villanova, yet his record is one of remarkable success.

Kraft does not actually neglect offense. It's just that he stresses defense so much that sometimes the offense suffers. Kraft's theory, agreed with here, is that defense is the key in winning ball games. This holds true not just in basketball but in all sports. Check the statistics. The team that gives up the least points is the team that wins the ball games. Alabama, Arkansas, Notre Dame and Texas were the top football teams this year, and all were defensive leaders. The Boston Celtics are the toast of the NBA every year and, while it is true that the Celts have an explosive offense, it is equally true that they are the defensive leaders every year.

Bring on the girl cheerleaders.

'Cats Hit C'tury Mark Before Holiday T'rney As Pa. Frankies Fall

By Jim Proud

The season's first 100 point game was had by the Villanova Wildcats in their pre-tournament victory over Saint Francis of Loretto.

The game, played at the Jaffe Mosque in Altoona, was more of a practice session than a contest and gave the 'Cats some shooting practice they needed.

Saint Francis, a school of only 1500 students, in the first few minutes of the game played the type of game exhibited by Penn in the first round of the Quaker City Tournament. Then, seemingly captivated by the idea that they were as good a team, tried to play an open game.

The result, needless to say, was disasterous. In their repeated attempts to take quick shots they forgot about their lack of rebound control. Their biggest man was 6'7" and was playing with a face guard covering a fractured nose.

Every aspect of the game was dominated by the 'Cats. Led by Jim Washington in rebounding, clearing 15 in all, and Bill Melchionni in scoring, the Cat's faced almost no opposition on defense and all but scored at will in connecting on 54% of their shots from the floor.

Playing roles as the villagers are Hilda Bernstein, Jack Black, Vicky Lee Blunt, Dennis Ciesil, Yolanda Brutten, James Mason, Marge McGarry, Eileen Shea, John McPeak, Ed Hagan, and Joe Linsalata.

The production is directed by Mr. Richard Duprey and designed by Mr. Thomas Nevins, both members of the Villanova Theatre faculty. Box office hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday. Reservations can be made by calling La 5-4600, ext. 454.

Villanova Sorority's Annual Dinner Dance Set For Falcon House

Pi Theta Chi, Villanova's lone Sorority, which numbers most of the recently recognized female enrollment among its members, will stage its annual Dinner Dance on Saturday, February 13, 1965 at the Falcon House on West Chester Pike in Havertown.

Prior to the occasion a reception will be held — beginning at 6:30 — for all persons attending. The Dinner Dance will begin at 7:30, featuring music by the Revelers, and continue until 1 a.m.

Fifth Jazz Festival Theme: 'Tribute To Charlie Parker'

"A Tribute to Charlie Parker" will be the theme of the Fifth Annual Villanova Intercollegiate Jazz Festival which will take place Friday evening, March 19 and 20 in the University Field House.

Co-chairmen Ed Bride and John Paul Calabria will direct the Festival's activities. It is being sponsored by WWVU under the auspieces of the Student Government Association.

The 1965 Festival will have a dual purpose: to display collegiate Jazz at its best and to offer a tribute to the greatest innovator in Jazz since its inception — Charlie "Bird" Parker.

Tribute Due

The University of Pennsylvania, Temple University, Lehigh University, West Chester, Cheyney State, and Penn State will be a few of the local area colleges participating. All bands which have entered the Festival must adhere to this basic ground rule: they should be prepared to perform at least one number which will relate in some way to the work, either written or performed by Charlie Parker. On this matter, Eddie Bride has remarked, "We do not intend to stifle the originality of any band, but rather to pay a tribute which we feel is due, and to offer a common area to all groups, around which they can further create."

Mt. Everest Veteran; Author Highlight Forum Program

By Bob Fennel

Dr. Russell Kirk, columnist, author and one of America's foremost intellectuals and Dr. Woodrow Wilson Sayre, author, philosopher, and "conqueror" of Mt. Everest will highlight the Villanova Forum for this semester.

Kirk, who is scheduled to speak March 8, is referred to by Archduke Otto von Hapsburg as probably the best mind in American, and Hugh Gaitskell, leader of the British Labor party, said that he set back Socialism a generation.

Kirk, research professor of political science at C. W. Post college was a bachelor of arts at Michigan State University, a master of arts at Duke and a doctor of letters at St. Andrews of Scotland — the only American to hold the highest degree from this Scottish University. He is an honorary doctor of literature at Boston College and at St. John's University and an honorary doctor of laws at Park College.

Kirk has written over 400 essays and short stories which have appeared in leading scholarly journals around the world. In addition, he has a nationally syndicated newspaper column.

Dr. Woodrow Sayre, slated for April 7, besides being famous for his conquest of Mt. Everest and his best-selling novel, "Four Against Everest," is also a noted philosopher.

He has taught at Pomona College and until recently at Tufts University where his tenure was not renewed on the grounds that he did not publish a sufficient body of scholarly works.

Readings To Be Held For Belle Masque's 'The Birthday Party'

Readings for casting in the Belle Masque's Spring production of Harold Pinter's The Birthday Party will be held tonight and tomorrow night, Feb. 10 and 11 in 210 Vasey Hall at 7:30 p.m.

These try-outs are open to all Villanova students regardless of any previous acting experience. Prospective actors and actresses may try-out either night.

The production will be directed by Dr. Jackson G. Barry of the Graduate Theatre Department. It was through his leadership that The Birthday Party was chosen by the play selection committee after A Streetcar Named Desire was rejected by the administration (see page 7).

The Birthday Party opened it England in 1959 and shortly became a hit there. In 1960 the play opened at the Actors Workshop in San Francisco and was well received. Since 1960 Pinter's reputation has been respected among theatre circles.

The Orions will appear at the Senior Class party on Saturday night February 27 at the Crystal Ballroom in Havertown.

Richardson Dilworth Slated For Political Union Address

"Substantial federal subsidies" for mass transportation will be the topic as Richardson Dilwroth, former president of the Yale Political Union, addresses the Villanova Political Union on Monday evening February 15, at 7:30 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Dilworth, the former mayor of Philadelphia, was recently appointed by President Johnson as chairman of a special committee to develop a transportation program for the "Boston-Washington Corridor." As Philadelphia's Mayor from 1956 to 1962, Dilworth pioneered in programs, such as "Operation Northwest," to save mass transportation systems by government subsidy.

It is Dilworth's conviction that efficient mass transportation is essential to the survival and prosperity of metropolitan areas. He supported the principle of using federal funds to subsidize such programs believing such expenditures are just as legitimate as federal subsidies to highways.

Governor's Contest

In 1962 Dilworth ran as Democratic candidate for Governor, losing to Republican William Scranton in a hard-fought contest Dilworth had run earlier, in 1950, for the same office, polling 49% of the vote.

Dilworth is generally regarded as the most important figure in the overthrow ow the 67-year Republican reign in Philadelphia. His spirited, but losing, race for Mayor in 1947 gave heart to the Democrats. In 1951 the Democrats swept to power with Joseph Clark, now U.S. Senator, as their candidate.

Dilworth returned to Yale after World War I, having won the Purple Heat in France with the First Marine Division. He was on the crew and the football team as well as in the Political Union. Later he graduated cum laude from the Yale Law School where he was editor of the Law Review.

In World War II he served as a Captain with the First Marine Division in the Guadalcanal campaign and won the Silver Star. He has served as President of the American Municipal Association and of the U.S. Conference of Mayors. He has honorary degrees from the University of Pennsylvania and from Temple University.

Naval Aviation Team Will Arrive Today For Discussion Period

A Naval Aviation Information Team, under the aegis of Captain N. R. Charles, will be at Villanova today, Thursday, and Friday. The team consultants will discuss "Opportunities in Naval Aviation" with all interested students, graduate and undergraduate.

The representatives, situated outside the University Shop in Dougherty Hall during their three-day stay, will supply information concerning the Officer Candidate programs and other aspects of Naval Aviation. If the student does not contact the representatives during their stay, he will have to travel to Willow Grove for the same information.

Inquirer Editor To Address Literary Society Meeting

Literary Society President Tom Krause announced the society's schedule for the second semester on February 8. A reorganizational meeting will be held to discuss upcoming events in 207 Vasey Hall on Thursday, February 11 at 10:30 a.m.

First on the agenda this semester will be a talk by Mr. David Appel, book editor of the Philadelphia Inquirer. Appel will speak on books in general and the publishing business at a 10:30 a.m. society gathering on February 18.

Symposium

A major symposium of the society entitled "A Tribute to T. S. Eliot," will be held on Thursday evening March 4. In conjunction with this symposium, the society has purchased a number of Eliot's works and editions of The Waste Land and Other Poems are now available in the reserve room of the University Library.

Students may read the book and prepare to discuss Eliot at the symposium. As an added bonus, the paperbacks of Eliot's poems will be given out free — first come, first served — to those attending.

Roman Catholic Index

Another discussion slated this semester will focus on the Roman Catholic Index. On April 8, several members of the faculty and a student moderator will consider the Index's influence and value in modern America.

Aside from the scheduled events listed above, the society also plans to have discussions on the contemporary theatre and modern poetry. The works of several novelists, among them Saul Bellow and Thomas Wolfe, will also serve as subjects for literary discussion.

Old and new members are welcome at the first society meeting on February 11 to probe into the forthcoming semester's plans.

Fifty-five Villanova students have been conducting remedial reading classes in Philadelphia diocesan grammar schools for the past several weeks.

The program is sponsored by the Archdiocese of Philadelphia for the purpose of assisting students who have encountered difficulties in reading and reading comprehension.

Villanova volunteers can choose their oun teaching times and are asked to serve for an hour or more each week as an instructor.

Rev. Richard Appicci, dean of student activities, makes an urgent appeal to all Villanova students to participate in the program.

Television Coverage Planned For Upcoming Jazz Festival

The exact dates and price-scale breakdown for the Festival is as follows: Semifinals: March 19, Friday afternoon at 2 p.m., $1; evening at 7:30 p.m., $1.50 On March 20, Saturday morning at 11 a.m. there will be a workshop, cilinic or "jam session," 50c; afternoon at 2:30 p.m. $1. For the Final Session on Saturday evening at 8 p.m. the orchestra will be $2.50; and the balcony will be $2.

Cost

The cost of composite ticket for the entire series is: for orchestra seats Saturday evening $5 (save $1.50); or $4.50 for balcony seat Saturday evening (save $1.50). All tickets for preliminary sessions and the Jazz workshop (which includes a panel discussion clinic, and a "jam session" with professionals and amateurs) are for general admission — no reserve seats are available. Saturday evening seating will be on a first come, first-served basis. Because of national radio coverage the 8 p.m. time for Saturday evening will be adhered-to strictly as will the beginning of all other session.

Stan Kenton, who unfortunately was unable to attend the Festival last year, has expressed a strong desire to be here. Also, plans are being made for "live" coverage by ABC once again. Video tapes are to be made for use here in Philadelphia, and to be circulated throughout the Educational Television Networks in the country. As in recent years, the prize list will include cash, instruments, scholarships, bookings, and valuable exposure.

Award Offered To Undergrad For Best Personal Library

Villanova will participate in the competition for the Amy Loveman National Award of one thousand dollars given to the undergraduate who has the best personal library.

Official Group

The Library Committee will meet February 11 to determine the official university group that will handle the project. The national sponsors of the award are the Book-of-the-Month Club, the Saturday Review, and the Woman's National Book Association.

The contest deadline is April 30. Anyone desiring information can contact Mr. Rice, associate professor, Chemical Engineering, or Dr. Wilson Frescoln, chairman of the Modern Language Department.

"The purpose of the award is to encourage those undergraduates who have had the initiative to collect their own personal libraries. However, " the libraries should not be specially collected in order to win."

Martin Luther King Addresses Capacity Crowd In Field House

by Tom Krause

Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., interrupting his fight to register Negro voters in Selma, Alabama to address the Villanova Forum, stated last January 20:

"The Negro has come a long, long way in evaluating himself but we still have a long, long way to go before the problem (of integration) is solved."

The Field House was jammed with over four thousand persons to hear the Nobel Peace Prize winner speak on the "Challenge of a New Age." There were no demonstrations and the talk was covered by numerous radio and television stations .

King spoke with eloquence of the Negro's struggle for freedom, dignity, and the Negro's reevaluation of himself because of the change from plantation to urban living. On the positive side, he declared that "the whole nation has made great strides by extending the nation's frontiers on civil rights."

Civil Rights Bill

It was in this connection that King stated " the system of segregation is on its death bed." He noted "surprising and extensive compliance around the South" with the Civil Rights Bill, which he called a "second Emancipation Proclamation."

However, on the negative side, King said that "Segregation is still with us . . . If democracy is to live, segregation must die . . . Segregation is a cancer in the body politic." He also decried the circulating stereotype of the Negro which pictured him as responsible for a "cultural lag" or the "high crime rate."

Seminarian's

Dean Charles P. Bruderle, after reading several questions submitted by seminarians, asked the general question, "What can seminarians do (regarding the Negro's plight),"

King stated they should take an active part in civil rights.

Fellow Classmates,

The Senior Dinner Dance will be held Friday evening on February 26th in the Grand Ballroom of the Sheraton Hotel. The affair, the highlight of our senior year's social functions, will begin with cocktails from nine to ten, and the dinner will be served at ten o'clock. The music will be provided by the well-known Philadelphia society orchestra of Billy Butterfield until two A.M.

The menu will include:
Coupe of Fresh Fruit Hawaiian
Filet of Flounder stuffed with Crab Meat
Parsley Potatoes
Asparagus Hollandaise
Tossed Green Salad with French Dressing
Baked Alaska Parade
Rolls and Butter
Coffee, tea or milk

The affair for the first time will be held on a Friday and that is because the Sheraton had no free Saturday night. Due to the Lenten season being so early, we were forced to pick the 26th of February. In our bid for a general dispensation for the night we were turned down by the Archbishop.

The cost this year is higher but with good reason. In brief, the orchestra is more expensive; the gratuities tax at the Sheraton has risen; the main course is more expensive due to the Crab Meat; and, the favors also cost more. To compensate for this we are offering a "package" deal. The combined price for the Dinner Dance and the Senior Class Party, featuring The Orlons, on the following night is twenty-three dollars, while separately they will cost twenty and five dollars respectively.

Measurements for tuxedos will take place February 16 and 17th in Dougherty Hall. Ticket sales will commence on February 4th, and will be sold in the Student Council Office from 11 to 1 o'clock daily.

I sincerely hope that if there are any questions they will be directed to either Ernie Abate or myself because I feel that in this case we are most qualified to answer these questions.

Sincerely,
Denny Driscoll

Solemn Requiem Mass Offered For Reverend John J. McShea

Solemn requiem Mass was offered last Thursday morning in St. Thomas Church, Villanova, for the Rev. John J. McShea, OSA, who died on February 1.

Father McShea was 56 and had been a priest for 32 years. Ordained at the National Shrine of the Imaculate Conception, Washington, D.C., June 14, 1932, for 25 years he was a member of the faculty at Villanova, and for the past three years was a member of the board of trustees.

Studied at Oxford

Father McShea was the first Augustinian to study at Oxford University since the Reformation. He spent two years there and received the A.B. (Oxon.) degree. He served in the English Department at Villanova and was acclaimed as an English scholar.

He left Villanova in January 1963 to become prior of the Augustinian Community at Our Mother of Consolation Church, Chestnut Hill, the post he held at the time of his death.

Provincial

Divine Office was sung at Villanova on Wednesday afternoon. The Very Rev. James A. Donnellon, OSA, provincial, was celebrant of the funeral Mass. The sermon was given by the Very Rev. Robert E. Regan, OSA. Both Fathers Donnellon and Regan were members of Father McShea's ordination class. Burial was in the Monastery Cemetery.

A Warm Reception

Much to the surprise of its staunchest supporters and bitterest opponents, the concept of female cheerleaders has, thus far, proceeded without any adverse reaction from either fan or administration. In fact, one might actually say that there has not been much comment about them at all.

The cheerleaders first took the Palestra floor on January 8, the evening of the LaSalle game, midst a small amount of apprehension. Some concern, both public and private, was present over the attitude of the Villanova student body to the girls' presence. Any possible ill-feeling that had been expected to arise has given way to the exemplary conduct toward the girls which has thus far been displayed.

What makes this student response even more impressive was the atmosphere in which the girls were first introduced. A reporter, representing a well-known weekly sport magazine, was in attendance at the Palestra that night to analyze the brand of basketball played in the Philadelphia area, and in the Big Five, in particular.

A fan reaction other than that which was actually received, could easily have damaged Villanova's city reputation, not to mention the nation-wide effect.

The campus-wide acceptance of the girls might portend a here-to-fore unknown sense of student body maturity. Many SGA and adminstration proposals have perished for fear of an attitude of collegiate childishness on the part of the student body. But, if the reception accorded the cheerleaders is any indication, this malady, if it ever actually existed in the first place, could be said to have disappeared.

Letters To The Editor

To the Editor,

I have just finished reading the lead article of your January 8 issue: "Forum Features Dr. Martin Luther King" by Walt Baginsky. I was, pleased to learn that this great man spoke at Villanova . . . However I wish to call attention to several inaccuracies in Mr. Baginsky's article.

First Dr. King did not take a "verbal slash" at FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover, and he has never claimed that "Mr. Hoover did not effect thorough FBI action in Mississippi." Rather, it was Mr. Hoover who, by calling him "the most notorious liar in the country," deliberately sought to malign the character and reputation of Dr. King.

Hoover's thoughtless and irresponsible charge stemmed, ostensibly, from his belief that Dr. King had instructed civil rights workers in Mississippi (and elsewhere in the South) not to report greviances to local FBI agents. Dr. King has denied this and . . . Mr. Hoover has been unable to produce any concrete evidence to prove the contrary.

Moreover, with characteristic magnanimity, Dr. King declared that he had "nothing but sympathy for this man (Hoover) who has served his country so well." It is, nonetheless, a matter of record—among southern Negroes in any event—that the FBI chief has, to say the least, been grossly ineffectual in regard to protecting the rights, lives and property of Negro citizens in the South.

Second, Dr. King has not stated that "justice delayed is justice denied." In his recent book Why We Can't Wait, he does assert the following, however: "For years I have heard the word 'Wait'! It rings in the ear of every Negro with piercing familiarity. This 'wait' has has always meant 'never'."

We must come to see, with one of our distinguished jurists, (Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr.) that "justice too long delayed" is justice denied. Mr. Baginsky not only wrongly attributed the origin of the latter precept to Dr. King, but completely misquotes it as well.

And finally, Mr. Baginsky states that Dr. King's "preaching on non-violence ended segregation in the buses of Montgomery, Alabama." Indeed, the very idea of ending segregation—or any other social evil—merely by "preaching on non-violence" is patently rediculous.

The truth of the matter . . . is that Dr. King led a non-violent protest against segregation on Montgomery's buses. The protest, which took the form of a boycott of the buses by Montgomery's Negroes, lasted for more than a year and eventually led to a decision by the Supreme Court ordering Montgomery to desegregate its buses. Dr. King's experiences in Montgomery taught him the effectiveness of non-violence when properly used and directed.

Nowhere in Mr. Baginsky's article is the word "Negro" capitalized, whether or not this is a typographical error or an intentional spelling of the word, I have no way of knowing. But it irritated me considerably and I regard it as a personal insult.

Eugene Griffin

(The information for Mr. Baginsky's article was procured from reliable sources. The incorrect spelling of the word "Negro" was a typographical error. The Editor.)

To the Editor

Perhaps one should not endeavor to rectify flaws in another's moral code. However, when another's misdeeds have a detrimental effect upon his fellow students, they can no longer be tolerated. I am referring to the practice of obtaining term examinations before the examination is given.

Indeed, difficult examinations become a mockery as the indolent garner higher grades than the assiduous . . . Those who would not admit to its occurrence need only enter a dormitory previous to an examination.

One might ask the solution to such a problem. It is a simple one. Better care should be taken of prospective examination copies. They should not be left . . . . . behind a door which takes no Houdini to open.

Greatness In Trying

The emphasis placed on domestic affairs in President Johnson's address, and the lack of it, despite his State of the Union address two weeks earlier, reflects his desire to concentrate on the implementation of his "Great Society." Such proposed legislation as the new immigration bill, the Applachia Program, the job corps and retraining programs, and possible tax reductions later this year are all indicative of the President's belief that the "country is moving again," and therefore, the task is now to steer it in the right direction.

Mr. Johnson has never clearly described what his nebulous "Society" will entail, but it would appear to be the fulfillment of that equally nebulous concept known as the American Dream. The definition of this term has changed over the years but today, as found in the President's nine "I proposes" of his State of the Union address, we find the means Mr. Johnson plans to use.

The President's proposals call for such diverse measures as educational and voting opportunities for all, an attack on crippling and killing diseases, urban re-development and air-pollution control, and plans to honor and support creative thinking and the arts.

Being both a politician and a human being, if the two may be so unnaturally differentiated, the President does not expect his Great Society to be immediately realized.

Nevertheless, Mr. Johnson still must have the support of Congress and public opinion, both of which appear mesmerized by the Biblical phrase "The poor you will always have with you." Not only may the severe shortage of the necessities of life be considered poverty, but also the presence of unequal housing, voting and educational opportunities.

It is believed that poverty, misery, suffering and inequality have been, are, and always will be present and to attempt to effect a change is the highlight of futility. Each of these are so firmly entrenched that it seems almost humorous to seek their destruction.

The President would probably agree with this argument. In fact, he might quote from President Kennedy's own address when he predicted that the goals of his New Frontier would not be reached in the first month, year or even thousand days of his administration. However, Mr. Johnson would also say, as did his predecessor, "But let us begin."

Although the President has not detailed his Great Society, he has told us what it will not be. His Society is not an America cured of all her social, physical, mental and spiritual ills, for that is perfection and, while man lives in society, that goal will never be reached.

The Great Society is not one of perfection, but in the President's own words, "it is the excitement of becoming — always becoming, trying, probing falling, resting and trying again — but always trying and always gaining."

Sounds Of Note

By Bill McCloskey

For those of you who stay up late WWVU now broadcasts until midnight six nights a week.

A note from a far flung correspondent tells us that former all nighter Alan Scott who once interviewed some WWVU people on his WCAU program is now leaving the broadcast world . . . he's opening a cheese store in King of Prussia.

WXUR now wants WWVU to produce a weekly documentary for them. The boys from Dougherty Hall have been providing one every two weeks. The WXUR staff has been bolstered by Dan Morrow of WFIL and WIBG's own Bruce Davies who is using a pseudonym to keep the whole thing happy with the people at 99 Radio Row.

For those of you who wonder what traffic reporters do between rush hours we learn that Tom Stanwood of Atlantic's Go Patrol has his own show on WDVR-FM, the best FM station in the area for this reporter's money. George Baylie runs record hops in Belmont Hills, Pa. while not adding immeasurably to the morning show on Wibbage.

Fifty Villanovans were polled by Billboard Magazine shortly before the semester break. The results of the poll have been tabulated and will appear in the Villanovan soon. We can't quite figure out why but WXDT at Drexel has added the Go-Patrol to their broadcast services for students there.

spotism of the ancient empires to the totalitarian regime of the Incas.

Liberty and morality had to win their way slowly over many centuries, until finally expanding liberty made possible the great technological advance of the Industrial Revolution and flowering of modern capitalism. The reversion in this century to ever-greater statism threatens to plunge us back to the barbarism of the ancient past.

Labels

Statists always refer to themselves as "progressives," and to libertarians as "reactionaries." These labels grow out of the very cliche we have been examining here. This "technological determinist" argument for statism began with Karl Marx and was continued by Thorstein Veblen and their numerous followers-the real reactionaries of our time.

? The Draft ?

At some time during his final years of higher education, every college student must squarely face the question of the draft. Next week, The Villanovan will present the first installment of a two-part series entitled "No Draft by 1967?" This analysis will examine the case in favor of abolishing draft as called for by Senator Gaylord Nelson (D Wisconsin).

This feature will attempt to show the inability of the present Selective Service System as a means of maintaing the Armed Forces, and the attractiveness of a fighting force composed solely of volunteers.

Remember, the first of two controversial reports "No Draft by 1967?" appearing in next week's Villanovan.

Arlington and Inauguration Memories

By Tom Bruderle

Throughout his campaign President Johnson invited everyone of America's 192 millions to attend his January 20 inauguration in Washington. As seemingly endless waves of out-of-towners flocked into the Nation's capitol, it appeared that America almost to a man, had accepted the presidential invitation.

Like the International Olympiad, presidential inaugurations come every four years and each is acclaimed as being bigger, better and more colorful than its predecessors. So it was this year.

The various balls, gatherings, parties, festivities and other political hoopla and balderdash generally connected with such an event, changed this diplomatically staid and sedate District of Columbia into a New York-away-from-New York.

Texas — Largest

Although Texas is the Union's second largest state, anything planned by its citizens is usually the biggest thing imaginable, and make no mistake, Lyndon Baines Johnson is The Biggest Texan or them all!

The gala, celebrity-studded extravaganza on Monday, January 18; the Young Democrats blow-out on Tuesday; and the five Inaugural Balls on the BIG day itself, either singly or collectively were enough to take the sting out of the bitter cold weather for all attendees.

Like all abstract concepts, silence cannot be measured, heard seen or touched. Its presence is noted only in a negative fashion by the absence of sound. Provided you don't get lost, a feat easily accomplished in Washington no matter what the occasion, not a somber half-hour's ride from D.C.'s excitement, lies the peaceful, serene beauty of Arlington National Cemetery.

Moving, Poignant

A visit to this final resting-place of America's known and not so well known military heroes is a moving experience. But a visit to the grave-site of President John F. Kennedy, on Inauguration Day, 1965, is an extremely poignant one.

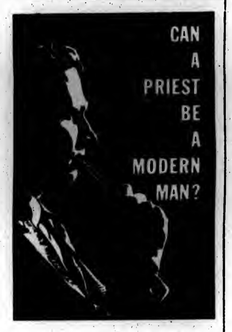
A small quiet knot of visitors stood around the white picket fence and watched the Eternal Flame dance in the cold wind. Within the site itself were several large wreaths, but the people virtually ignored them as they pointed to and spoke in hushed terms of the footprints and the simple white rose lying in the snow.

There were no handkerchief's in sight dabbing at tear-reddened eyes for it has been fifteen months since this memorial had to be erected, and the seige of shock which had gripped the nation had been lifted.

Nevertheless, at 10 a.m. on that Inauguration Day, the mind could not help but wander to another inauguration four years earlier to the day, and slightly more than two hours short of the exact time.

Another Man

So long ago, and yet not so long ago, another man stood on that very same platform, hatless in the cold, crisp air and recited the thirty-nine word presidential oath.



With an index finger jabbing the air for emphasis, his Inaugural Address dealt with many things. He spoke of a challenge and an acceptance of that challenge of a responsibility and an acceptance of that responsibility, and of freedom and a willingness to protect and extend that freedom for America's citizens and those of the world.

But above and beyond all else, he made a request to Americans which he, himself, tragically fulfilled: "Ask not what your country can do for you, but what you can do for your country." Although this sentence may eventually be consigned to a trite fate with other American sayings, its words can still stir the soul.

Other Thoughts

These and many other thoughts race through the mind as one prepares to leave Arlington. Despite a new and equally vigorous man in the White House, the events of that November day still seem unreal.

But time is bitter and time moves quickly. Four years is but a micron to the historian and yet, to some, it seems eras ago that the man who so excited the nation's imagination for the new decade of the '60's came to the national scene — only to leave so abruptly and violently.

variety

Robert Anderson

It's been written that "variety is the spice of life." But at many companies it's difficult to obtain a wide range of work experiences. A college graduate can join a company, get locked into one type of activity and stay there and stay there and stay there. That's not the way we do it at Ford Motor Company where our young men may work in several areas to develop their full capabilities. We believe that a thorough grounding in many phases of our business is one of the best ways to cultivate management talent. An example: Bob Anderson of our finance staff.

Since Bob came to us in July, 1963, he's been actively involved in five important areas of the Company. As a member of our finance staff, he has reviewed budget and cost programs of a division marketing cars, another manufacturing tractors and subsidiaries engaged in automobile financing and insurance. In addition, Bob was selected to assist in the 1964 national labor-management negotiations. His present assignment is as a staff budget analyst for product engineering and styling. Because of experiences like these, Bob will be able to channel his career toward the activity that interests him most.

As a large automobile concern, Ford Motor Company needs people who can handle a wide variety of assignments. Our college graduates come to us with all types of educational backgrounds. And many of them move into management positions unrelated to their degrees. If a fast-moving career appeals to you, see our representative when he visits your campus. He may have the spice for your future.

Play Is Rejected By Administration Bad Script Denied By Belle Masque

By Joe Linsalata

On campus recently there has been a small misunderstanding between the administration and the Belle Masque Society. At first, the society relinguished its stage in Vasey Hall to provide for remodeling and another Lecture Hall. This of course was necessary and beneficial since the present number of unused classroom is extremely scarce. Secondly, a play which had been chosen by the Belle Masque for its spring production was rejected by the administration.

The play originally scheduled for presentation was A Streetcar Named Desire by Tennessee Williams. However, the administration felt that this play would destroy the image of Christian gentlemanness which a Villanova student displays and also it would not be representative of a Catholic University's production during Lent. The major reason for this defensive attitude on the part of the administration is that the original production on Broadway, starring Marlon Brando, was condemned by the Catholic Church. This writer would like to clarity a minor point.

Whether or not the original production is condemned should have no influence upon whether the script be fitting for a Catholic university to use. A production is in the complete control of the director. It is within his control to make a show as saucy or obscene as he wishes. To condemn a production is in effect condemning the manner in which the director presents the play to the audience. It is by no means necessarily objecting to the author's script.

I have yet to notice the script A Streetcar Named Desire on the Index, so it would seem that by condemning the Broadway production the Catholic Church condemned the directors interpretation of — the play — not the script. Likewise the administration, by rejecting the play's presentation is objecting to the interpretation that the director, Dr. Jackson G. Barry, will give to the script. In actuality they are displaying very little confidence in one of their faculty member's ability to present a refined production of a play which has a completely moral plot with some, but few, suggestive scenes.

In the Broadway production the suggestiveness was overplayed; in a Belle Masque production, would Dr. Barry have enough integrity to tone down the few salacious scenes? The administration seems to have answered this question for both the director and the Belle Masque Society by rejecting the play for production.

Horse And Buggy Days?

by Brendon Brett

The Basic Fallacy of this all-too-common cliche is a confusion between technology and such other aspects of human life as morality and political principles. Over the centuries, technology tends to progress: from the first wheel to the horse and buggy, to the railroad and the jet plane. Looking back on this dramatic and undeniable progress, it is easy for men to make the mistake of believing that all other aspects of society are somehow bound up with, and determined by, the state of technology in each historical era. Every advance in technology, then, seemingly requires some sort of change in all other values and institutions of man.

Constitution

The Constitution of the United States was, undoubtedly, framed during the "horse and buggy" era. Doesn't this mean that the railroad age required some radical change in the Constitution, and that the jet age requires something else? As we look back over our history, we find that since 1776 our technology has been progressing and that the role of government in the economy and in all of society, has also grown rapidly. This cliche simply assumes that the growth of government must have been required by the advance of technology.

Flaws and Errors

If we reflect upon this idea the flaws and errors stand out. Why should an increase in technology require a change in the Constitution, or in our morality or values? What moral or political change does the entrance of a jet force us to adopt?

There is no necessity whatever for morality or political philosophy to change every time technology improves. The fundamental relations of men — their need to mix their labor with resources in order to produce consumer goods, their desire for sociability, their need for private property, to mention but a few — are always the same, whatever the era. Jesus' teachings were not applicable just to the ox-cart age of first century Palestine; neither were the Ten Commandments somehow "outmoded" by the invention of the pulley.

Technology

Technology may progress over the centuries, but the morality of man's actions is not thereby assured; in fact, may easily and rapidly retrogress. It does not take centuries for men to learn to plunder and kill one another, or to reach out for coercive power over their fellows. There are always men willing to do so. Technologically, history is indeed a record of progress; but morally, it is an up-and-down and eternal struggle between morality and immorality, between liberty and coercion.

While no specific technical tool can in any way determine moral principles, the truth is the other way round: in order for even technology to advance, man needs at least a modicum of freedom to experiment, to seek the truth, to discover and develop the creative ideas of the individual. And remember, every new idea must originate in some one individual. Freedom is needed for technological advance; and when freedom is lost, technology decays and society sinks back, as in the Dark Ages, into virtual barbarism.

A Glib Cliche

The glib cliche tries to link liberty and limited govenment with the horse and buggy; socialism and the welfare state, it slyly implies, are tailored to the requirements of the jet and the TV set. But on the contrary, it is socialism and state planning that are many centuries old, from the savage Oriental de-

ELECTRONIC ENGINEERS—MATHEMATICIANS. ALL DEGREE LEVELS

A NEW DIMENSION IN SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

In an era where the frontiers of intellectual endeavor demand constant investigation, imagination must be the crux of motivation.

The research laboratories at the National Security Agency exemplify that rare activity where imagination and a look at the possibilities of tomorrow are the accepted philosophy. A glance inside these modern, well equipped laboratories would reveal project teams engaged in a broad spectrum of scientific investigations.

Among them . . .

MAJOR COMMUNICATIONS SYSTEMS DEVELOPMENT—Design of new antennas, transmitters, receivers and terminal equipment. Constructing preliminary and basic engineering models to demonstrate the feasibility of using new communications concepts, techniques and circuits. Adapting and perfecting these through the design of a working prototype or field test model.

COMPONENT MINIATURIZATION STUDIES — Practical attempts, through basic design and analysis, to reduce the size yet improve the capability of communications and electronic data processing systems.

SYSTEMS SIMULATION STUDIES—Utilization of modern digital and analog computers to predict the feasibility of engineering ideas and innovations.

MATHEMATICAL INVESTIGATIONS—Exploring the phenomena of the intermarriage of mathematics and electronics in the design of secure communications systems; an essential element of the complex science of cryptology.

ENVIRONMENTAL TESTING—Proving the capabilities of components and systems by simulating atmospheric extremes. These tests are conducted with the latest equipment capable of simulating a wide variety of environmental conditions.

For the ENGINEER and the MATHEMATICIAN, NSA provides a unique variety of opportunities in a NEW dimension in science and technology . . . To assure the success of this venture, scientific employees are encouraged to pursue graduate studies at local universities under Agency sponsorship.

Army Sinks Villanova Mermen; 'Cats Record Now Even At 3-3

By Jim Proud

In their sixth dual meet of the season the Villanova mermen evened their season log at 3-3. The 'Cats third defeat came at the hands of the Cadets of Army.

Despite a double victory and a winning leg in a relay by Rich Girdler the Villanova swimmers were scuttled by the score of 63-32.

Girdler's two single victories came in the 200 yard freestyle and the 100 yard freestyle. His talents also aided the 400 yard freestyle relay team in winning their event.

Girdler's time in the 200 freestyle was 1:48.9, which was enough to enable him to win by a margin of three yards. His time in the 100 was also fast enough for a margin of victory. He finished in 48.8, .4 of a second ahead of the second place finisher.

Villanova's two other victories in the meet came in the 50 yard freestyle and the 200 yard butterfly.

The 50 yard freestyle was won by Ray Donnelly in the time of :22.5. Donnelly was also a member of the 400 yard relay team and his victory in the 50 yard free came ahead of a second and third finishing by Army cadets.

Roger Guthrie won the 200 yard butterfly in 2:08.3 and was Villanova's final victory of the day. In their winning of the meet Army won six events and had two of three finishers in the remaining nine events.

bucket by the Villanova athletic department last night, is retiring this year after a star-studded career as player and coach, College basketball will lose something when Mr. Lapchick says farewell to the game in March.

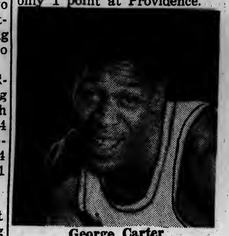
★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The play of Jim Washington during the past four weeks has been sensational. The 6-7 leaper has definitely labeled himself as an All-American candidate with his scoring, rebounding and savage defensive play. Washington has always had the ability to be great and many times during his career he has shown signs of greatness, but Washington's career has been plagued with inconsistency. When he played up to his potential, he easily outclassed anyone he went up against, but many times he was outplayed by men of far lesser ability. Since the Detroit game, where he was badly beaten by Dorrie Murrey, Washington has developed into a consistent superstar. It appears that Jimmy has learned that if he is to garner the All-American rating he deserves and go on to the fine pro career of which he is capable, he must play up to his great ability all the time.

The 'Cats great play of the last four week can be attributed to a great extent to a meeting called by Kraft after the Temple loss. At this meeting Kraft discussed what was being done wrong on defense and since that time the 'Cats have been putting a zone strangle hold on their opponents. Kraft also unveiled a new offense in the Detroit game which the 'Cats have used ever since. The offense employs double picks and a high post where either Washington or Soens feed to Melchionni and Erickson for drives. As a result the 'Cats have been able to take advantage of Erickson and Melchionni's driving ability, which not only results in layups but also loosens up the opposing defense for outside shooting. Said a smiling Kraft after the Detroit game, "We're getting open for the drives now. It's been a long time since a Villanova team has gotten layups off a man-to-man."

'Cats Battle Bonnies Saturday

by Rusty Miller



In the series between St. Bonaventure and Villanova the Wildcats hold a slim 11-10 lead. Next Saturday in Buffalo's Memorial Auditorium the Bonnies will try to even the record. Coach Larry Weise has five letterman returning but only two of them were able to cop a starting berth. Weise is depending heavily on three sophomores to round out his five.

The Bonnies are a well-balanced team in the scoring column. Their high scorer, soph George Carter is averaging 17.4 points per game. Six-eight center Paul Stappenbach has a 14 point average, Bob Barnek 14.1 and Dick Bauer 10.4

Rebounding Weak

In the rebounding department the Bonnies are weak. Their big man is pulling down only 10.6 per game. Soph George Carter is adding another 10. Jim Washington should have little trouble with Stappenbach. Between he and Bill Soens the Cats should dominate the boards easily.

Their balanced scoring attack has led the Bonnies to an 11-4 record so far this season before meeting Iona and Seton Hall this week. They gained an impressive win in defeating Duquesne by 2. More recently they downed Kentucky Weslean 103-73. The loss to Xavier at Xavier and to powerful Providence by only 1 point at Providence.

George Carter

Coach Weise is pleased with the work of his three sophomores and added that they are improving every game. Although he is pleased with the progress of his boys, he did not sound like a man who thought that his team was headed for any championship.

'CATS WIN SIX OF SEVEN

nova 61-33. Dorrie Murrey, Detroit's 6-7 center, tied a Palestra record by hauling down a fantastic 30 retrieves, completely bottling up Jim Washington in the process. Never before has Washington been beaten so badly as Murrey all but ran the 'Cat co-captain off the court.

The 'Cats held the lead almost the entire game, heading Detroit 41-36 at the half. With 10 minutes remaining in the game, Villanova hiked its advantage to 10 before the Titans came to life. Spearheaded by Murry and Don Page, Detroit battled back to take a two point lead with 2:10 remaining. Melchionni knotted the count with a jumper and after Murrey missed with a hook the 'Cats regained possession. Kraft ordered his boys to hold the ball until the final ten seconds. When Melchionni was fouled attempting a jumper, the stage was set for Billy's hero role.

Eric Erickson and Pete Coleman joined Melchionni in double figures with 12 and 10 respectiely. Lage paced the Titans with 23 while Murrey added 21.

Penn

Penn switched tactics but the results were the same as the Quakers fell to the 'Cats for the second time this year 75-46 in a City Series clash. The teams met once before in the Quaker City Tournament when Quaker coach Jack McCloskey drew fire for his ball control tactics. In that tilt Penn gave the 'Cats fits before falling 52-47 in overtime.

This time McCloskey had his boys running and the game was never in doubt at the Kraftmen raced to a 37-18 halftime lead and coasted home.

Jim Washington, back in form after the Detroit game, paced the 'Cat attack with 21 points The 6-7 All-American candidate also hit the boards for 16 rebounds and looked like a one man zone with hi defensive antics underneath the basket. Bill Soens turned in a 14 point, 16 rebound performance while Eric Erickson and Bill Melchionni combined for 23 points.

Duquesne

Combining one of their finest defensive showings of the year with 53% shooting, the 'Cats chalked up their thirteenth victory by hammering Duquesne 71-55. The Dukes' loss marked only the third time in three years they have been beaten on their home court, twice by Villanova.

The 'Cats were in command from the opening tap, taking a 37-22 halftime lead and upping that advantage to 25 in the second stanza before Kraft cleared his bench. Once again Jim Washington was the spark of the 'Cat offense, racking up 19 points and 15 rebounds. Bill Melchionni, despite a tremendous physical beating by the Dukes' hatchet men, matched Washington's point total.

Willie Somerset, the Dukes' All-America candidate, took game honors with 22 markers but most of his points came after the 'Cats were out of reach. The 'Cats put the clamps on Somerset's backcourt partner Ron Willard. Willard, going into the game with a 20-plus scoring average, was able to manage only 8 as Kraft's airtight zone proved to be brutally effective.

Canisius

Jim Washington and Bill Melchionni teamed up in a two-man offensive which proved to be too much for Canisius as the Griffs fell to the onrushing 'Cats 89-78. Washington, continuing his sensational play of the past three weeks, hit the boards for 16 rebounds while pouring in 24 points. Melchionni, shrugging off another beating by the Griffs' defensive butchers, hit his first seven shots en route to a 27-point night as the 'Cats shook off their stubborn opponents early in the second half and turned the game into a rout.

Game scoring honors went to the Griffs' Frank Swiatek who burned the nets for 34 points.

DePaul

Kraft's hustling 'Cats made it five in a row with an 85-67 thumping of nationally ranked DePaul. The Blue Demons opened the game with a torrid shooting display which threatened to blow the 'Cats out of the Palestra but the midwesterners soon withered under the Villanova zone. With Bill Melchionni applying pressure out front and Jim Washington handling the board situation, the 'Cats rallied from a 16-13 deficit to take a 43-31 halftime lead.

The Demons cut the 'Cats advantage to four early in the second sanza, but Melchionni and Washington rallied their forces and the Kraftmen raced home with their fifteenth win. Once again, Washington was absolutely sensational. The 6-7 co-captain, looking more like an All-American with every game, paced the 'Cat offensive with 24 points on 11 for 18 marksmanship. The big fellow also took game honors with 14 rebounds and constantly rattled DePaul with his great defensive play.

Melchionni suffered a sub-par (7-18) shooting night, but sparkled on defense. The junior guard was all over the guard stealing DePaul passes and triggering fast breaks. Especially pleasing was the play of George Leftwich, who showed signs of regaining his sophomore form with a 16 point output. Eric Erickson and Bill Soens also hit double figures, notching 11 and 13 respectively.

The 'Cats next step towards a trip to College Park is Saturday's clash with St. Bonaventure in Buffalo ket allotment for Field House games. Because of this, athletic director Art Mahan was consulted last week. Armed with exact figures, Mahan pointed out that the student body receives over 65% of all available tickets, which is quite a respectable figure considering that seats for press, radio, television, freshman and varsity team and their families, seminarians and alumni must also be provided. Concerning the alumni, there have been statements made to the effect that alumni should be barred from Field House games. Mahan pointed out that, while the entire student body receives free tickets for football games, the alumni gladly pay the full price for season tickets. Thus, in effect, the alumni supports the football program. It would be totally unjust to bar all of them from Field House games. The same students who advocate barring the alumni from these games will themselves be part of the alumni in a few years and no doubt would be extremely enraged if they were denied admission to a game. After the enlightening interview with Mr. Mahan, there is no doubt here that the Villanova athletic program is geared first and foremost to the students.

OUR TRAINING PROGRAM PUTS YOU IMMEDIATELY INTO

ACTUAL EQUIPMENT DESIGN, ANALYSIS AND TEST ASSIGNMENTS.

At General Precision Aerospace

You'll Train on the firing line

At General Precision Aerospace the young graduate steps right into actual space engineering assignments. During his first year he works on many projects in several departments through a rotational training program and under the close supervision of experienced professionals (many are former training program grads). It's the best way we know of to broaden his exposure and help him find where he fits best in our multi-faceted space effort.

This effort is so broad . . . it's hard to find a major space and defense program that doesn't use GPA precision guidance and navigation instrumentation: Apollo, Explorer, Gemini, OSS, Mariner, Polaris, SUBROC, Surveyor, Ranger, and LEM. A complete list would fill this page.

Looking ahead — and the research and development behind it — is our prime business. Visionary programs now in progress will someday yield optical laser gyros and accelerometers, stellar inertial guidance systems, maneuverable re-entry guidance and control systems, strap-down inertial guidance systems, precision microminiature inertial navigation systems, solid state sensors, complex space information systems for spacecraft, missiles, and aircraft.

Down-to-earth expansion programs shore-up these ambitions. A multi-million dollar equipped Research Center in Little Falls, N. J. was completed in 1962. An extensive Systems Engineering Facility was put into operation in late '63. All together the GPA facility represents 1,500,000 square feet of the most advanced equipment complexes in the East devoted to research, development, and production of systems for aerospace.

Foreigners Dominate Inquirer Meet; Sullivan Nipped In Cardiac Mile

By Tom Kelly

Three prominent world track powers dominated the 21st Annual Philadelphia Inquirer Games last Friday night, February 5th. They were, in order of importance, Villanova, Great Britain and Russia. Jumbo's boys contributed one first, three seconds and one fourth place finish in the feature events of the meet; while Great Britain and Russia sharel four other individual victories.

"World Record" for 'Cats

Due to the urging of meet officials, Mr. Elliott broke up his world record setting two mile relay team. Thus, Jim Orr and Al Adams, two members of the team, combined with Bob Cubbin and Marty Ferko in a new type of relay race—The Interval Two-Mile Relay—in which each member of the team is required to run his six lap, half-mile 'leg' in three, two lap sections.

The Villanova team, pacing themselves smartly, won, going away, over the Georgeown and Villanova frosh in the impressive time of 7:13.2. They managed this even though Orr had trouble with a stiff left leg. Since it was the debut of this very exciting type of race, it is a world record.

Crothers Drops Out

The Borican 1,000, with Noel Carroll, John Dunkelberg, Russian Valery Bulishev and Canadian great Bill Crothers, was disappointing in several respects. Crothers, the glamour boy of the indoor circuit, dropped out of the competition after three laps due to a virus infection. Then Dunkelberg went on to win over Noel, who, in all fairness, was feeling poorly himself. Crothers' loss was his first of the year and it has begun to look as though only misfortune of that sort can beat him. (His only other board loss occurred last year when he fell.)

Whetton Outkicks Sully

Villanova's Tom Sullivan went to Convention Hall determined to hand Great Britain's John Whetton his second defeat in eighteen indoor races. If Tom had not been forced to take the lead he might have done just that. Unfortunately, however, Whetton won in time of 4:06.8 by kicking past Sullivan at the gun lap. Tom was especially disappointed with losing first place because he had one of his girl friends in the stands.

The recent defeat of Alabama by the Longhorns of Texas in the Orange Bowl classic should be marked as the closing scene to an unsuccessful story. Whether or not the event will be thus remembered depends largely upon the actions of the policy makers associated with the wire-press services. These organizations have been evaluating the merits of collegiate athletic clubs for some time, and we must admit that the shortcomings of their present policy are strongly evident only within the range of football.

When the bonus king of the New York Jets could not penetrate the patented Texas goal line stand for that one extra score he cast a shadow of doubt over the national rankings. Although the fact that any team which is strong enough to be ranked nationally is capable of an "upset" always looms before us, we are still compelled to presume that the club from the oil state had just as much right to the top rung as Alabama. Perhaps their claim was even stronger if one compares schedules as well as the point margins of each team's single defeat.

Notre Dame Shines

In the opinion of this writer the football Hall of Fame made the best decision in awarding their national championship to the mid-western school under Irish tutelage. Naturally the wire-press services would retort that this club also suffered the humiliation of a defeat. At this point, rather than go on to argue about competition and hear how only Southern Cal and Purdue were winners, it would suffice to mention that Notre Dame was relegated from a first to a third place finish in the wire-press ratings as a result of their defeat while Alabama retained afirm grip on the national championship following their tragic New Year's celebration.

Basic Fallacy

This all points to a degree of inconsistency on the part of these critics. It all boils down to the basically fallacious reasoning behind naming the best teams in the nation prior to the revealing bowl period. Although we do not consider Arkansas the best club in the nation their reception of the Grantland Rice trophy would seem justified on the basis of the wire-press service techniques. If one simply eliminated clubs as they were handed a defeat, as was the fate of N.D., Arkansas would have appropriately survived as the logical choice for the "blue ribbon."

However, to be a bit conventional (and perhaps a bit practical the various schedules should be compared for both quality and subjective tradition (one team's particular success or failure with an individual opponent). After such an anaylsis I find it difficult to neglect the South Benders after a season with but a single defeat by a club which belonged in the Rose Bowl and hand nothing in common with Southwest Conference.

Searching for NCAA Tourney Bid

'CATS WIN SIX OF SEVEN

By Steve Freind

In hot pursuit of an NCAA Tournament bid, Jack Kraft's hard charging Wildcats chalked up six victories in their last seven outings. Losing only to Temple in an upset, the 'Cats notched wins over LaSalle, Detroit, Penn, Duquesne, Canisius and DePaul to bring their record to a shining 15-3.

LaSalle

Defending Big Five champion LaSalle fell before a blistering Villanova attack as the 'Cats battled to an 86-72 triumph in their City Series debut. The Explorers, who defeated Penn in their only other city tilt, stayed close in the first half as the 'Cats were able to take only a 34-32 advantage to the locker room.

Paced by Bill Melchionni and George Leftwich the 'Cats shot to a 65-54 lead midway through the second stanza but LaSalle ace Curt Fromal led a charge which pulled the Explorers even at 70. Then Melchionni, Leftwich and Bernie Schafer, enjoying the finest shooting night of his career, went on a scoring binge which put the game out of reach.

Melchionni led the Villanova scoring parade with 24 points followed by Leftwich and Schafer who netted 18 and 16 respectively. Fromal was the top LaSalle shooter with 19 markers followed by George Paull's 15.

Temple

Temple was hot and Villanova was cold. That's the story of the 'Cats 73-59 thumping at the hands of Harry Litwack's Owls. The loss evened the 'Cats Big Five record at 1-1 and left Temple atop the City Series heap with a 2-0 log.

At first it looked as if the Kraftsmen would win in a walk as they breezed to a 39-26 halftime lead. The 'Cats kept hammering after the intermission and still led by 13 with fourteen minutes left in the game. Then came the freeze as they were able to notch only two field goals in the rest of the tilt. While Villanova was going cold, the Owls were just beginning to thaw and in the final fourteen minutes they blistered the nets with 68% shooting. Owl guard Bill Kelley, who wound up as the game's high scorer with 18, Chris Kefalos and Joe Hindelang zeroed in with long jumpers and the Owls won going away.

In all, the 'Cats shot 31.6%, the worst shooting effort for a Villanova squad in a long time. Bill Melchionni led the 'Cats with 15 points but connected on only 7 of 24 attempts. Bill Soens and Jim Washington added 13 and 14 respectively.

Detroit

Two free throws by Bill Melchionni with four seconds left in the game got the 'Cats back on the victory trail with a 72-70 triumph over powerful Detroit. Besides connecting on the dramatic foul shots, Melchionni poured in a career-high 35 points on 15 for 28 shooting, while leading the 'Cats to their eleventh win.

It took Melchionni's tremendous shooting to offset the Titan's complete domination of the boards as the boys from the Motor City outrebounded Villa-

'Cats Topple Redmen For Number 16; Clash With Bonnies In Buffalo Battle

By Steve Freind

Villanova's high-flying Wildcats took a giant step toward an NCAA Tournament berth last night, whipping St. John's highly touted Redmen 52-48 before a sellout Field House crowd of 3200. The victory was the 'Cats sixth in a row and hiked their record to 16-3, while St. John's dropped their fifth decision in 17 games.

Jim Washington continued his great play of the past four weeks with a 17 point performance. The 6-7 All-American candidate also hit the boards for 14 rebounds, played defense like a maniac and clearly outshined highly-regarded sophomore Sonny Dove.

Billy Melchionni turned in another sterling performance, burning the nets for 17 points on 3 for 7 shooting. The backcourt leader also came up with several key defensive plays that got the 'Cats rolling on fast breaks.

Another aspect of the game which gave the 'Cats added optimism for the remainder of the season was the continued resurgence of George Leftwich. As in the DePaul game, Leftwich displayed signs of regaining the form which made him one of the nation's most promoising sophomores three years ago, hitting for points while playing a fine floor game.

As usual, Eric Erickson, the unsung hero of the squad turned in another solid job. Erickson rarely receives headlines but without his consistent play and steadying influence the 'Cats record would not be as bright. This time Erickson hit for 6 points, hauled down 4 rebounds, fed off four assists and played his normal rugged defensive game.

Washington received valuble backboard from vastly improved sophomore Bill Soens. Soens picked off 7 rebounds and, as in the seven games, showed great offensive moves in going for the basket. The 6-8 Penn Charter star netted 7 points.

Ken Mc Intyre scored 16 while brother Bob was unable to play due to an injury. Dove ended up with 12.

Festival Champs

The Wildcat victory definitely enhances their chances for an NCAA bid. By defestin St. John's Holiday Festival champions and conquerors of top-ranked Michigan, the 'Cats posted their second triumph in as many games over teams in the top twenty. DePaul fell to the Kraftmen last Saturday.

The 'Cats next step towards a trip to College Park is Saturday's clash with St. Bonaventure in Buffalo. The Bonnies are notoriously rugged on their home court and should provide the 'Cats with a stiff test. The outcome of that game could go a long way in deciding the 'Cats post-season fate.

Freindly Foolishness

Court Shorts

By Steve Freind

It's been five weeks since a VILLANOVAN issue and during that period the 'Cats have played some great basketball. Here are some opinions from a courtside observer:

An annoying aspect of the court season has been the attitude of some of the Villanova fans. After the 'Cats lost a few early games, the opinion was that Villanova was in for only a mediocre year. Even now there are many who feel that the 'Cats would do better in the NIT, that they would be swamped in the NCAA tourney. NIT heck! Let's get the big one. Kraft has his boys moving and the 'Cats are reaching their peak at exactly the right time. No matter what the circumstances may be, it's folly to write off the Kraftmen. People made the same mistake two years ago when the 'Cats lost their opener in the Field House by 15 points, and were only 6-6 at mid-season. They ended up the campaign 19-10 and garnered fourth place in the NIT. As long as a guy named Kraft remains at the Villanova helm, the 'Cats will be a court power.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

It's interesting to note how many times the basketball team is moved out of the Field House because of other activities. Questioned on this, Jack Kraft stated that from the beginning of practice on October 15 until the season's end in mid-March, the team will have had to travel to Malvern Prep to practice no less than 63 times. Eleven of those times they were notified with one days notice or less. While it is understod here that in a large school such as Villanova scheduling difficulties must arise, it is not understood why the team must travel all the way to Malvern to practice at night when a beautiful court is available in the new seminary. The problem becomes more puzzling when it is realized that the seminarians have 100 seats reserved for every Field House game. A trip to Malvern for practice entails at least one hour traveling and dressing time each way. Sixty-three of these trip result in each player missing 126 hours of prime study time. The basketball team has contributed much to Villanova. They deserve far better than the orphan-like treatment they are now receiving.

IJF Committees Seek To Raise Funds For Transportation Of Young Danes

By Larry Muth

"Our music is very spontaneous, because we think that is the only way you can express yourself; we don't play any theme, we just improvise what we are feeling."

"When we started to play together, we began to play swing and mainstream, and we have played all the styles . . . from swing to modern Jazz."

These comments are from two letters by 16-year-old Danish musician Peter Esben. The letters accompained two tape recordings of free-form and contemporary Jazz, recently sent to Villanova University's fifth annual Intercollegiate Jazz Festival.

Esben, a tenor saxophone player, added: ". . . We know that we cannot be in the competition, but we will be very glad if the jury will hear our tapes and send us an answer what they think about it."

The 'answer' Esben received was an invitation to attend the Festival as an added attraction.

University officials are interested in bringing Esben, and the other half of his "Esben: Jordy Duo," 14-year-old drummer, Ole Jordy, to the United States because of their musical ability, advanced ideas, and apparent maturity.

However, on investigation, the administration feels that the cost will be prohibitive. It would cost aproximately $2,500 to bring the two musicians and a guardian to the country and provide for their stay. In light of this, the Festival's committees are involved in a public relations campaign to raise the necessary funds.

Anyone interested in assisting the Festival should write to: Danish Musicians, c/o Intercollegiate Jazz Festival, Box 1965.

The Beta Chi Chapter of Delta Epsilon Sigma inducted 13 candidates into its membership Sunday, February 14.

Delta Epsilon Sigma is the National Scholastic Honor Fraternity of Catholic Colleges and is represented at Villanova by the Beta Chi Chapter.

Before the induction of the new candidates, membership included nine faculty members and six senior students. The new members are eight seniors: Andrew P. Camelio, Education Science; Paul R. DiGiamoco, Biology; John J. Fitzpatrick, Modern Languages; Robert McTarsney, Arts; Francis M. Roddy, Physics; William M. Ayan, Biology; Stephen R. Webb, Biology; and five juniors Thomas J. Glennon, Mathematics; Dana B. Roper, Mathematics; William J. Thomas Jr., Biology; Joseph Torregrossa, Classical Languages; John J. Walsh, Classical Languages.

Candidates are considered if they show an academic record of probable graduation with honors (3.5 and above). Also they are considered if they display "some intellectual depth and breadth of interest."

The guest speaker for the induction was Dr. John I. McEnerney, a member of Beta Chi Chapter, who spoke on "The Mystery of Literature."

Pennsylvania's Lieutenant-Governor Raymond Schaffer is flanked by the Reverend John A. Klekotka and Judge Theodore L. Reimel. Mr. Schaffer addressed the Villanova Law School last Friday night.

Book Editor Appel To Address Meeting Of Literary Society

David H. Appel, Inquirer Book Critic, will be the guest lecturer at the Villanova Literary Society meeting Thursday at 10:30 a.m. in the Physics Lecture Hall.

He has worked for the Cleveland News as Assistant Financial Editor, and Literary Editor. From there he advanced to become the Literary Editor of the Chicago Daily News. Later he transferred to the Philadelphia Inquirer where he was Arts and Amusements Editor, Literary Editor, and Features Editor.

He is also the editor of Municipal Manual of Pennsylvania; and co-author of Great Ideas of Plato, and Raphael, The Herald Angel; as well as author of Happy Mother Goose, and Comanche, the book that was the basis for the Walt Disney movie Tonka.

Eliot Tribute

The Literary Society currently is sponsoring an exhibit in the library entitled "A Tribute to T. S. Eliot." In conjunction with this theme, the Society will sponsor a memorial symposium on the great expatriate's writings. The symposium will be more admiration and less evaluation of the poet's gift to belles-lettres.

He will long be remembered for his play Murder In The Cathedral; his poems The Hollow Men, and The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock; as well as for his essays. The Literary Society has reserved quite a few copies of T. S. Eliot's collected poems (in paperback) on the Society's shelf in the reserve room of the library. Anyone who plans to attend the symposium is urged to borrow a copy so that he can follow the discussion and readings at the symposium.

Senate Recommends Motion To Honor Hawks' Jack Ramsay

By Steve Buck

The Student Senate, in its meeting for passage night, recommended for passage five motions ranging from basketball to transportation problems.

The first motion was brought up by Steve Freind and was unanimously recommended for passage. It suggested that the SGA, on behalf of the student body of Villanova, present to Dr. Jack Ramsay of St. Joseph's a scroll in commemoration of his 200 victory as a coach. The presentation would also honor Dr. Ramsay for his fine contribution to college basketball as coach, scolar, and gentleman.

The second motion called for the students of Villanova and St. Joe's to each contribute half of the price toward purchasing a trophy. The trophy would be kept by the winner of the basketball game between the two schools each year. This also was unanimously recommended for passage.

The next motion, brought up by Bill McCloskey and Steve Freind, asked that the P.T.C., Red Arrow Lines, and Public Utilities Commission be petitioned to make available their prevailing student rates to Villanova students.

The reduced rates are now given only to high school and grade school pupils. McCloskey and Freind suggested that let-

Croce To Perform In Big Hoot Sponsored By Sociology Club

By John Barrow

Villanova's Sociology Club will depart from the norm established for on-campus clubs by presenting "Big Hoot," a hootenanny, in the Vasey Hall Auditorium this Friday February 19 at 8 p.m.

Proceeds from the event go to the St. Gabriel's Shelter in Phoenixville, Penna. Brother Gabriel and a small group of orphans will attend the affair.

The hootenanny brainstorm belongs to Lou Petrillo, president of the Sociology Club. Rick Berry, chairman of the committee, contracted Jim Croce, Villanova's noted Folk singer, to direct the production.

Varied Folk Music

On his recent tour of the Middle East and Africa, Croce was impressed with Middle East Folk Music, and he suggested that the hootenanny try to present a cross section of folk music of various societies.

In this vein, the young artist secured Linda Cohen, a student at the Moore College Of Art, to play mandolin and sing Middle Eastern numbers.

The Griffins, a group of four girls from Chestnut Hill College, will swing west to European Folk Music, while the Bravadoes of Arnie Brav will cross the Atlantic and concentrate on contemporary and Western Folk Music, as they have recently done at the Gilded Edge and the

Phillips Substitutes For Mayor Dilworth At Political Union

By Joseph Nalbone

On Monday night February 15 in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall the Villanova Political Union sponsored an open Debate on "This House Favors Substantial Federal Subsidies to Mass Transportation."

"Executive flu" hit Villanova's Poltical Union guest speaker Richardson Dilworth and he was not able to attend. In his place Walter M. Phillips, former director of the Philadelphia A.D.A. stood in for Mr. Dilworth.

Mr. Dilworth has agreed to return to the Union on Monday night March 15 on a topic yet to be announced.

Mr. Phillips has had a distinguished civic and business career as well as a political career. He is a graduate of Princeton and Harvard Law School. Three groups were represented: the conservative, moderates, and liberals. Each group was represented by three speakers on behalf of the conservative Jim Clark gave the Keynote speech followed by Greg Lenard and Bob Beatty. In behalf of the moderates Al Perone was the keynote speaker with Jeff Radowich and Gene Fitzmaurice. For the liberals Frank Rearden gave the Keynote address with Mark Maurice.

Philadelphia Convention Hall Courts Beach Boys In Concert

By Ed Bride and Bill McCloskey

Look into the minds of the several uniformed policemen and body guards assigned to Friday night's Beach Boy Concert, and one would have excellent material for an essay entitled "How to Control 12,000 Wild Fans."

For control is what they did, and the Philadelphia Police Department must be commended for not allowing the Convention Hall fete to get out of hand, something which rock 'n' roll concerts habitually do.

Capitol Records's gift to the surfin' set made their Philadelphia debut last Friday, in a near sellout concert which was attended by over twelve-thousand screaming teenagers and college students. The Beach Boys mentioned that this audience represented the largest of their current tour.

Despite pleas from Master of Ceremonies Hy Lit (top air personality of WIBG), the younger and more enthused members of the crowd insisted on jamming the aisles for pictures, as closer look at the harmonious quintet, or perhaps a chance to jump to the stage.

This was attempted by a few girls, who could have used vaulting lessons from Don Bragg. They ran, full speed, toward the stage, but were halted by the alert guards, and carried not-so-quietly from the theater. For almost an hour-and-a-half, police and "staff guards" were faced with such juvenile conduct but managed to retain the well-earned reputation of "Philadelphia's finest."

Sponsored by Philadelphia's chapter of B'nai B'rith, ond promoted by Lit and Capitol Records' Tom Kennedy, the affair could very well be the beginning of a long series of such presentations. If those in the future are as well-promoted, and as well-controlled, the city of Philadelphia will become another New York for teenage concert set.

Both Lit and Kenny deserve credit for putting up with a highly active, perhaps reactive group of youngsters, during both the concert and the press conference following. However, a breakdown in communications caused several people to miss out on the press affair.

The group, scheduled to land in Philadelphia late in the afternoon, was forced to touch down in Washington because of the dense fog. Thus, they could not make the conference scheduled for two hours before the concert. When it had been arranged to hold the conference in a larger and more comfortable room after the performance, most of the attendees (invitation only) returned to the original meeting place, only to find several police (worn out from cheering, no doubt), who seemed reluctant to bring them all to the conference.

When the remainder of the newspaper people finally reached the conference, the Beach Boys had departed. This failure on somebody's part . . . although caused by the weatherman, seemed to be the only thing which went wrong. Those who missed-out on the conference will have a concert which they will not soon forget.

Volunteers Needed To Assist Child In Patterning Program

Volunteers are desperately needed to assist in a "patterning" program begun for Steven Leuter, seven year old brain damaged child of Mr. and Mrs. Leuter of 514 Blythe Avenue, Drexel Hill. Patterning is a relatively new form of physical therapy, whose immediate purpose is to develope co-oridnation of the arms, legs and head.

Each patterning session requires the participation of five people, witheach session lasting seven minutes.

The Leuter's hope to set up a program so that no volunteer would have to report for more than one session a week. Such a prgram will require 175 people, since the sessions must be held five times a day seven days a week. So far they have only 55 volunteers.

If any further information is desired or your are interested in participating, please contact Mrs. Jane Rupp at CL 9-7468.

Belle Masque Declares Cast For Upcoming Production

Dr. Jackson Barry of The Graduate Theatre Dept., has announced the cast for Belle Masque's Spring production of Harold Pinter's The Birthday Party, after a successful turnout for readings.

Heading the list in the two major roles are Villanova freshman Greg Tigani and Philadelphia Museum College of Art sophomore Miss Vicky Lee Blunt. Others with major roles are: Miss Bonnie Lucas from Cabrini College, Joe Linsalata, a Villanova junior, and Vic Ferrante and Jerry Bober who are both freshmen.

Dr. Barry was extremely surprised at the large turn-out of Villanova students on both nights of casting. There were approximately 15 students who tried-out for 4 parts.

The entire production will be under the control of the production manager who is tentatively Mike Sutherland. The set for the play will be designed and built by Ken Resinski '63 and Mike Gotwals.

Dr. Barry has expressed his confidence in his chosen cast and crew on the basis of the past experience of each of them. It ranges from full-length motion pictures of Vicky Blunt to summer stock work by Ken Resinski.

The play will be presented in the Villanova Playbox on March 12, 13, and 14.

Driscoll Plans Sr. Weekend; Fat City 4 Highlight Party

By Walt Baginsky

"This is our last weekend together as a class, let's make it a memorable one." This lofty sentiment was expressed by Denny Driscoll has he announced the plans for the traditional Senior weekend to be held February 26 and 27.

The weekend's festivities will commence on Friday evening, February 26 with dinner dance in the Grand Ballroom of the Sheraton Hotel. Following cocktails at 9 p.m., Villanovan seniors and their dates will dance and dine in the musical atmosphere provided by Bill Butterfield and his Philadelphia society orchestra.

Denny Driscoll has vowed that a good time will be enjoyed by all. This year's favors will be unique. The dinner will consist essentially of Filet of Flounder stuffed with crabmeat. For these reasons, the cost this year is higher but understandable.

Ticket price per is couple $20.

A "package deal" — $23 ticket will insure entrance to the Dinner Dance and Class Party. Also Tuxedos for the Dinner Dance may be rented through the class for $7. Measurement will take place February 16 and 17 in Dougherty Hall.

The Senior Class Party will take place Saturday from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. at the Crystal Ballroom in Havertown. Entertainment will be provided by the Orlons and The Fat City 4. Charles Zaccaria, chairman of the party, announces a ticket price of $5 for those not attending the Dinner Dance. Mandatory dress will include a coat and tie.

Tickets for the memorable event may be procured in the Student Government Association Office. Photograph will be taken at the Sheraton Hotel for $3.25. You will receive 2 5"x7" color pictures with frames and 2 color pictures, wallet size.

Spanish Club Formulates Plans For Dinner Dance

By Bob Dean

The Villanova Spanish Club, an active academic organization on campus, is currently planning its annual Dinner Dance which will be held on Saturday, May 1, 1965, at the Conestoga Mills Restaurant — from 7 p.m. to 12 Midnight.

Cervantes' Honor

The event is held each year in honor of Cervantes, famed Spanish author of Don Quixote. This year the Spanish Consul in Philadelphia, the Honorable Dr. Victor Sancez Mesas will present awards for both the best essay in Spanish and the best poem in English, dealing with Cervantes.

Bill Frye and the Playboys will furnish entertainment for the occasion. Mr. Vito DiVincenzo, moderator of the Spanish Club, hopes for an excellent turnout.

Michelangelo Films

On Monday, February 15, the Spanish Club presented three showings, in Vasey Hall, of a special color film on the paintings of Michelangelo. The film was acquired by loan from Italian Consul Signore Nuntio, in Philadelphia.

In addition to these activities, the club has announced that a special Annual Memorial Mass will be celebrated sometime during the month, in honor of the late Rev. Lorenzo Lozano, founder of the Villanova Spanish Club.

Rebuttal . . . . In Refutation

By Walt Baginsky

After reading Mr. Eugene Griffin's letter to the Editor which refers to my article concerning the distinguished Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., I was pleased that he expressed much interest in Dr. King's appearance here at Villanova. However, I wish to call attenion to a few inaccuracies in his letter.

First, Mr. Griffin states, "It is nonetheless, a matter of record — among southern Negros in any event — that the FBI chief has, to say the least, been grossly ineffectual in regard to protecting the right, lives, and property of Negroe citizens in the South." The Federal Bureau of Investigation is an agency of the U.S. Department of Justics and is the principal Federal law-enforcement agency of the United States. Its sole function is to investigate violations of federal laws and present facts found through investigation, to the Justice Department for deliberation. Mr. Hoover solely as the FBI chief, with the FBI as an investigative instrument, cannot, directly "protect" anyone or anything. Mr. J. Edgar Hoover has described "The FBI's Job" in the December 11, 1964 edition of Time Magazine (p. 30) as follows: "The FBI's job, "is to gather facts when there is an indication that a federal law has been violated. These facts are presented to the Department of Justice and the Department decides whether there will be or will not be a prosecution.' "

Instruments

Second, Mr. Griffin states, "Dr. King has stated that 'Justice delayed is justice denied.' " I quote the following passage directly from the December 11, 1964 edition (p. 30) of Time Magazine, "After the meeting King told newsmen that he still feels that 'Justice delayed is justice denied —but I'm not going to criticize the past.' " The "meeting" spoken of here refers to the conversation that Dr. King had with J. Edgar Hoover in Mr. Hoover's office in early December, 1964. In no way was the statement — "Justice delayed is justice denied — but I'm not going to criticize the past " — misquoted in my article. I merely detached the latter phrase from the former before adding it into my article — believing that the general reading public would have no cognizance of the statement's context and therefore making the latter phrase irrelevant to my article.

Mr. Griffin wrote that I "wrongly attributed the origin of the latter precept (above quotation) to Dr. King and that its originator is Oliver Wendell Holmes Jr." Although this may be the case, in quoting from such a reputable Magazine as Time which states: "He (Dr. King) still feels that 'Justice delayed is justice denied' . . .," I must deduce that Dr. King's feeling is not skin deep but rather that his feeling concurs with the precept.

Patently Ridiculous?

Third, Mr. Griffin states, "Indeed, the very idea of ending segregation — or any other social evil — merely by 'preaching on non-violence is patently ridiculous." Is it "patently ridiculous?" Dr. King's staunch philosophy of non-violence has won him acclaim from all races and creeds. His winning of the 1964 Nobel Peace Prize and various other awards honoring him in America: such as: Time Magazine's "Man of the year" award in 1963, attests to this fact. America especially needs to cultivate this philosophy—not only in regard to Negro Civil Rights matters (though this may be its specific objective), but also in regard to the grossly violent social atmosphere here in the United States. In our society, today, violence is much too commonplace. Daily newspapers teem with stories of man's injustice to man. It showed its tragic effects so flagrantly in the abrupt death of John F. Kennedy but fifteen months ago.

In Dr. King's own moral battle, his preaching of non-violence has often been the impetus which drove his followers to achieve freedom through morally sound means. In the case of the termination of segregation in the buses of Montgomery, Alabama in 1956—Dr. King philosophy was the impetus which aroused the sentiment of the nation toward his cause. The instruments which his philosophy effected — boycotts and sit-ins — gave even further impetus and finally resulted in Supreme Court action ordering Montgomery to desegregate its buses — the righting of a wrong prevalent in Montgomery nine years ago. So, ultimately, what was the basic driving force behind the Supreme Court order? Dr. King's courageous preaching of his adamant philosophy of non-violence.

Quibbling

Finally I am sure that Mr. Griffin understands that Dr. King's work is much too varied and complex to be spoken of in a complete manner via a brief news article. His attempt to obtain first class citizenship for his people by calling upon the conscience of the nation through a philosophy of non-violence is certainly not a routine occurrence — but should receive the highest commendation and should be agreed with by all. Therefore, to quibble over phrases and typographical errors when alluding to such a brilliant, dedicated, purposeful, and sincere individual from the standpoint of Dr. King's ultimate goal would appear meaningless.

Conformists Unite!

On Cheating . . .

The recent cheating scandals that have rocked the Air Force Academy have created a furor on the campuses of many colleges and universities across the nation. Realistically, but unfortunately, this problem deserves careful attention and scrutiny here at Villanova.

The letter by Mr. Dorsaneo which appeared in last week's Villanovan touched on only one aspect of this problem. The idea of exam-stealing is not found on other campuses alone, it has ocurred on this campus as recently as one month ago.

Is the sanctity of a professor's office and desk no longer regarded as safe? In polite circles such might not be the case and might subsequently be considered absurd, but perhaps it is slowly becoming fact. True or not, there seems to be nothing to prevent the various departments from either locking exams in a safe, desk, or cabinet, or entrusting them to the professors until their administration.

Reciting the usual platitutes of honesty and the intellectual viciousnes of cheating may make good speech material at a grammer or high school assembly, but they will probably have little effect when directed at the collegiate mind. The responsibility then falls to the teacher to redouble efforts to forestall such occurrences in the future.

It seems trite to reduntantly drone on that cheating penalizes both the good and average student, that it is basically immoral no matter how, when, where, or why, and that, to an extent, it represents a portion of the American concept of values.

Yes, it is trite, but it is also true.

Letters To The Editor

To the Editor,

What is it with this school? I have just come back from standing in line for my ticket to the St. Joe's game. I was seventh in line and waited for twelve hours. My ticket was in section NE, row 17, seat 31. My friends, who were fifth and sixth, are about twenty seats from me on either side. I would like to know who got the better seats, and who shuffled the tickets. I think the basketball club should get the best seats, but the guys who stand in line for twelve hours should get some consideration.

Right before I received my ticket, a priest walked in and got his free choice seats. Sure they should get in free, but we pay the tuition. A school cannot get along without either the faculty or students.

I also am a little disturbed with the attitude of the ticket sellers. When we ask for better tickets they act as if we want their right arm. . . . Is is their job to sell tickets.

I only hope that the students who said they wouldn't go to the game if you paid them were not serious. It would be a shame for the great spirit of Villanova to fall apart for a stupid reason such as this.

To the Editor,

I would like to congratulate your Sports Editor on his fine coverage of the Villanova basketball team. But I would like to remind him that other sports exist on this campus which deserve more thna just a passing mention.

To the Editor,

In my estimation a fitting topic for the next of The Lynx would be an explanation of the material in the last issue.

To the Editor,

A certain friend of mine has refused to pay for an advertisement he had placed in the Villanovan. I think that such an action as this is despicable and that it is really a method of stealing from our beloved institution.

'Two Grenadiers', A Fox Comedy, Characterized By Cliches, Satire

By Matt Roche

The Villanova Theatre Department, using the Playbox as an ersatz Bavar and Drinking House, produced The Two Grenadiers by James Fox last weekend.

The plot concerns two German veterans returning to their village of Untergrau after a 20-year absence, caused by their imprisonment in Russian labor camps. Schroeder and Vogel, played by Frank Pennypacker and Ken Resinski, are reluctantly welcomed by their wartime comrades, now the pillars of the village. The veterans, for many years thought dead, shock the village by their sudden appearance.

Forgotten ghosts are dug up in the form of questions such as: "What happened to the party's papers revealing detailed plans about the murder twenty years before?" and "Who was Elsa's (the tavern-keeper's stepdaughter) real father?" and also "Are Vogel and Schroeder, writing in music and German respectively, writing blackmail notes in code?"

Characters

The answers to these questions are provided by the main characters of the two-act tragicomedy.

Frank Pennypacker was well-cast as Schroeder. With his deep, resonant voice, one easily believed the words of the philosopher-poet-worker. Vogel, a good man with a flute, a beer, or a sandwich, gave a Falstaffian touch to the returning theme. Jim Mason as Hansnach turned in a credible performance as the stable, reasoning and optimistic owner of the cave.

John McPeak as the mustached owner of the hotsprings, Wertman, gave a good personal interpretation to the role with his facial jerk. While Dennis Ciesel as the worrying mayor had his scene with the brillant solution of calling the wives. This is opposed by Jack Black playing Erholtz the innkeeper who seemed born to the role of the miserly, commercial tourist-host. Stalwart Hauptman, the only one of the party still to be in uniform — as a constable — after the war was ably portrayed by Ed Hagen.

Joe Linsalata as Fr. Joachim set the stage in the first scene. But his real importance is in the last scene, last act, when he relates the petty actions of petty people to full-scale reality. The beer, cigarettes, and gestures gave Joe a realistic part.

Vicki Blunt as Elsa turned in a refreshing performance as the enchantingly innocent girl who did not know the meaning of the word " seduction." The cast was rounded out by the shrewish wives of the leading citizens from the blonde Eileen Shea, "the only one who had a decent sin on her soul," to the brunette Senior Shrews Magda and Marti, played by Yolanda Brutten and Hilda Bernstein.

Clishes, Satire

The play satirizes man's self-involvement. It is a situation comedy, blithely sprinkled with old cliche's such as "Russian girls are built for duty, not for beauty." If one must draw a moral he could say , "Old soldiers never die, they just return from the mines." In the satirical vein the comedy is alternately grisly, and then broad, but never descends into the slapstick range. The comic script reveals innate weak points, such as the weak ending of Act I. It was formerly placed before Act II, but then the outhor, James Fox, changed the telephone conversation to a postscript to Act I. This indecision added neither upbeat nor a note of finality to Act I; consequently, the audience did not recognize the end of the act.

Whoever designed the setting for the theatre-in-the-square deserves praise for his imaginative use of areas, such as the bar, the tables—and also for the clever use of spotlights.

Despite a stock situation, and a cliche-ridden script, the characters were well-interpreted by the actors. If your plans for the coming weekend are indefinite, include a visit to The Two Grenadiers.

An' All That Jazz

By Barry Bornstein

Good guys and bad guys, aces and jokers, johnnies and junkies; they're all in jazz as in any group. But it's a funny thing that, in jazz, when a guy is a real "ace" you seem to notice it a lot more. Maybe it's because of the primadonnas and the "pop-offs" that float on their numerous clouds. But an "ace" just seems to stand out. Take Stan Kenton for instance.

But last week we had the privilege to cross paths with jazz's foremost guitar player Wes Montgomery. Wes had graciously consented to judge the tapes of the entrants for the Villanova Jazz Festival, and despite the fact that we woke him up at seven in the morning he still came down with a smile on his face and a well-lubricated sense of humor. "Stagecoach," which we dubbed him, because of the enormous, sleek, white cadillac he drives, was in town for a week at Pep's and also to push his new album — Movin' Wes — a brassy collection. But here was a guy who really understood music and could talk about it with a brand of articulativeness all his own, Wes soapboxed for more classification in jazz, more diversion, and more names to express direction, and he backed it up. There's an old saying that "nice guys finish last!" Not Wes Montgomery, he is on top.

This week's Hot Horn Award goes to the librarians of the public library in Wyandotte, Michigan who blew and blew almost till the library walls fell in. Seems that, to quote the library's head, "the town's teenagers began using the library as a social center, they started playing football with big wads of paper; two boys took turns pushing each other down the aisles on top of an empty book cart; and there were so many teenagers necking and smoking on the front steps that people could hardly get through the front door. "So, the Librarians blew the whistle on the young literature fiends and hired private policemen to stop the hanky-panky. And so to those staunch protestors of the public library goes our coveted Hot Horn Award. Imagine driving teenagers out of the libraries. And then when they get to college, the colleges have to require a course in library science just to get them into a library.

A good bet for an hour's worth of musical enjoyment is Dave Brubeck's new album for Columbia — Jazz Impressions of New York. Here, Brubeck has taken another step forward on his Brubeck-in wonderland-type journey. Starting with his "jazz goes to college series, and then to his great hits "Take Five" and "Blue Rondo A la Turk," and then to his recently delightful — jazz impressions of Japan, the Brubeck train has wended it's way to New York and captured it like Grant took Richmond. Rivaling Brubeck's mastery of the piano is his unique composition ability. For he has the knack of drawing music out of anything-streets, stones, walls, trees, water-anything. And in this album he, with the most vivid of imaginations, has transfused New York into his veins and has lived it. For one, the track of lonely Mr. Broadway is awesome. Along with Brubeck, as usual, are his great alto-man Paul Desmond, drummer Joe Morello, and baseman Gene Wright. Sounds like he gave them transfusions too.

Sounds Of Note

By Bill McCloskey

We hear that Bobby Rydell refused to appear on Hullabaloo after he learned that the NBC sensual spectacular was being run opposite Red Skelton on CBS. It was Skelton who gave the South Philadelphian such a boost in his early days. In fact Bobby still appears several times a year on the comic's show.

In looking at the two rock and roll presentations on Tuesday and Wednesday this reporter has to go with the newer Hullabaloo as the better of the pair. Shindig with its blat, blat, blat presentation of the acts reminds us too much of a poor rock and roll radio show. "That was and this is." However Shindig's host doesn't even bother to tell you which unsung singers is displaying his talent.

The NBC show on the other hand shows the production perfection that almost goes with the peacock in signifying the National Broadcasting Company. Not only are the singers top rate, but Hullabaloo has got 'em in the tent approach of playing some of the top rockers followed by the likes of Peter Nero or a new (usually collegiate) group giving the teenagers a chance to become exposed to the other side of music. Villanova's Inter-collegiate Jazz Festival album is being listened to by Hullabaloo

Ford Motor Company is:

challenge

Dale Anderson
B.A., Wittenberg University

At many companies the opportunity to work on challenging projects comes after many years of apprenticeship and a few grey hairs. Not so at Ford Motor Company where your twenties can be a stimulating period. There are opportunities to prove your worth early in your career. Dale Anderson's experience is a case in point.

After receiving his B.A. in Physics in June, 1962, Dale joined our College Graduate Program and was assigned to our Research Laboratories. Recently he was given the responsibility for correcting cab vibration occurring on a particular type of truck. His studies showed that tire eccentricity was the cause of the trouble. Since little change could be effected in tire compliance, his solution lay in redesigning the suspension system. Tests of this experimental system show the problem to be reduced to an insignificant level.

That's typical of the kind of meaningful assignments given to employes while still in the College Graduate Program—regardless of their career interest. No "make work" superficial jobs. And, besides offering the opportunity to work on important problems demanding fresh solutions, we offer good salaries, a highly professional atmosphere and the proximity to leading universities.

Discover the rewarding opportunity Ford Motor Company may have for you. How? Simply schedule an interview with our representative when he visits your campus. Let your twenties be a challenging and rewarding time.

END THE DRAFT BY 1967-?

By Tom Bruderle

For a brief period during last fall's presidential campaign, the subject of the military draft arose from its customary, bothersome yet seemingly necessary niche in American society to one of national discussion.

Just as quickly, however, it vanished, its sojourn on the front pages of newspapers throughout the country. Nevertheless, plans are nowafoot to provide a suitable replacement for the selective service concept thot was first introduced by Abraham Lincoln at the outbreak of the Civil War.

A Universal Military Training and Service Act, passed in 1951, as subsequently amended, has extended conscription up to the present time. Under this Act, young men are still called into the military but at a rate considerably below that of the Korean period, for which it was originally enacted.

As it now reads: one, every male between the ages of 18 and 26 must be registered with his local draft board; two, those within the ages of 18½ and 26, inclusive, are liable for training and service up to 24 months; and three, the president is empowered to select and induct the necessary registrants that may be required for the maintenance of the Armed Forces' authorized strength.

An added corollary, passed in 1963, exempted all married men regardless of their age.

It has been 14 years since the Congress last carefully studied possible alternatives to the draft and, in 1960, the Senate spent all of 10 action-packed minutes in fully discussing and, in the end, finally extending the present law.

This same Federal law will be up for a vote, and a possible new lease on life, again in 1967 when it officially expires. In the meantime, Senators Gaylord Nelson (D., Wisconsin) and George McGovern (D., South Dakota) have co-sponsored legislation which would require the Secretary of Defense to submit, within a year, several alternatives to the present draft that can be discussed and scrutinized by Congress in the hopes of finding a replacement for the SSS by 1967.

Senator Nelson believes the draft to be outmoded and its absence, by or in 1967, would not jeopardize national security. He argues that it is first "unjust and inequitable" since its universality is destroyed by fact that 42 percent of those eligible do not serve.

Second, it causes needless uncertainty and hesitancy since most draftees must wait until they are 23 years of age, on the average, before they are actually called. Thus, for approximately five years, plans of career must be held in abeyance.

Three, it does not provide the kind of professional soldier compatible with American needs. Fourth, it wastes valuable funds and manpower and fifth, almost logically, it is no longer necessary.

Today there are some 10.6 million potential draftees between the ages of 18½ and 26½, and by 1967 this figure will swell to 12.4 million. At present only 90,000 men are summoned a year, a total that appears to be relatively constant. Thus the pool of draftable men grows by one-third every six or seven years while the needs of the military remain approximately the same.

By June 30 of this year, the total number of men reaching the age of 18½ will be nearly 1.7 million, pushing the available pool of men to more than 11 million. Of this latter total, 620,000 will enter the Armed Forces with 90,000 of them draftees: nearly one in seven.

This barrage of statistics results, in essence, to but one fact: of all those within the 18 to 26 range, with the average drafting age at 23, only 58 percent serve their country through the draft. What of the rest, the remaining 42 percent? They have not been disqualified for any mental or physical defiency, in fact, they have never been drafted!

Very simply says Senator Nelson," we . . . do not need all the men eligible for the draft."

The draft loses its "purity" since the system favors those who can remain in school until their twenty-sixth birthday, those who marry early, men who possess moral deficiencies or criminal records, men declared ineligible for physical or mental reasons and those whose employers will claim them to be essential.

Concludes Senator Nelson, "We are stuck with a system which supplies more men than we can use. So what do we do?" Rather than change the draft, "we corrupt the system by providing more and more ways to avoid the draft."

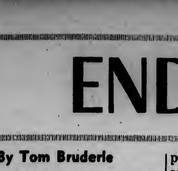
The draft also has a strong tendency to promote inefficiency. Presently 97 out of every 100 draftees leave the service when they end their tours of duty, thus wasting much of the funds expended to train them. Under such conditions, morale among the conscripts is not hard to imagine.

Well aware of this, the Defense Department, rather than call up 1.6 million available young men during the Korean War, reactivated 600,000 World War II veterans. During the Berlin crises of 1961, the number of draftees only slightly exceeded the 90,000 figure while 150,000 reservists were called to duty midst some legitimate grumbling.

Senator Nelson commented in an address on the floor of the Senate on June 29, 1964 that "a great mass of untrained men, waiting to get out, is of little value to the Armed Forces during a crisis."

In the attempt to do away with the draft, it must be remembered that such legislation would not effect, in any way, the 2.7 million men now in uniform. As mentioned earlier, only 90,000 men are drafted each year and the Nelson-McGovern Bill will affect only this small figure, which is less than 15 percent of the projected Armed Forces growth rate for fiscal 1965-1966. Of the present total of men in the armed services, but one in thirty is a conscript.

It can be effectively argued, however, that the crux of the matter lies not with the total number of men drafted but elsewhere. Many insist that the absence of conscription would automatically reduce the number of enlistments by those otherwise fearful of the draft.



Testifying before the Senate Armed Services Committee two years ago, Assistant Defense Secretary Frank Paul stated that "the absence of (an) induction authority would drastically affect the (recruiting) programs that are now being conducted by the services, both in the enlisted and officer areas."

In an Army-wide survey taken of first-term draftees and completed on November 3, 1962, the Assistant Defense Secretary's fears should be allayed. The question was asked: "When you were a civilian without prior military service, how much influence did the Selective Service draft have upon your decision to enlist in the Regular Army?"

Of the total polled, 46.8 percent declared it had no influence saying they wanted to be in the Army. Another 16.5 percent commented that the draft had very little influence since they most likely would have enlisted even if there had been no draft. Regardless of the draft, therefore, 63 percent of these men would have joined the Army in any case.

The question that now must be asked, and hopefully answered next week is can the armed services attract 90,000 more volunteers per year than they do now, if so, how?

Engineering & Science Degree Candidates — BS, MS, PhD

OUR TRAINING PROGRAM PUTS YOU IMMEDIATELY INTO

ACTUAL EQUIPMENT DESIGN, ANALYSIS AND TEST ASSIGNMENTS.

At General Precision Aerospace

You'll Train on the firing line

At General Precision Aerospace the young graduate steps right into actual space engineering assignments. During his first year he works on many projects in several departments through a rotational training program and under the close supervision of experienced professionals (many are former training program grads). It's the best way we know of to broaden his exposure and help him find where he fits best in our multi-faceted space effort.

This effort is so broad . . . it's hard to find a major space and defense program that doesn't use GPA precision guidance and navigation instrumentation: Apollo, Explorer, Gemini, OSS, Mariner, Polaris, SUBROC, Surveyor, Ranger, and LEM. A complete list would fill this page.

Looking ahead — and the research and development behind it — is our prime business. Visionary programs now in progress will someday yield optical laser gyros and accelerometers, stellar inertial guidance systems, maneuverable re-entry guidance and control systems, strap-down inertial guidance systems, precision microminiature inertial navigation systems, solid state sensors, complex space information systems for spacecraft, missiles, and aircraft.

Down-to-earth expansion programs shore-up these ambitions. A multi-million dollar equipped Research Center in Little Falls, N. J. was completed in 1962. An extensive Systems Engineering Facility was put into operation in late '63. All together the GPA facility represents 1,500,000 square feet of the most advanced equipment complexes in the East devoted to research, development, and production of systems for aerospace.

FROM THE PRESIDENT'S DESK

By Tom Furst

The basketball season is nearing a successful completion. This success was manifested in many ways certainly in record of our team but more importantly in the attitude and spirit of the Student Body. As you remember, I'm sure, Villanova injected the idea of eliminating unnecessary and distasteful displays of spirit at start of the season.

With this in mind it is not difficult to understand that all eyes will be on the Villanova cheering section when the Cats take the floor against St. Joseph's this weekend. Wouldn't we look the perfect hypocrites if o banner lacking taste were displayed.

When I presented this concept of renewed sportsmanship to the city sports writers I did so with confidence of complete Student Body support. Since the idea faces its sternest test this weekend I would hope that the Student Body is solidly behind it.

The Spirit Committee under Brian Banmiller is charged with control of "all demonstration of Student Spirit concerned will Villanova." I would therefore direct any student or organization interested in making banners, to Brian Banmiller.

The final motion of the meeting was brought up by Brian Banmiller and Dave Moore. They asked the SGA to request that the basketball club be given prime seating during next year's games at the Palestra. This motion was also recommended for passage.

Fitzmaurice Splashes To 2 New NCAA Marks In Army, Navy Meets

By Frank Miller

Mike Fitzmaurice, a Villanova Frosh, made a big splash in swimming circles last week, when he broke two NCAA Freshman swimming marks.

Against Army February 6, Fitzmaurice broke the 200 yd. freestyle standard with a clocking of 1.47.2 minutes. This was more than a second faster than the former record held by Mike Ahearn of Yale. Ahearn set the record March 7, 1964 with a time of 1:48.3 minutes.

Fitzmaurice, not content with one NCAA record, set another mark in his next outing against Navy when he swam the 200 yd. individual medley in 2:01.3 minutes. The previous standard was set by Richard Quick of S.M.U., March 3, 1962. Quick's mark was more than two full seconds under Fitzmaurice's at 2:03.6 min. Against Navy Fitzmaurice also broke a Villanova Frosh record with a 48.3 sec. clocking in the 100 yd. freestyle.

'Cat Fish Drown Explorers As Girdler Breaks Record

By Bob McIntyre

All-American Rick Girdler won two freestyle events, one being a poll record, in leading Villanova's swimmers to a 65-30 romp over LaSalle College in the Wildcat's pool on Saturday afternoon.

Girdler swam the 100 yard freestyle in 48:0 to break a record set by Villanova freshman Mike Fitzmaurice of 48.5, who swam for Malvern Prep last year. Girdler won the race going away with LaSalle's Jon Walheim finishing second,about a body length behind.

Girdler

Girdler, came back a little later, and garnered the 200 yard freestyle in 1:49.4, and ended up ended up the day by finishing third in the 500 yard freestyle. Along with Girdler's fine performance, the rest of the squad fared just as well for Coach Geisz.

Chris Fisher, outawam teammate Beaver Doyle, to win the 200 yard Individual Medley in 2:13.6 Bob Biese continued his fine diving to win his event by gathering 213 pts. Bill (Wildman) Livingood won his specialty, the 200 yard backstroke in 2:10.8.

Pete Ancona, ended up the individual events by winning the 200 yard breaststroke in 2:27.1. The 400 Medley and Freestyle relay teams also were victorious. It was Villanova's sixth win in nine meets.

Navy Dunked

In another meet held last week, Villanova splashed to victory over the Midshipmen of the Naval Academy 55-40, led by All-American Rick Girdler's victories in the 100, 200, and 500 yard freestyle events.

Enjoying his college scoring high, Soens led the Wildcat scoring parade with 22 points. Melchionni followed with 18 points and 6 assists while Washington combined 15 markers with 18 rebounds. Leftwich contributed 10 points and Eric Erickson added 9. Erickson also hit his career high with a tremendous 14 rebound performance while displaying his usual all-around hustle.

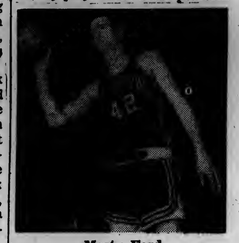
figures, but it was not enough to overcome LaSalle's 47 point second half.

The young "Quakers" current Big Five leaders, junior division, tasted defeat for the first time as the "Widkittens" clawed their way to an impressive 71-60 upset. Penn just could not cope with the inside-outside shooting of Joe Crews and Frank Guerin as they combined for 37 points, and "Jumping" Jim Stinger's tough board handling.

Taking their cue from Frank Sinatra the "Wildkittens" found things lovlier the second time around, and "Crewsed" to an 88-68 victory behind the hot hand of the board-crashing forward with the soft touch. Dave Turtzo, Mike Glaza, and Frank Guerin also hit double figures, and Jim Stinger rounded out a fine team effort with his aggressive play underneath.

Temple



Unfortunately, Temple also liked things better the second time around, and had the "kittens" purring by a 74-66 count. Steve Krine's 18 points, and 14 each from Joe Crews and Dave Turtzo was not enough to offset the hot-shooting Owl novices who hit well from the floor, and converted 16 of 17 charity tosses.

Written off as also-rans in the pre-season polls, Coach Devine and his boys deserve a lot of credit. They have come roaring back, making up for their shortcomings with hustle and desire, and once again making the "blue and white" the colors to be feared.

Hockey Team Falls To Lehigh Attack In Rough Skating Bout

The Villanova hockey team was turned back Saturday evening by Lehigh in a fast skating, hard hitting contest. Three goals and two assists by Brian O'Shea and goals by Mike Loscalgo and Dean Goodwin were not enough to combat the stiff Lehigh attack.

Lehigh hit the scoring column early in the first period, but trailed 4-3 at the end of the stanza. The Engineers tallied three more goals in the second period to forge ahead 6-5. The third period saw numerous Wildcat opportunities, but all were thwarted by the defensive platoon of Lehigh.

The 'Cats are now 1-1 in league play, having previously defeated Bucknell 4-1. Two home games will be played this weekend at the Main Line Skating Rink as Franklin and Marshall and Lafayette will be hosted by the 'Cats.

Frosh Team Surprises

By John DiGennarro

If pre-season picks were right the Yankees, the Packers, and Sonny Liston would still be champs, and this year's "Widkittens" would have had their tails crushed beneath the Big Five rocker. After the early murmuring had circled the campus it would have been easier to get betters on the challenger in a Won Knox — Cassius Clay fight, than on our own frosh five. However, currently the yearlings are 5-3 overall, and 4-2 in league play, needing only a win against Penn to assure them of at least being co-tenants in the Big Five penthouse.

LaSalle

After winning three, the "Widkittens" journeyed to LaSalle in quest of a fourth only to suffer an 84-71 defeat at the hands of the future "Explorers." The frosh paced by Steve Krine's 19 points saw five men hit double Mascia and Ted Lavin hit 274 out of 300 shots against the Post Office on Tuesday. Gary Leidecker was high man, however, with a 287 total.

Villanova University

Dear Mr. Freind:

I would like to take this opportunity to thank you for sending the latest edition of the VILLANOVAN, in which the student body of Villanova University extends its congratulations to Dr. Jack Ramsay in recognition of his 200th win at St. Joseph's College.

It is very heartening and encouraging to know that even in the heat of fierce rivalry, clear vision and ready acknowledgement of a rival's ability are appreciated.

The additional manifestation of the Villanova student body's recognition of Dr. Ramsay's outstanding contribution as coach, scholar, and gentleman by way of a scroll is another proof that sportsmanship is still flourishing and gives promise for greater good will between the two colleges.

I have conveyed your best wishes to Dr. Ramsay, and have posted on our bulletin boards the tribute paid him in the VILLANOVAN. Dr. Ramsay is very grateful for your tribute and has asked me to extend his thanks to you.

Hoping that we will both be competing at College Park, and with best wishes for your forthcoming games, (February 20th excluded), I am

Elliot Trackmen Triumphant In Indoor Invitational Runs

By Jim Proud

The indoor track team has thus far only participated in invitational meets such as the Knights of Columbus meet in Boston and the Melrose Games in New York.

Since these meet are by invitation, the competition is very keen. Only certain runners or relay teams are asked to participate. Regardless of this, the Villanova team has done very well in these invitations.

In the Boston K of C meet. held on the 16th of January, the two diatance relay teams came away with victories in the events.

The two mile relay team, anchored by Noel Carrol, won their event in 7:37.5 by the slim margain of only one yard. When Carrol received the baton from Tom Sullivan, he had a four yard lead and had to stave off a fast finish by Joe Duchini to preserve a 'Cat victory.

In the New York Melrose Games the 'Cats also won the two relay events. Again the team was anchored by Noel Carroll but this time he won by a greater margain.

The team's most recent encounter was in the New York A.C. meet the 11th of this month. In this meet they did not fare as well as on the others. They finished second in both the relay events.

Basketball Fever Conquers Campus; Students Prepare For St. Joe's Tilt

By Joe Maffongelli

On Thursday evening, February 18, a chain of events will begin which will end in a defeat of powerful St. Joseph's. This is what some four thousand Wildcat cage fans are hoping for at any rate. However, coach Jack Ramsay may not see things the same way through his crystal ball. The VU Field House will be the sight of the initial link in this chain of events — a gala pep rally to "psych up" the student body.

Brian Banmiller, chairman of the spirit committee, presided over a meeting of that group on Thursday, February 11, at which time various ideas were presented for the upcoming skirmish. It was decided that buttons would be sold reading. 'BEAT THE HAWK,' for twenty-five cents. The entire thirty piece band will be on hand at the game, it was announced, and there wil be a flock of chickens to accompany the Hawk.

The pep rally will feature the '64-'65 'Cats as well as coach Jack Kraft and probably a few local sportswriters. A packed house is expected.

Dribblers March

Pi Sigma Epsilon Fraternity also plans a bit of excitement. They will send a contingent of their pledges to the Field House parking lot at approximately 6:00 on game night. The group plans to dribble a ball to the Palestra by way of Lancaster Pike. Upon arrival there a representative of the fraternity will present the hide covered globe to coach Kraft.

Mr. Banmiller expressed concern, at the meeting, regarding non-approved activities in preperation for the game. He went on to say that any actions which have not been sanctioned by the Student Government Association may not only destroy the effect of the joint efforts of the students, but could also cause severe dissension between the students and the administration. In such a case, the humor and "good time" time effect of the city rivalry would be lost.

Spirit In The Air

All in all the affair should turn out to be one that will be long remembered. Anyone who should be walking in the area of City Line and Lancaster this week will possibly be surprised at the type of anti —Hawk airlines which may been on the horizon.

Pistol Team Shot By Navy 1372-1356

By Jerry Bruderle

Villanova's only National Championship team, the Pistol team, suffered its third loss of the season on Saturday by dropping a close decision to Navy, 1372-1356 in the Naval Science Building.

This follows last Saturday's loss to West Point by a 1387-1350 tally. In between these two losses, however, Villanova defeated Philadelphia Post Office, 1104-1060, in a Delaware Valley Pistol League match. The 'Cats are 2-0 in this league and 5-1 in the Northeastern Intercollegite Pistol Conference. The Delaware Valley league is made up mostly of clubs, while the Northeastern Conference is made up of colleges such as MIT, U of Mass., and PMC.

'Cats Face Unbeaten Friars

By Jerry Bruderle

After THE GAME against third-ranked St. Joe's on Saturday, Villanova can take it easy. Tuesday night, we play in the Field House, and we always win in the Field House. This time its Providence. They're only fourth in the country, and the only undefeated team in the nation with a string of 19 straight, (longest in Providence history).

Guess who was the last team to beat Providence. Assumption? Fairfield? No. Try Villanova, Yes remember, last year in the NCAA at the Palestra. It was

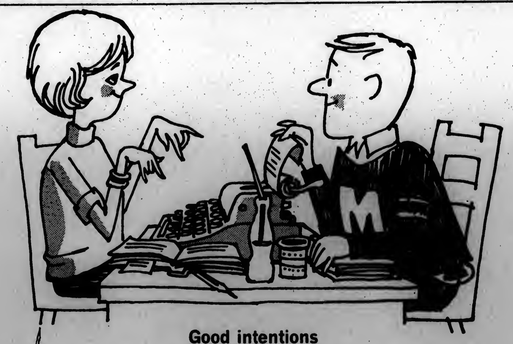
James Ahern

77-66 over Long John Thompson and Co.

Also, a win over Providence would help the 'Cats tournament hopes. Victory string, highly-ranked team, unbeaten, Field House mob, revenge game, sleeping outside the ticket office. Sounds good, huh? Providence alone sounds good.

Providence, this year, depends upon sophomores and juniors. Sophomore guard Jimmy Walker is the best. He's a 6-3, 205 pounder, averaging 21 points per game, and he compares well with former Friar greats Len Wilkins, John Egan, Vinny Ernst, and Ray Flynn. Walker is touted as another Wally Jones with his strong shooting, good defense and playmaking, as well as being a fine leaper.

But most of the leaping for Providence is done by another sophomore, 6-7 Dexter Westbrook, who averages 14 points and 11 rebounds per game. However, if Westbrook fouls out, Providence will have to depend upon Divine Providence for there is little else behind him.



Juniors Bill Blair, 6-3, and Jim Benedict, 6-4, man the corner spots. Both can jump well, and average 14 and 13 ppg. respectively.

Mike Riordon, 6-3, is the other guard, and he, too, is a sophomore averaging 8.3 a game.

Against Duquesne The Friars used no substitutes, but their backcourt reserve strength is well-stocked. Underneath they are weak.

Coach Joe Mullaney' defensive tactics were analyzed last December in Sports Illustrated. Mainly, he switches back and forth, a la Jack Ramsey, from a zone press to a man-to-man to a conventional zone, hoping to catch the opposition off guard.

Providence had trouble with Creighton earlier in the year, going into double overtime, and of course they narrowly got by St. Joe's. So it appears that Villanova is the last major stumbling block en rounte to a perfect season. We'll see.

BEAT ST. JOE'S

SATURDAY SHOWDOWN

KRAFTMEN BATTLE HAWKS

By Rusty Miller

Philadelphia's biggest annual sporting event takes place this Saturday night when the Wildcats take on the Hawks in a sweat and blood battle at the Palestra. The 3rd ranked Hawks will come into the fray with a 22-1 record. For the season they had an 88.1 scoring average while holding their opponent to a 70.2 p.pg.

Of all the Hawk players the one who demonstrated the most potential in his high school career was Matt Goukas. In his senior year at St. Joe's Prep, Matty was named to the All-City squad (a rather outstanding honor in the city of brotherly hate) and was named MVP in the Catholic League. Of the many scholarships offers that he received, the University of Miami appealed to him most

Matt Goukas

In his freshman year with the Hurricanes he tallied 19 ppg. but did not like their run and shoot type of ball. After sitting out a year in compliance with NCAA rules he has come on strong in every department for the Hawks. He has good speed and agility for his size. He is an excellent ballhandler and his great passing ability has ranked him high in the assist column. After twenty games this season Matt had an average of 13.3 ppg and has pulled down an average of 7.3 rebounds. These unimpressive statistics do not give a true picture of his worth however for his greatest asset lies in his high number of assists.

Billy Oakes

To many the name Cliff Anderson on St. Joe's freshman squad last year meant little. A mirterm graduate from Edison High in Philadelphia, Cliff was all but forgotten when the season's awards were being made. The coach of one of his Public League rivals had not forgotten him though and twice called Dr. Jack Ramsey about the boy, saying that he felt Anderson was the outstanding player in league that year. His performance as a freshman type Hawk was one superlative after another, leading the squad in accuracy from the field and setting a new rebounding record. His outstanding performance can unfortunately at a most inopportune time — for Villanova. Against the 'Cats he turned in a 35-point 22-rebound performance. Basketball is a sport that invites many comparisons.

For the year Anderson has a team-leading average of 17.7 ppg nd a perhaps more obvious leading tally of 15.1 rebounds per game.

At Bishop Newmann High where he led the Catholic League in scoring Billy Oakes was what is affectionately known as a "gunner." On entering St. Joe's he made the phenominal transition to team ball although he did seem to retain somewhat of an aversion to the ball the way he kept throwing it (toward the basket). In his sophomore year he acquired a further talent—defense. In his junior year Oakes has come through as a mature team ball player. He is constantly hustling on defense, and is sporting a 17.3 average for the season.

The second "Prepper" on the squad, Tom Duff graduated with his teammate Matt Goukas. Tom was an All-Catholic selection at the Prep. Coach Ramsey feels that his biggest asset is his great attitude and hard work.

'Cat Heat Wave Continues; St. Bonaventure Falls, 77-64

By Steve Freind

Let no one doubt that the 'Cats are on a heat wave. Last Saturday night it was St. Bonaventure that got scorched as Jack Kraft's surging Wildcats raced to a convincing 77-64 victory for their seventh straight triumph.

Villanova's win over the Bonnies, who definitely seem headed for an NIT appearance, pushed their record to 17-3 and set the stage for the BIG ONE against third ranked St. Joseph. The outcome of that game will go a long way in deciding the Big Five race and the 'Cats post season fate.

The victory in Buffalo was accomplished with suprising ease as the 'Cats jumped into an early lead and were never headed. With Bill Melchionni feeding off beautifully underneath and Jim Washington controlling the boards the Kraftmen rolled to a 37-24 halftime lead.

Midway in the second stanza the 'Cats hiked their lead to 16 before Jim Washington was benched with his fourth personal foul. With Washington out of the lineup, the Villanova offense sputtered as the Bonnies unleashed a torrid comeback which cut heir deficit to a mere 5 points.

At this point Washington returned to the game and the 'Cats regained their lost momentum. Melchionni came through with three great steals, Bill Soens and

Freindly Foolishness

The Big One

By Steve Freind

It's almost time for the Big One. With the date that has been circled on countless calendars rapidly approaching, something should be said about the coming events of Saturday night. Two tremendous teams will hook up in the nation's bitterest rivalry and the opinion here is that Kraft's 'Cats will walk off with all the marbles.

But it's quite possible to win the game and still come out on the short end of the stick. A lot more will be decided than merely which team scores the most points. The students bodies, along with the teams will be on trial Saturday in a contest every bit as important as the court encounter.

A display of bush league behavior on the part of Villanova students will more than overshadow any glory which the 'Cats attain. Last year a great game was marred by a disgusting sign unfurled by the St. Joseph cheery section. Villanova fans proved to be just as gauche by retaliating with a sign the following week which, to say the very least, outdid the Hawk banner for bad taste.

It's time to realize that spirit is not displayed, and games are not won, by the side which can print up the crudest signs.

It is by no means suggested here that the students of St. Joseph's and Villanova should have an enduring love for each other. The rivalry between the two schools is too fierce, the differences too distinct for this to ever take place. Nor is it held that Saturday night's clash is merly a game and should be viewed in the same manner as a friendly golf match. Game hell, it's a war and both schools realize it.

All that is being said here is that good taste, if not caused by any respect for St. Joseph's, then at least by a respect for the name of Villanova, should be displayed. Remember, it's possible to win a national championship and still be bush league. Let's not have that said about villanova. The mark of a champion is class. It should be displayed Saturday night.

There can be no doubt that the Hawks have a great team. Sporting a 22-1 record, they are currently ranked third in the nation and they deserve to be higher. Led by the incomparable Matt Guokas, from this corner the class of the city, the Hawks have made believers out of even their most vehement critics. During the entire season, the VILLANOVAN has wrote them up to be the fine squad they are.

This is in no way meant to be a slight to Jack Kraft's scrappers. Despite a few early losses, it was never doubted here that Kraft would have his boys rolling before long. During the past six weeks the 'Cats have played great ball in a sizzling stretch run for an NCCA tourney bid. The feeling here is that on Saturday the Villanova heat wave will wither the Hawks.

But no matter what the results of this weekend, you have to be proud of the Kraftmen. All that can be said to them is thanks for some great ball, good luck and:

BEAT HELL OUT OF THE HAWKS!

Head Hawk

By John Roberts

The annual St. Joseph's -Villanova debate on the health of the Hawk comes up for renewal this weekend. Any way you look at it, the Hawk has never been healthier.

St. Joe's is soaring up there where the air is rare on the wings of a 22 and 1 record and the man chiefly responsible for their phenominal success is their 39 year old professor-coach, Dr. Jack Ramsay.

Ramsey is currently in his tenth season as hardwood coach at St. Joseph's and already he has become an institution within an institution.

Respected by his players, endorsed by the St. Joe's fans and his teams feared by rival coaches, the colorful Hawk mentor has become the personification of the Hawk spirit and the embodiment of quality coaching.

Ramsay's Success

Success bespeaks ability and on this subject his record speaks for itself. In ten years at the Hawk's helm, Dr. Ramsey, with only one losing season, has posted a winning percentage of over 75% and piloted his teams to post-season tournaments eight out of nine of these seasons. (Is there any doubt about the current season.)

His teams have won the MAC and Big Five titles 5 times, captured the Quaker City Tournament title twice (the only team to do so) and his 1960-61 squad won the NCAA Eastern Regional championship enroute to the school record of 25 wins and 5 losses. He is one of the exclusive group of seven coaches who have reached the "century mark" in just five seasons and the Philadelphia Sportswriters Basketball Club named eastern college "coach of the year" in 1961. Pretty impressive credentials in any man's language!

Tough Defense

Ramsay's teams, like their fans, are noted for their fast maneuvering and pressing style of defense and are always a threat. As one rival coach put it, "On the road they are tough; at the Palestra they are impossible" and he further notes that "the most prudent alternative for a hapless coach who is facing them at home in the City Line Romper Room is — don't show up!"

Ramsay has extended his dynamic personality and abundance of energy to other fields with equal success. He is the author of a successful book "Pressure Basketball" and is the current Athletic Director at St. Joseph's. He also holds a master's degree and doctorate from the University of Pennsylvania.

All things considered, one is forced to admit that with Dr. Jack Ramsay at the helm, the Hawk will surely never really die.

Orlons, Fat City 4 Featured In Senior Weekend Blast

By Bob Fennel

The traditional Senior weekend will commence this Friday evening with a dinner dance in the grand ballroom of the Sheraton Hotel.

This affair which is the highlight of the senior year's social functions begins with cocktails from none to ten and the dinner will be served at ten o'clock. Dancing will continue until two a.m. Music will be provided by the well known Philadelphia society orchestra of Billy Butterfield.

Queen Coronation

Highlight of the evening will be the crowning of the senior queen. A special committee headed by Jim Brandt and composed of the class officers selected five finalists from the many contestants. This same committee will choose a winner prior to the dinner-dance.

General chairman Dennis Driscoll explained the higher cost of tickets. "In brief, the orchestra is more expensive, the gratitudes tax at the Sheraton has increased, the main course is more expensive and the favors cost more."

Elaborate Menu

The menu this year will include: Coupe of fresh fruit Hawaiian; Filet of Flounder stuffed with crab meat; Parlsely potatoes; Asparagus Hollandaise; Tossed Green salad with French Dressing; Baked Alaska Parade; rolls and butter; coffee, tea, and milk.

To compensate for the increase in price, a package deal is being offered. The combined price for tickets to the dinner-dance and the class party is twenty-three dollars. Purchased seperately the tickets cost twenty and five dollars respectively.

The Senior Class Party will take place Saturday from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. at the Crystal Ballroom in Havertown. Entertainment will be provided by the Orlons and The Fat City 4. Charles Zaccaria, chairman of the party, announces a ticket price of $5 for those not attending the Dinner Dance. Mandatory dress will include a coat and tie.

Tickets for the memorable event may be procured in the Student Government Association Office. Photograph will be taken at the Sheraton Hotel for $3.25. You will receive 2 5"x7" color pictures with frames and 2 color pictures, wallet size.

Prof. Duprey, Villanova Capture $1000 Theatre Award

By Bob Fennel

Richard A. Duprey, chairman of the Villanova University theatre department and Villanova University have received the $1000 Margo Jones University Award(created in memory of the late Dallas producer-director and given annually "to the university producer who did most to stimulate work during the year of new playwrights."

There is also a professional award which was won this year by Theatre '65 and its producers, Edard Albee, Richard Barr and Clinton Wilder.

The awards were presented in the home of veteran producer Gilbert Miller in New York city. The university award of $1000 was split between Duprey and the University. Miller said, "It is a financial grant presented by your colleagues of the professional theatre."

Duprey cited his wife, a tolerant university and his devoted co-workers in enabling him to receive this award. He also found it significant that he received this grant in the name of Margo Jones. "Some 16 years ago she found time in her busy life to answer the letter of an 18-year-old airman in Oklahoma and encouraged him to work in the theatre."

Professor Duprey, as head of Villanova's theatre department built the Villanova Playbox, a sixty-two seat arena theatre located in the classroom annex.

Last year the Playbox presented eight new plays. This year they have presented so far Shakespeare on Shakespeare, a sampler of scenes, songs, statements from the works of the great playwright; Break of Noon, by Paul Claudel, Mother Courage, by Bertold Brecht, Curse of the Craven Warriors, by Jules Tasca, and James Fox's the Two Grenadiers.

Richard Duprey

This month, Richard Duprey's own play The Gargoyle was presented. It was originally a short story published in The Catholic World, December, 1963. It embodied some of the new techniques of stagecraft being studied a he Playbox.

Along with other men on his staff, professor Duprey directs writes and designs. In addition to teaching, professor Duprey is drama reviewer for The Catholic Standard And Times and for the Main Line Times.

Singers Begin Concert Tour; Plan Trip To Midwest States

By Sam Cuccinotta

The Villanova Singers started their concert tours for this semester last Friday at Immaculata College after finishing last semester with national recognition over the Mutual Broadcasting System.

Last Saturday the Villanova Singers held a concert at Villa Julie College where James Debesis, '66, performed as soloist. Denis McNenny, '65, is presently acting as alternate soloist.

The next concert series begins at Regis College, Weston, Mass.; Mt. St. Mary's College, Hooksett, N.H.; and Emanual College, Boston on March 5, 6, and 7 respectively.

In the meantime the Villanova Singers and their affiliated group The Spires, both moderated by the Rev. Edward Doherty, OSA are preparing for two major musical events in their singing calender. One is a midwestern tour which will take the group to colleges in Wisconsin, Illnois and Indiana. These appearances are scheduled for the beginning of April.

The tour will be followed by a concert for the National Catholic Musical Educators Association which will hold it convention in Philadelphia this year on April 29. This concert will be a joint attempt by the Villanova Singers and Immaculata College. They intend to present Bach's "Magnificat" in Latin.

Publicity Director, James Sulzman and President Michael Neumann have decided on the type of programs to be presented to the country this year. It consists of a healthy choice from many of the musical forms and styles, ranging from classical and religious to popular music and folk songs.

Many of their selections are sung in Italian, Polish or German which reflects their American heredity and demonstrates that the group is highly practiced and specialized.

'Knock' By Romains At Villanova Playbox; Ed Weinheim Stars

The Villanova Graduate Department of Theatre will open its production of Jules Romain's Knock at the Villanova Playbox on Friday evening, February 26 at 8:30 p.m.

Rarely presented in this country, Knock is a satire on medical quackery in the peasant villages of southern France. The play was originally produced in 1923 with the celebrated French actor, Louis Jouvet in the title role.

Unanimism

Jules Romains is best known as a novelist and it was in this medium that he developed his theories on "Unanimism" to which he has been inevitably linked. He began writing plays in 1911 and reached his critical acclaim and triumph in the Paris production of Knock. In this work he coupled his philosophy on "Unanimism" with his background as a graduate student in biology.

The Villanova production is from a translation by James Gidney and will feature Ed Weinheim as Doctor Knock. Weinheim, a teacher at Interboro High School and a graduate student at Villanova, has appeared previously in Shaw's Don Juan in Hell, Shakespeare on Shakespeare, and many original plays in the Villanova Theatre program.

Rounding out the cast are Dennis Ciesil, Ken Resinski, Linda Kolts, Paul Buckley, John McPeak, Pat Aiken, Judy Stone, Jack Black, and Paul Norton.

Temple University Law Dean Speaks On Studies, Salaries

By Jim Brennan

The first meeting of the Pre-Law Society for the second semester, held last Thursday, was addressed by Benjamin Boyer, dean of the Temple University Law School.

Dean Boyer commenced his informal talk by declaring that many people decide to study law without really knowing what it is, or what it entails. He developed this statement by discussing the law student curriculum.

Continuing, he stated that the bulk of a student's time will be spent studying reported cases. Usually about four cases will be discussed in a classroom hour, and after this the instructor will question the students on the material.

The law student attends class approximately 15 hours a week. At the end of the first year, he should be familiar with 1800 cases, and by the time of the Bar Examination with 5400 cases.

Salary

Dean Boyer concluded by giving the results of a survey concerning the median income of lawyers in the Philadelphia area. This median was found to be $14,000 per year. The individual lawyer's income varied with the number of practitioners in the office. The solo practitioner receives about $11,100 per year. Those in an office of two of three — $15,000; four to eight — $17,000; six to eight — $19,000; nine to eleven — $22,500; and twelve or more — $28,500.

WWVU Offers Historical Book: 'Churchill-The Life Triumphant'

WWVU takes pride in anouncing that a timely historical record of the life of Sir Winston Churchill will be made available to Villanovan readers early in March.

The book is being published by United Press International and American Heritage Publishing Company. The title is Churchill — The Life Triumphant.

The hard-cover volume contains 144 pages of text and pictures, many in color, including special color photographs of the state funeral and burial.

It is authoritative, fast-moving review of Churchill's 90 momentous years.

The book will draw not only upon the extensive UPI files of more than 40 years and the full editorial resources of American Heritage but upon many private sources as well. The foreword will be by General Eisenhower and a 10,000-word narrative of Sir Winson's life has been written by Henry Anatole Grunwald, historian and journalist of international affairs. Mr. Grunwald is a senior editor at Time.

The Churchill book will have the same physical format as Four Days, the UPI-American Heritage book on the assassination and funeral of President Kennedy. Special sections totaling 32 pages will be devoted to Churchill's own speeches and writings, and to what others have said or written about him, from the first comments of his schoolmates to the final eulogies of world leaders.

UPI and American Heritage announced earlier this month that the book would be made available only to those newspapers and radio stations subscribing to the UPI news services at a recommended price of $2 per copy.

A jacketed bookstore edition priced at $3.50 will be available in book and department stores a few weeks after initial promotion by WWVU.

Jack Kraft Day Set By SGA; Trophy For 'Cats-Hawks Tilt

Student Government Association members passed motions dealing with the purchase of a trophy for the annual basketball game between Villanova and St. Joseph's, the presentation of a scroll to Hawks' coach Jack Ramsay, revision of the Administration's policy on course or section changing, and the setting aside of Tuesday, February 23 as Jack Kraft Day at its meeting on February 17.

The first motion under new business petitioned the PTC, Red Arrow Lines and the Pennsylvania State Utilities Commission to allow college students to avail themselves of the prevailing student rates and that, if passed, the motion be sent to other colleges for similar action. The motion was tabled until the represenatives of the various companies would be present at the SGA meeting.

The next motion was unanimously passed. It requests the Student Council of St. Joseph's College to join with the Villanova SGA in purchasing a trophy which will presented to the winner of the St. Joseph's — Villanova basketball game each year. Student's Personal Library May Earn Amy Loveland Award

By Walt Baginsky

The Villanova Faculty Committee announces a book collecting contest to be open to undergraduate students in all colleges of the University.

The contest is in collaboration with the Amy Loveland National Award of $1,000 to be given annually to one student of a four-year college or university in the United States for collecting the best personal library.

W. J. Rice, Associate Professor of Chemical Engineering and also one of the judges has aptly expressed the contest's purpose: "Encourage and reward people who have intelligently collected a personal library of some note."

The local award rules will coincide with those of the national award since the winner of the local contest will be nominated for the national contest. The rules are: first, the contestant must be a student enrolled in one of the undergraduate colleges of the University. Second, the collection must be personal property of the contestant. A statement to this effect must accompany the entry. A photograph of the collection would be desirable and may be required by the judges.

Third, a minimum of thirty-five books in the collection are required. No upper limit is set, but numbers are secondary to discriminating selection. Fourth, the contestant shall submit a list of the collection describing each volume and its special value or interest to the contestant. These are but a few of the rules for the contest.

Students interested in further information and in participation should contact Father Rongione, Dr. Frescoln or Professor Rice. Contestants will be asked to file their entries sometime in March and final judging for the local contest will take place in April.

ICG Plans Harrisburg Trip; Burke Announces Final Plans

The Intercollegiate Conference on Government at Villanova under the direction of Frank Burke, has announced that it is in the final stages of planning for the annual Harrisburg trip. Burke enlarged on the preparations for this event.

The outlines for the final plans were laid at the executive meeting held at the Pennsylvania Military College on February 9. At this time it ratified the preliminary plans as well as the final plans for the Harrisburg convention scheduled for the state capital April, 2 and 3. The theme of this year's meeting will be the reproduction of a model state legislature in all its facets and operations.

This theme is pursuant to the organization's purpose — to familarize college students with the intricate workings of their state governments as a group. Along these lines, the various member delegations participate by working on a project that is drawn up at the previous year's meeting. The delegations are divided into different geographical areas in which they function as a group during the year to complete the project prior to the annual convention.

Villanova is a member of the Southeastern division with eight other area schools. Frank Burke, of Villanova, is the executive vice-president for the Southeastern division.

The Brennan Report

Disability Dilemma

By Jim Brennan

With the ever-growing complexities of political life many questions must be answered. One of these concerns presidential disability.

What would be the fate of government in the United States in the years to come if a president became disabled but did not die? Would a devoted First Lady, or a wary Vice-President, attempt to carry out the role of Chief Executive. Perhaps the government would stagger along, doing the best job possible, until the President regained his health, or was succeeded upon his death by the Vice-President. What if there were no Vice-President to assume the office of President? Would there be a dangerous vacuum while Congress tried to decide upon a successor?

The presidential succession clause of the Constitution states: "In case of the removal of the President from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the Vice-President, and the Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation, or inability, both of the President and Vice-President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly, until the disability be re moved, or a President shall be elected."

A problem arises when we look at the words "the same," in bold-face above. Do they mean that the office of the Presidency or that the powers and duties of the Presidency shall devolve on the Vice-President?

Scholars who have examined the records of the Constitutional Convention (1787) agree that the word "same" was intended as a substitute for the words "powers and duties," and not "office."

This clause had its first important test in 1841; this test disregarded the Framers' presumed intent and set a precedent for future successions. William Henry Harrison, President for only one month, died and Vice-President John Tyler, despite the objections of former President Adams and other high government officials, assumed the office and title of President.

The precedent set by Tyler has been accepted on seven subsequent occasions when Vice-Presidents have become President through succession, and has assumed the force of law.

Tyler's precedent, relating to succession because of death, resignation, or removal from office would probably create no problems even though it may technically be a violation of the Framers' intent.

But let us consider the case of presidential disability. Would this precedent set by Tyler prevent a disabled President from resuming office even when the disability was removed and confer upon the Vice-President the office of the Presidency.

Presidential disability has occurred three times in the history of the Presidency. President James Garfield, shot by an assassin, lived for eighty days before dying. The second and third cases of disability concerned President Woodrow Wilson who was paralyzed by a stroke and President Eisenhower who sustained a heart attack. In all three cases the Vice-Presidents refused to act as President for fear that their action would oust the President.

Another complicating factor in this problem lies in the determination of disability. Who is to say when a President is unable to carry out his duties?

Informal agreements with Vice-Presidents were entered into between Presidents Eisenhower and Kennedy. President Johnson told a November 28, 1964 press conference, that he would make such an agreement with Vice-President Humphrey.

Actually, these informal agreements have serious handicaps as a permanent solution to the problem of presidential disability.

NEXT WEEK: Solutions with pro and con views.

A Future Honor-Code

Last week, on this page, we spoke about cheating and the implications which the latest cheating scandals may or may not have on Villanova. We said then that the mere condemning of honesty and extolling of integrity in studies would, directed at the average college student, have little or no effect on their already established habits.

Perhaps then something more positive is needed.

The academic honor codes, which have been adopted at many colleges and universities throughout the country, are frequently the topic of controversy and criticism. Whether they actually succeed in constraining the small percentage of students who don't do their own work is doubtful. But it is unquestionable that the honor system, wherever it has been instituted, has done wonders to deepen, strengthen and improve faculty-student-administration relations — an amelioration which few can say is not needed here at Villanova.

Whether any specific honor code system would be adaptable to a campus which is largely non-resident, whether it would be well-received and followed by the student body, and whether it would be successfully upheld through future enrollments, are questions answerable now only by conjecture.

But it is self-evident that such a proposal should be considered, that it should be discussed, and that it should be thoroughly studied.

Four Years Later

The struggle for national survival sometimes creates strange bedfellows. Although it rated but an eighteen-word mention in last week's papers, the signing of a $60 million interest-free Communist Chinese loan to Pakistan marks a real paradox in international relations.

Four years ago President Kennedy was faced with a serious crisis in Laos. As the Communist rebels swept closer to the capital of that still troubled Asian kingdom, Mr. Kennedy decided that any further advancement would necessitate the use of American troops. Attempting to find allies, he appealed to Great Britain, Thailand, the Philippines, and Pakistan.

The token forces that he requested would not significantly change what was basically an American action, but it show allied solidarity. The former three countries were reluctant to commit any troops but not Pakistan.

Token forces are not much more than that to Pakistan's President Ayub Kahn, so he, instead, promised 5,000 of his nation's military finest. From this time on, Mr. Ayub had easy access to the Presidential ear and, later that year, was accorded the rare honor of a social on the lawn of Mt. Vernon.

Ironically, that same Mr. Ayub agreed to this recent Red Chinese loan. Why the change? When caught in a potential war-zone, a weak nation, with a powerfully belligerent neighbor, is often forced to go with the apparent victor. Has there been a change in the past four years?

Letters To The Editor

To the Editor:

Saturday afternoon, Fcoruary 13, about 150 people gathered at Independence Hall in Philadelphia and marched to City Hall. There two young men cited the atrocities committed in Vietnam and asked that they be stopped. The only thing unusual about this session was that the atrocities cited were those of the United States Forces operating in this area.

There were many faults to be found with the demonstration and the demonstrators. The most obvious fault was that neither their posters nor their speakers mentioned Communism; it didn't seem to be a factor for consideration. The only important thing in South Vietnam was the obvious fact that these people do not have a democratic, duly-elected government. However neither the speakers nor the demonstrators even bothered to propose a realistic way to establish a democracy in South Vietnam. They only propose we withdraw.

Paul Potter, one of the two speakers and President of students for a Democratic Society, admitted after his speech that with U.S. withdrawal it would be inevitable that the Communists take over South Vietnam. He saw Vietnam as a type of Southeast Asian Poland. Maintaining that the United States recognizes Poland for what it seems, a Communist country that appears to be doing all right, Porter felt that a unified North and South Vietnam would do better as a Communist country than it is doing now.

This was the major fallacy of this entire demonstration; the desire to establish a democracy in South Vietnam by surrendering it to the Communists.

True enough, there are atrocities being committeed on both sides in this war, and these will continue until someone finds a solution, but evidently these demonstrators weren't even looking for one.

To the Editor:

The Villanova administration should be proud of the performance of the basketball team against St. John's on February 9 — it should hang its head in shame at the performance of the attending student body.

Although I am a Villanova booster, Tuesday's game has prompted me to let you know that I, for one, strongly protest the extremely poor sportsmanship demonstrated by the students.

An' All That Jazz

by Barry Bornstein

Usually when a cat has somethin' goin' for him-he keeps it under his hat. This seems to be the case with Chett Carmichael of WDAS. Chett is president of what is probably the hottest club in Philley-JAHC. The-Jazz-At-Home-Club is made up of about 1800 jazz-lovers who get together on Sunday afternoons at a local art gallery, and listen to top-drawer live jazz. Any how we've decided to let the cat out of the bag and spread the word, because it's a gasser. More about their next session next week. . . .

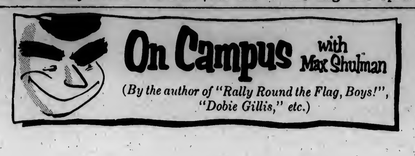
Again, swarms of foul notes filled the stratosphere this week, all clamoring for recognition. And amidst these shrill shouts, two of them have gained entrance to the magic circle of the weekly-Hot Horn Award. This week the true essence of qualification for the award was met by three young men and a French-Canadian lass—who, beyond any shadow of a shadow, elicited what was almost the biggest blow of the year, with their disclosed plans to blow up the Liberty Bell, the Washington Monument, and the Statue of Liberty (a good way to even up with Charlie "Goldbucks" DeGaulle) — quite a foul note. Can almost hear that Liberty Bell going now.

This week's second winner, on a more serious note, is Louis Klein, program director of WFIL-TV. Seems that Lou is trying to blow WFIL right off the air by making his weight felt. This week WFIL-TV came through by: (1) knocking the Les Crane Show off the air (2) refusing to televise Sunday NBA pro-basketball in Philly, and (3) failing to televise this year's Villanova Jazz Festival. The roughest loss was the Crane show — an all-around job that had just about something for everyone. Keep blowin', Lou baby, and take the Big 6 with you.



This week's RUNNER-UP: Sheriff Clark of Selma, Alabama.

Who's Gildo Mahones? — We didn't know either. But after listening to his latest Prestige LP — "The Great Gildo" Plays Soulful Piano — we were sorry that we hadn't heard more. Seems that Gildo has been hiding behind the likes of Lambert, Hendricks and Ross. Out of this two-record set (a bargain, as it's two for the price of one) comes a beautiful original ballad called "Blue" — on which Gildo reaches the zenith of the right-hand with an inventive and melodic lilt. A top LP . . .

ONCE MORE UNTO THE BREACH

Today I begin my eleventh year of writing this column in your campus newspaper.

I wasn't sure I'd be coming back this year. After a decade of doing this column, I had retreated to my country seat, tired but happy, to enjoy a nice long rest. But last night as I sat on my verandah, peaceful and serene, humming the largo from A Long Day's Night and worming my dog, a stranger suddenly appeared before me.

He was a tall, clean-limbed man, crinkly-eyed and crooked-grinned, stalwart and virile. "How do you do," he said. "My name is Stalwart Virile and I am with the Personna Stainless Steel Razor Blade people."

"Enchanted," I said. "Take off your homburg and sit down." I clapped my hands sharply. "Norman!" I called. "Another chair for Mr. Virile!"

"Another chair for Mr. Virile!"

Obediently my dog trotted away and returned directly with a fanback chair of Malayan rattan. He is the smartest dog in our block.

"I suppose you're wondering why I am here," said Mr. Virile, seating himself.

"Well, sir," I replied, my old eyes twinkling roguishly, "I'll wager you didn't come to read my meter."

You can imagine how we howled at that one!

"That's a doozy!" cried Mr. Virile, finally catching his breath. "I must remember to tell it to Alice when I get home."

"Your wife?" I said.

"My father," he said.

"Oh," I said.

"But enough of wit and humor," he said. "Let us get down to business. How would you like to write a campus column for Personna Stainless Steel Razor Blades?"

"For money?" I said.

"Yes," he said.

"My hand, sir," I said and clasped his. Warmly he returned the pressure, and soft smiles played upon our lips, and our eyes were moist with the hint of tears, and we were silent, not trusting ourselves to speak.

"What will you write about in your campus column?" asked Mr. Virile when he was able to talk again.

"I will take up the burning issues that vex the American undergraduate!" I cried, bounding to my feet. "I will explore, without fear or favor, such explosive questions as 'Are roommates sanitary?' and 'Should proctors be given a saliva test?' and 'Should capital punishment for pledges be abolished?' and 'Can a student of 19 find happiness with an economics professor of 80?'"

"And will you also say a pleasant word from time to time about Personna Stainless Steel Razor Blades?" asked Mr. Virile.

"Sir," I said simply, "what other kind of word except pleasant could I possibly say about Personna Blades, which give me more luxury shaves than Beep-Beep or any other blade I might name?"

"Another of my products is Burma Shave," said Mr. Virile. "Can you find it in your heart to mention Burma Shave occasionally?"

"But of course!" I declared. "For is not Burma Shave the whisker-wiltingest lather in the land?"

"Yes," he admitted.

And then he shook my hand again and smiled bravely and was gone—a tall silhouette moving erectly into the setting sun. "Farewell, good tonsorialist!" I cried after him. "Aloha!"

And turned with a will to my typewriter.

The WIBG good guys are in the news this time around. New guy Dean Tyler is actually a returnee. He was with Radio 99 back in the old Tom Donahue days. He takes over the Production Department just vacated by Larry Justice who moves to the halls of injustice at Max Richmond's WMEX in Boston.

Bill Wright could have a Country and Western smash with "This Boy I Call Son" on Warner Brothers. Those who know Bill know that he means every word in the recitation.

Don L. Brink also of WIBG has cut a master and is toying with idea of releasing the record. We wonder if Frank "X" will go back into the kiddie record field.

Bobby Rydell has reported to Fort Dix and Gene Kearney, former Sales co-ordinator at WWVU has joined the WXUR/Media sales force.

BILL'S BRAINSTRORM: Although I've held on predicting the death of the Beatles it is apparent that the reaction to "Eight Days A Week" has been somewhat less than what the mop heads have experienced with earlier releases. Although they certainly will not drop off the hit parade the boys will be forced to do more than attach their name to a disc to make it a million seller.

END THE DRAFT BY 1967-?

By Tom Bruderle

Last week we attempted to visualize the uselessness and the avoidable problems posed by the maintenance of the present conscription system. The difficulty facing the Armed Forces is to find a means of inducing 90,000 more volunteers to compensate for the end of the draft.

Two approaches may be contemplated: a more realistic wage scale and a more realistic attitude toward standards of eligibility.

To attract the quality and quantity of personnel desired, business offers generous starting salaries. Under the military wage legislation passed last fall, a private in the service is paid but $78 month for his first four months of duty, while at the end of the year it becomes $83.

In Canada, however, a private draws $112 a month, nearly 50 per cent more than his American counterpart and, with specialized skills, his monthly income may run as high as $202.

Senator Nelson cites the fact that the Air Force has 5,000 men who are currently receiving relief payments to help support their families. "Is it any wonder that more men do not volunteer?" he asks.

The purpose of the pay raise act was to encourage officers to resist the financial lures of civilian life in business. Further legislation may still be necessary as evidenced by the $462 and $416 a month salaries earned by college graduates in civil service and New York City teamsters, respectively, as compared with the $268 taken home by graduates of the service academies.

Congress did not raise the pay scale to induce enlistment but rather relied again on the draft. Higher wages are provided those who re-enlist, but they aren't used to encourage the initial enlistment. Senator Nelson is "convinced that if we were willing to offer realistic salaries to newly enlisted recruits, we could dramatically increase the flow of enlistment from our vast manpower pool."

In 1957, the Secretary of Defense appointed a special committee headed by Ralph Cordiner, President of General Electric, to study the need for pay increases. Cordiner estimated that a more appropriate wage scale would increase enlistment and reduce unnecessary military positions. This, in turn, would cause higher morale and better training for men who would be better able to use it for a longer period of time.

Three years ago, Army researchers discovered that to equip, give basic and advanced individual training, and transport a man to his first unit assignment would amount to $3,080. Add to this the actual $162 cost of recruitment and the total comes to $4,042.

The cost of registering a draftee amounts to $66 and this, added to the same earlier cited $3,180 equals $3,946—a difference of $96 in favor of the draftee. After training the draftee, however, the Army was left with a year's less service from him since he serves but two years. When placed aside the figures of the recruit (who serves for three years) it works out to $1,554 per man as compared with $2,466 for the draftee—an advantage of $912 per man year in favor of the volunteer.

Both Great Britain and Canada have abolished the draft and, have not only improved the wages, but also housing and recreational facilities, travel allowances and educational opportunities.

Presently the Armed Forces spend $50 million per annum to attract 500,000 men. Could not 90,000 more men be attracted by this same or a larger amount? Senator Nelson and his supporters believe so.

Another means of increasing the number of voluntary enlistments would be to revise the standards of eligibility. Some of these standards have been set because of the large numbers of available men, but such reasoning is obviously self-defeating.

Recent studies indicate that about one-third of all draftees and enlistees are rejected for physical or mental reasons in the peacetime service. The overall rejection rate during the Korean War was 24 per cent. General Louis B. Hershey, director of the Selective Service System, believes that, as the physical and mental standards are more rigidly interpreted and applied, the rejection rate may approach 40 per cent.

Arbitrariness in the testing system is so widespread that it is possible for a man to be refused enlistment only to be drafted at a later date. The mental qualifications for enlistment are higher than for the draft.

The unique cases of outstanding athletes who are unfit for military service certainly exemplifies the inconsistent nature of our draft procedures.

The anti-draft advocates ask if the same qualifying standards must be applied to all applicants for the service. Says Senator Nelson, "Does a clerk in a Washington proceurement agency need the same physical abilities as a front-line rifleman? Does a cook need the same education and training as a radar technician? Should a radio repairman be barred if he is not quite tall enough, or is overweight or underweight?"

If business does not demand that all employees be of similar mental and/or physical competency for different positions, why should the Armed Forces?

A comparison with eight other NATO nations revealed that the U.S. had the highest rate of rejection for her Armed Forces at 36 percent, distantly followed by Norway and the Netherlands with 25 and 24 percent, respectively. Turkey's one percent was the lowest.

The reduction of enlistment standards would not cause a proportional decrease in the quality of military personnel since the standards would vary according to the job. Requirements for front-line duty would, naturally, be more rigid than those of a clerk or repairman.

Recently, Sargent Shriver observed that many men who were considered unfit for military service according to today's inflexible entrance requirements, want the opportunity to be trained, educated and to contribute to the defense of their country. General Hershey said that his office has received numerous letters from young men previously disqualified but who still wish to enter the service.

Said he, "The volume of requests for help of this nature indicate . . . that significant numbers of young men not qualified for military service actually want to serve."

The termination of the draft would require the Armed Forces to secure 90,000 more men than are now recruited, which can be accomplished by a revision of the entrance requirements, pay increases at the lower levels, increased fringe benefits and revised recruiting methods.

Senator Nelson admits that the advantages of the draft may finally outweigh the disadvantages but such might be the case only when and if an alternative plan to the draft is presented.

Should the draft eventually be abolished, it is needless to say that conscription would be re-introduced in case of national emergency.

Every facet of American society would profit by the removal of the draft but, sums up the Wisconsin Democrat, "For the students and their anxious parents, ending the draft will remove the cloud of uncertainty which is so unsettling during those crucial formative years in a young man's life."

John Lauritzen wanted further knowledge

He's finding it at Western Electric

When the University of Nevada awarded John Lauritzen his B.S.E.E. in 1961, it was only the first big step in the learning program he envisions for himself. This led him to Western Electric. For WE agrees that ever-increasing knowledge is essential to the development of its engineers—and is helping John in furthering his education.

John attended one of Western Electric's three Graduate Engineering Training Centers and graduated with honors. Now, through the Company-paid Tuition Refund Plan, John is working toward his Master's in Industrial Management at Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute. He is currently a planning engineer developing test equipment for the Bell System's revolutionary electronic telephone switching system.

If you set the highest standards for yourself, both educationally and professionally, we should talk. Western Electric's vast communications job as manufacturing unit of the Bell System provides many opportunities for fast-moving careers for electrical, mechanical and industrial engineers, as well as for physical science, liberal arts and business majors. Get your copy of the Western Electric Career Opportunities booklet from your Placement Officer. And be sure to arrange for an interview when the Bell System recruiting team visits your campus.

SENIOR WEEKEND — 1965

mented as soon as St. Joseph's agrees to combine with the purchase — possibly this year.

Another motion brought up by Freind reads: That the SGA, on behalf of the student body of Villanova, present a scroll to Dr. Jack Ramsay in recognition of his 200th win and in further recognition of his contribution to basketball in the last ten years as scholar, coach, and gentleman. The motion was passed and a scroll has been prepared and presented to Dr. Ramsay.

Brian Banmiller, moved that the SGA set aside Tuesday, February 23, as Jack Kraft Day in recognition of his excellence in the field of basketball and his unyielding loyalty to Villanova University. The motion was unanimously passed.

Basketball Club

The most controversial motion of the night was introduced by David Moore and Banmiller. They asked that the SGA affirm and fully approve its current policy regarding preferential seating of the Basketball Club at all home basketball games. The motion was defeated by a tally of 21½ to 17.

Arguments centered around the alleged promise made by Mr. Arthur Mahan, Athletic Director, to give preferential seating to members of the Basketball Club. Mahan denied the promise and said that he would give no preference except that season ticket holders would receive the best tickets — first come, first served.

Discussion ranged from the purpose of the Basketball Club to the best position for seating of spirited Villanova rooters. Banmiller, chairman of the Spirit Committee, came late since he was working on projects with the Basketball Club for the St. Joseph's game.

"I wish that I had been able to participate in the debate from the beginning," said Banmiller after the meeting. "This could be a real blow to Villanova spirit at the basketball games next year and this year. Widely-scattered fans will tend toward disorganized rooting."

Course Changes

Rusty Miller moved that the SGA request the Administration to revise its policy of allowing students to change theor courses or sections for only a limited number of reasons, and that it specifically request that the students be allowed to change courses or sections upon request. Miller explained that his would help the student to switch a course to teachers they might prefer for good reason.

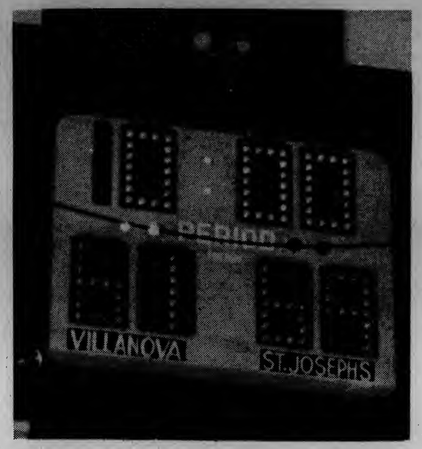
Ph.D., Calif. Institute of Tech.

What does it take to "spark" a man to his very best . . . to bring out the fullest expression of his ability and training? At Ford Motor Company we are convinced that an invigorating business and professional climate is one essential. A prime ingredient of this climate is the stimulation that comes from working with the top people in a field . . . such as Dr. James Mercereau.



Jim Mercereau joined our Scientific Laboratory in 1962. Recently, he headed a team of physicists who verified aspects of the Quantum Theory by creating a giant, observable quantum effect in superconductors. This outstanding achievement was the major reason the U. S. Junior Chamber of Commerce selected Dr. Mercereau as one of "America's Ten Outstanding Young Men of 1964." Your area of interest may be far different from Dr. Mercereau's; however, you will come in contact with outstanding men in all fields at Ford Motor Company.

We believe the coupling of top experience and talent with youth and enthusiasm is stimulating to all concerned. College graduates who join Ford Motor Company find themselves very much a part of this kind of team. Has the thought ever entered your mind that you might get a job and make a career for yourself?

'Cats Prepare For Baseball Campaign; Team Stocked With Returning Stars

By Joe Maffongelli

With the coming of spring a young man's thoughts turn to other things, and, believe it or not, one of them is baseball. So too with the coming of this mild spring-like weather, a sports-writer may pause to glance at the Villanova baseball diamond across the street from Bartley Hall. Already preparations are being made there for the start of the 1965 "national pass time."

A visit to the office of Arthur Mahan, director of athletics and head baseball coach, was very enlightening as to the expected fate of the '65 fly chasers who will very shortly assume their gloves and 'Cat-bats. Mahan, who has turned out some fine clubs in the past on the Main Line campus, was rather optimistic about the upcoming season.

Many Returnees

Mahan noted that he has every mainstay returning from last year's cast with the exception of standout hurler Bill Smith. Although the club finished their season with a so-so record it was not a true indication of their caliber, and therefore the experience they gained may prove to be instrumental in producing a standout nine come next month.

One of the highlights of last season was the defensive ability of the infield. That same group is intact with big John McMann at first base, Artie Mahan, Jr., at the keystone, Dion Vondierlieth at short, and Bob Hall at the hot corner.

A glum note has shown itself already in that Artie Mahan, who batted over the .300 mark last season, has suffered a fractured collar bone. The loss which this will entail is not yet known.

Behind the plate Mahan's corps seem solid. In Andy Camilio he has a fine glove man with an explosive bat. In reserve are George Pond and Jim Marcey. Pond, who's hitting can be sensational, suffered an injured leg last year. If he's shaken the ill effects of it he may be a big asset to the club.

The outfielders present a rather pleasant problem in that there are too many of them. These are the kind of problems which Mahan appreciates. The most consistent hitter of the gardeners is Jack Emery, although Paul Pucalik and Tom Marziaz could come around with offensive punch. Tom Edwards is another valuable fielder, but he may return to the mound this season where he originally started two years ago. The number of capable outfielders may give coach Mahan reason for platooning against the pitching which is encountered.

Though the loss of Smith will affect the pitching staff, there are a few starters remaining in Candelmo, Vic Majuski, and Ed Parella. Candelmo could blossom into one of the best in the area.

This Sunday, February 28, the 'Cats fire in the Conventional matches. Last year, Villanova placed third in the country behind the Army and the Air Force. On March 7 the 'Cats defend their National title. Both of these championship matches are with the .22 pistol.

Scoring

In the scoring for the national matches, it is not an immediate thing where an individual knows that a certain shot can cost his team the championship, as in basketball. The matches are held all over the country with a regulation sized target and then the scores are sent to national judges who review the target sheets and determine the champion. Thus, it might be five or six weeks after the match is held, before the winner is named.

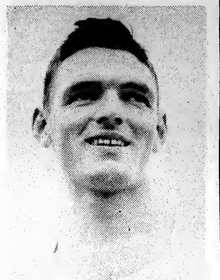
A Gift From Ireland

By John DiGennarro

"Ah, Patrick Reilly, just the man I be 'lookin for."

"Be on with ya Timothy Kelly — I've no time for any of ya blarney."

"This the gospel truth I speak today — I swear it. Tis about me cousin Noel Carroll attendin Villanova on the other side. A right big lad he is, strong as St. Patty's staff, and as fast as a scared leprechaun.



Why just this year past he represented our dear old Erin in the Olympics. He be no slouch on the other side either. Why he's as many medals as we've got shamrocks.

Scrapbook

Just ya notice this scrapbook I be' collectin, and if ya know any of the sport ya can't help but see his achievements. Why as a wee freshman he was number one man on the cross-country team. He'd a won I.C.'s that year, but he followed another runner down the wrong path and got lost.

Still, he came back, passed some two hundred other runners, and finished sixth. T'was then they were predicting great things for him; and right they were when the regular track season came sprinting in.

He's one of the world's premier half-milers now, and his clockings prove it. Last year, in Louisville, he turned in a fantastic 1.48:8 indoors. In the '64 Inquirer Games he won the "Borican-1000" in 2.09:7, outkicking John Dunkelburg in a whirlwind finish.

Noel Carroll

Unfortunately, Dunkelburg came back to dethrone him this year, but Noel kicked home second. However, since no runner has won the race twice in the last three years Noel retired the trophy on the basis of his winning time being the fastest. Furthermore, he was anchor man on the world-record breaking two-mile relay team — no small feat mind ya.

When the spring came and the thinclads exchanged the smoke and boards for the fresh-air and cinders Noel proved to be even more of a demon. He was caught in a remarkable 1.46:8 anchor leg, and a comparibly great 1.47:5 out of the blocks. Ya know for yaself, Patrick, better times are hard to come by .

Another Irishman

Tis another Irishman's been his biggest thorn, one Tommy Farrell out of St. John's University. He manged to nip Noel twice last year, costing him IC4A titles both times. However losing to the great ones carries no shame, but rather admiration for being in the same class.

Ah, and a lucky lad he's been on the other side. He's not only garnering numerous track laurels, and receiving a fine education, but he's also taken a bride. A bonny lass named Deirdre O' Callahan is the proud girl, and soon she will make Noel a proud father.

Delaney Sponsor

It's been years since he first went over there on an Irish relay team sponsored by Ron Delaney, and was coaxed by Jumbo Jim Elliot to lend his services to Villanova. Since then he has temporarily exchanged his green shorts in favor of a blue pair, but nevertheless he's still the same old Noel, and I'm as proud of him as his teammates and fellow students, and of course a girl named Deirdre."

Pistol Team Splits In Two Close Matches With Penn Ridge

By Jerry Bruderle

The pistol team divided two matches last Friday night against the Penn Ridges Pistol Club in a Delaware Valley Pistol League match. Matches were held separately with the .22 caliber pistol and the .38 caliber pistol. Villanova captured the .22 match 1106-1072. The 'Cats are now 3-0 in .22 competition.

Jim Bushong was high man with a 280 total, followed by Ted Laven with a 278 total. Gary Leidecker scored a 275 and Tony Mascia had a 273. Bill Galluzzo was high for Penn Ridge mith a 278 score.

In .38 competition, Villanova dropped a 1052-1002 decision. Galluzzo was again high for the Penn Ridge squad with a 266 score. For Villanova, Bushong tallied 265 and Leidecker had 264. With that loss, Villanova dropped from the list of the unbeaten in .38 competition. Villanova is now 2-1 firing the .38. Their 3-0 firing in the .22 competition is, of course, best in the

Frosh 'Catfish Swamp NYU; Display Promise For Future

By Jim Proud

In what must be described as a solid victory, Villanova's Freshman Swimming Team defeated a talented Frosh team from New York University. The final score of 63-29 gives the causal observer an indication of the ability and the overall excellent effort of the swimming yearlings. A brief rundown of how some of the Freshman captured their events will show why their is much optimism on the Freshman Swimming team for the future.

In the 400 medley relay the combined efforts of Mike Fitzmaurice, Bob Brenker, Ed Ritti and Tom Brady were more than sufficient in capturing this event for Villanova. Couple this with the individual victory of Rich Lamb in the 200 meter freestyle and the victorious tone of the meet was secure.

In the 400 meter freestyle the swimming talents of Bob Brinker became evident to the opposition. The lead which he gained in his leadoff lap was to great that the N.Y.U. yearlings never could close the gap. In this event Villanova relied on three of its to freestyle swimmers to complement Brinker. The decision to use Brady Hazelwood and Hornsleth enabled the 'Cats tread to their number of victories.

The one Frosh swimmer who displayed great individual talent was Mike Fitzmaurice. His ability and determination left his opponent far in his wake in the 500 meter freestyle event, and he was a key man in the decisive victory over N.Y.U. in the 400 meter relay.

Another great individual event, the 200 meter medley was handly won by Jim Hazelwood. This defeat, coupled with the preceeding Villanova victories left N.Y.U. with a solid loss.

In the remaining two meets, one against the Hill School in Pottsville and the other a home meet against St. John's Freshman, Villanova's Frosh Merman can end the season with .700 record.

FRIARS' STREAK ENDS

'CATS HALT PROVIDENCE

By Steve Freind

Bouncing back from their loss to St. Joseph's, Villanova's fighting Wildcats dropped fourth-ranked Providence from the ranks of the unbeaten last night with a 71-57 victory before a frenzied Field House throng.

The win over Providence, sole conqueror of St. Joe's and, before night night, the only undefeated major college team in the nation, pushed the 'Cats record to 18-4. Sometime today it should become known whether or not that record is good enough to garner an NCAA tourney bid. Of the two spots available for Eastern independents, Providence, despite last night's loss, seems assured of one with Penn State and the 'Cats vying for the other.

Washington Tough

Leading the Villanova surge last night was Jim Washington. The 6-7 All-American burned the nets for 21 points while hauling down 17 rebounds. Washington also did a fine defensive job on the Friar' Dexter Westbrook, holding the highly regarded sophomore to 13 points.

Bill Melchionni turned in another standout performance with 21 points and 6 assists, while triggering everal Villanova fast breaks with key steals.

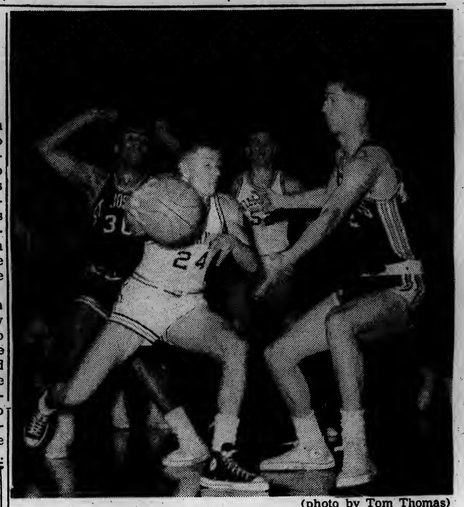
Eric Erickson and Bill Soens also came up with their normal solid showings. Erickson, playing his uual hutling game hit for 11 points, grabbed off 6 rebounds and sparkled defensively. Soens put 10 points in the scoring column along with 10 rebounds and assisted Washington on defene under the boards.

George Leftwich, held to 1 point against St. Joe's, tallied 6.

Sophomore Jimmy Walker, the Friars leading scorer for the season notched 00 points while Bill Blair and Jim Benedict added 10 and 10 respectively. Mike Riordon with 13 and Jim Ahern rounded out the Providence scoring.

The Friars loss was their first in twenty games. The lat team to defeat them wa also Villanova, last year in the first round of the NCAA Tournament at the Palestra.

The 'Cats next contest comes Saturday night when they tangle with rugged Memphis State at the Palestra followed by a trip to Seton Hall on March 3. The Kraftmen end their regular season on March 6 in Milwaukee where they play Marquette.



Intramurals Near Basketball Finish; Softball Coming

By Frank Miller

The Intramural Hoop season has just a little less than two weeks remaining before its closing contests March 8. The two top teams in each league at this time will be eligible for championship laurels. The playoffs will begin March 15. The winners in last year's competition were the "Gunners", while the "Rejects" placed second in the eighty-six team loop.

With the upcoming conclusion to the basketball campaign many people's thoughts are turning to softball. Entry blanks for the softball leagues may be picked up at the Intramurals office until March 18. The season itself will begin March 24, and no teams will be allowed to compete unless their rosters are handed in before the eighteenth.

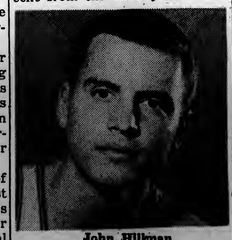
V.U. FACES MEMPHIS STATE



By Bob McIntyre

Villanova will host Memphis State University of its last regular scheduled Palestra game of the current season on Saturday night at 7:30

To date Memphis State, under Coach Dean Ehlers, is sporting their worst record in 11 years 9-11. They have three games left on their schedule, Xavier on Thursday, Villanova on Saturday and Duquesne at home for their last game.

The Blue and Gray Tigers of Memphis, Tennessee have lost three men from last year's squad, including their top scorer Bob Neumann and floor general George Kirk.

However, returning from last year are John Hillman and B. G. Petty who have formed the ucleus of this year's team. John Hillman, a 6-6, 190 lb. senior is State's leading scorer (20 6) and also their leading rebounder. He is averaging close to a 50 per cent mark and is hitting 87 per cent from the charity line.

John Hillman

Taking over as floor general is In his last six games, he has B. G. Petty, a 6-2, 155 lb. junior. In his last sir games, he has averaged near twenty points, 60 per cent from the field, and has played consistent ball throughout the season.

Holding backcourt honors with Petty is a 6-0 170 lb. senior, Tim Morgan. Morgan was last year's third best scorer and is now just behind Hillman.

Jamie McMahan is a 6-8, 215 lb. senior, who ranks next to Hillman as a sound rebounder. He averages 11 points a game.

Craig Alexander is a 6-5, 190 lb, sophomore. This rookie had an outstanding Freshmen season, establishing eleven new frosh records, including a 22.5 scoring average and 42 points in one game. He is very tough around the basket, and is averaging over eight points a game as a starter.

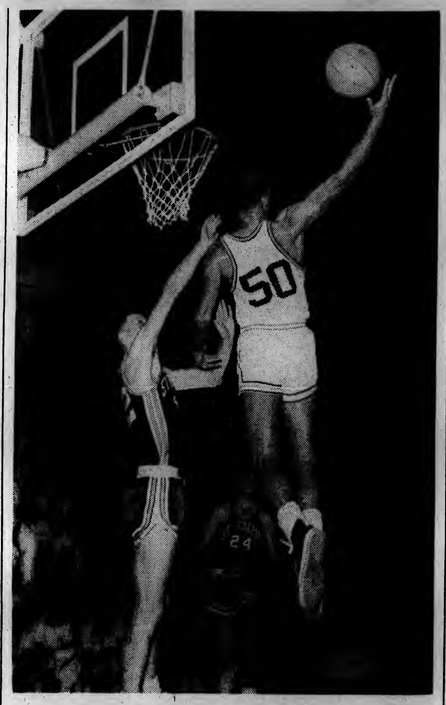
The Tigers play a man-to-man and zone defense, and on offense Coach Ehlers had his club run thruogh numerous offensive patterns. Overall, the team could be ranked as average, with Hillman leading the team. The 'Cats should have little trouble with the men from Tennessee.

'CATS FALL

By Steve Freind

Shrugging off an early 10 point deficit, St. Joseph's pressure-proof Hawks continued their climb to national supremacy Saturday night with a hard earned 69-61 victory over Villanova before a screaming Palestra crowd of 9200. The triumph was win number 23 for the Hawks and lifted Jack Ramsay's scrappers atop the Big Five heap with a 3-0 slate. A victory over defending champion LaSalle on Friday night will give the Hawks their first outright City Series crown in five years.

For awhile it appeared that the Hawks would be blown out of the Palestra as Villanova, playing a man-to-man defense in a surprise move, raced to a 10-0 lead. Ramsay called time to readjust and from then on it was a dogfight. Led by Cliff Anderson, who turned in a spectacular 36 point, 24 rebound performance, and ball-handling wizard Matt Guokas, the Hawks clawed their way to a tie at 15 and went on to take a 30-26 halftime lead.



After the intermission, which was prolonged due to a bomb scare, the 'Cats pulled even and stayed close until Jim Washington fouled out with ten minutes remaining. Even after Washington left, the 'Cats hung on, but when Bill Soens joined Washington on the bench via personals, the handwriting was on the wall. Guokas kept feeding, Anderson kept scoring and the Hawks won going away.

Erickson Shines

Top performance for the 'Cats was turned in by Eric Erickson. The fighting senior hit his career scoring high with a 19 point output while displaying his usual all-around hustle.

Matching Erickson in the scoring department was Bill Melchionni. Melchionni did not have one of his better shooting nights (6-18) but constantly kept St. Joe's off balance with his ball hawking. Though hampered by fouls, Washington and Soens supplied rugged work off the boards, each hauling down 11 rebounds.

For the Hawks, almost the whole story was Anderson and Guokas. The cat-like Anderson sparkled under the offensive boards, baffling the 'Cats with his taps and rebounds. When he didn't score he got fouled and the 6-4 sophomore connected on 16 of 21 attempt from the charity line.

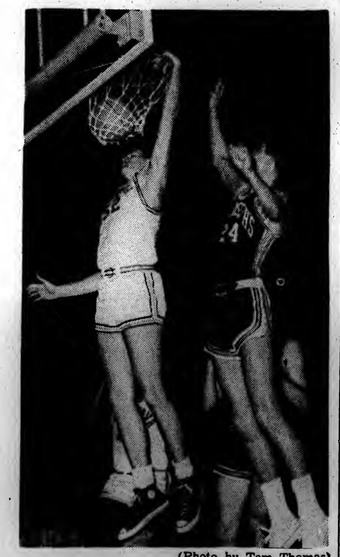
Jumping Jim Washington hooks in a two pointer despite the defensive efforts of Marty Ford during the 'Cats clash with St. Joe's last Saturday. Washington's basket wasn't enough as Hawks shaded Villanova 69-61.

A Study In Desire

By Rusty Miller

Basketball, like any other sport, exhibits players of varying degrees of ability. The limelight usually falls on the superstar, the man (to use a time-worn phrase) of outstanding natural ability, Bill Bradley, Wayne Estes, Jim Washington. Far less is ever written or said about the steady performer who has earned his position through hard work. A common classroom comparison is that between the extremely bright student who requires little study time and the average boy who has to work hard for his marks.

Good Marks



Eric (is here) Erickson works hard for his marks. He has an 11.6 (ppg) in Scoring and a 5.4 in Rebounding. In a tough test in Scoring last Saturday he pulled a 19, his career high in that subject. Since the teacher, Mr. Kraft, marks on a curve, Eric got an "A+" in the test.

Eric also rates an "A" in many other categories. He is above all a hustler, giving a full 40 minutes of basketball every game. After the games, more than any other member of the team, he is physically spent. He usually just sits on the bench in the locker room trying to regain enough energy to shower.

During a game Eric is most effective in his drive from the right side of the key. Against a bigger man (Eric is 6-4) he is quite often forced to shoot off balance and misses but always picks

Bonner Grad

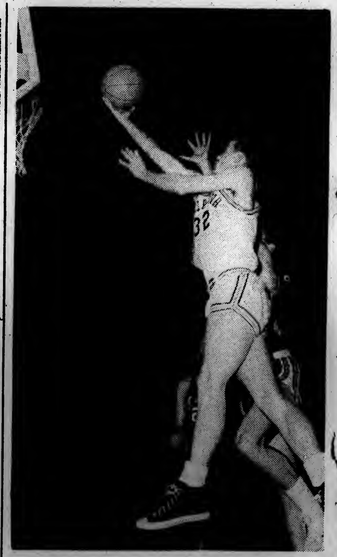
Like so many other Villanova athletes Eric played high school ball for Monsiegnor Bonner High. In his first varsity year at V.U. due to the loss of George Leftwich for the season, he started—at guard. Last year he worked at both th eforeware and guard positions. This year the shuffleboard champ from Upper Darby is shooting 40% from the field and 65.9% from the line and has been a key man in the Wildcat's 18-4 record.

(Photo by Tom Thomas)

Bill Soens has just stuffed ball through the hoop for two points as St. Joe star Matt Guoka arrive too late to halt him. Gukas was on time enough, however, as Hawks snapped Villanova's seven win streak, 69-61.

Freindly Foolishness

The Cat Lives On



By Steve Freind

It's hard to lose the big one. The effect doesn't wear off two hours after the game. The memory keeps popping up, refusing to die. Last Saturday night was the Boston College game of the basketball season. This was the big one, the one that could make the season.

Like the BC battle, it was a rough one to lose, but like that November afternoon, the 'Cats could be proud. They played their hearts out against a great team, possibly the best in the nation. A normal team might have folded when their two big men fouled out but Kraft's fighters refused to quit. The Hawks knew they were in a battle all the way.

The brightest light for the 'Cats was Eric Erickson. In one of his typical gut displays, Eric hit his career scoring high and kept his boys in the game until the end. It was fitting that Erickson should play his best game against the Hawks. Though rarely receiving the headlines, the viking from Upper Darby has turned in a career that everyone has to admire. Ths is a man with limited ability but unlimited desire. Villanova has a rare one in Eric Erickson.

For the Hawks Anderson, of course was sensational, but the class of the court was Matt Guokas. Without Guokas, the Hawks are only a mediocre team. With him, they are valid contenders for the national championship. He can do anything with a basketball, but he has something special—something reserved for the greats. Like Wally Jones, Guokas has a rare attitude, toward the game, a thirst for victory, a singleness of purpose in achieving it. Like Jones, his expression never changes whether the Hawks are up by 20 or down by 10. His poise give his teammates confidence as Jones did for three years at Villanova, and like Jones he is able to inspire his boys to play over their heads. Of such stuff are champions made. They come along very seldom.

Eric is here. Villanova star Eric Erickson drives in for a layup in last Saturday's action at the Palestra. Erickson enjoyed his career scoring high but the 'Cats fell to surging Hawks.

Philadelphia Youth Orchestra To Perform In Field House

By Tom Sproul

The Youth Orchestra of Greater Philadelphia will appear in the Villanova Field House on March 12 at 8 p.m. in conjunction with the Villanova Concert Series.

The Orchestra was born just 20 years ago when a few youngsters sought an outlet for their musical talents. Over these 20 years hundreds of names have appeared on the roster, many going on to further careers in music.

Today the Youth Orchestra combines the talents of 85 of the area's most gifted and dedicated youths to provide Philadelphia with a skillfull presentation of the highest calibre of music.

Under the dynamic leadership of Joseph Primavera, the Orchestra has received the approval and praise of the top Philadelphia critics. A well-known music critic of one of Philadelphia's leading newspaper recognized the Orchestra's wide variety of musical talents in his review of the Youth Orchestra's Academy of Music Concert in April of 1959.

Gifted Youths

He said, ". . . In a city with the musical resources of Philadelphia, tone and technique in any orchestra that essays public concerts are taken for granted. So it is with no surprise that these youngsters, ranging in age from 14 to 21, play with an enviable awareness."

However, their fame is not limited to this city alone for they rank at the top in the field of youth orchestras across the nation.

Primavera is acknowledged as one of the country's younger frontline conductors. Under his direction the Orchestra has performed brilliantly such difficult scores as Tchaikovsky's "Ballet Music" from The Sleeping Beauty, "Poevetzian Dances" from Borodin's Prince Igor and has world premiered Gesensway's Jewish Suite.

Red Cross Blood Drive To Run March 10, 11 With Chairman Freind

By Bob Dougherty

The Red Cross will conduct its annual blood drive March 10 and 11. It will be conducted in Alumni Hall Gym from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Red Cross workers were in Dougherty Hall on February 24 and 25 to sign up donors. The students are urged to donate. They can do so by contacting Steve Freind, Red Cross Blood Drive chairman, in the Villanovan office on the second floor of Dougherty Hall.

If they can get 300 Villanova students or faculty members to contribute a pint each, there will be complete coverage for a year. There will be no charge for blood if needed, and it will cover the entire student and faculty body. Last year, unfortunately, the drive fell short of its goal.

The requirements are few. One must be between the ages of 18 and 59 and must weigh at least 110 pounds. Also, one may eat at his regular mealtime, however if his mealtime is within four hours of the time he is to contribute, he should avoid fatty foods.

Permission slips will be sent to parents of volunteers who are under 21.

Members of the NROTC will be given credit for company competition for contributions.

Members of the faculty are also urged to donate blood. In the past, faculty response has been extremely disappointing. It is of special note that members of the faculty receive the benefit of blood coverage if the University achieves its quota.

ICG Plans Harrisburg Trip; Burke Announces Final Plans

by Tom Dabney

The Intercollegiate Conference on Government at Villanova under the direction of Frank Burke, has announced that it is in the final stages of planning for the annual Harrisburg trip. Burke enlarged on the preparations for this event.

The outlines for the final plans were laid at the executive meeting held at the Pennsylvania Military College on February 9. At this time it ratified the preliminary plans as well as the final plans for the Harrisburg convention scheduled for the state capital April 2 and 3. The theme of this year's meeting will be the reproduction of a model state legislature in all its facets and operations.

Theme

This theme is pursuant to the organization's purpose — to familarize college students with the intricate workings of their state governments as a group. Along these lines, the various member delegations participate by working on a project that is drawn up at the previous year's meeting. The delegations are divided into different geographical areas in which they function as a group during the year to complete the project prior to the annual convention.

Villanova is a member of the Southeastern division with eight other area schools. Frank Burke, of Villanova, is the executive vice-president for the Southeastern division. The executive meeting of February 9, set up dates for the members of the southeast division to meet and discuss various preliminary procedures.

A lecture was held at Rosemont on Wednesday, February 17 to instruct members of the various school delegations in parliamentary procedure. This is done so that the members will be able to enter into legislative debate at Harrisburg.

Immaculata

Immaculata College will host an all-day meeting on March 13 to discuss various pieces of legislation to be submitted by the Southeastern delegation. These bills will be submitted to various committees that will be set up at that time to discuss, research and formulate the bills into legislative language and format.

The final stage will be the actual meeting of the whole ICG. This meeting will delegate the various representatives to sit in different administrative seats of the state government. During the three-day meeting, most of the regular work of the state government will be suspended to allow the conference to perform.

During the three days all of the bills submitted by delegations will be discussed and considered for passage by the conference meeting as a Committee of the World on the final day. On the last day, elections of new state officers will be held as well as setting up of the coming year's project.

For those interested Burke mentioned that meetings are held every Thursday at 10:30 a.m. in 204 Vasey Hall. Membership is open to anyone.

Conservative Club Reorganizes With Moderator Stepelevich

By Sam Cuccinota

The Villanova Conservative Club is reorganizing under a new moderator, Dr. Stepelevich of the Philosophy Department, after a short period of inactivity following the November elections. However, the moderator and president John Lawrence, '66 are optimistic for the future of the Club.

Dr. Stepelevich has just finished a teaching tenure at Regis College, Mass., where he also moderated another conservative group. He intends to increase interest and membership in the club from the present 20 members to over 100 members by next year.

The monthly publication of the Conservative Club, the Libertas, edited by Joseph Raganese, '66, is scheduled for publication in two weeks, and will be available to the student body. Among the features of the conservative newspaper will be an article concerning theory and philosophy by Mr. Peter Kreeft from our Philosophy Department.

The purpose of the club as the newspaper Libertas reflects is to promote an understanding of conservative philosophy, individual freedom and rights, free market economy and the evils of communism. This is done with the intention to keep the Villanova student well informed.

The Villanova administration presently is considering a bid by the Intercollegiate Society of Individualists' for a national seminar to be held here. The ISI is a national organization for conservative clubs, in which Villanova is represented.

Belle Masque To Present Pinter's 'Birthday Party'

The Belle Masque Society of Villanova University will present its production of Harold Pinter's The Birthday Party at the Villanoxa Playbox on Friday evening, March 12 at 8:30 p.m. The production will run for three nights until March 14.

Pinter, a 35 year old British playwright, currently has two plays running in New York at the Writers and Actor's Stage. They are The Room and A Slight Headache. In The Birthday Party, Pinter has updated Arsenic and Old Lace to make a gripping comedy-mystery on a contemporary situation. Here the mystery becomes not "who done it" but "what did they do?"

For this, Pinter has built his play around the hints and suggestions of today's anxiety. The liberal comic element comes from a delightful set of characters Pinter has captured in the dialogue which he is so adept at catching from life.

The Birthday Party was originally performed at the Arts Theatre in Cambridge, London in 1958. It achieved a brilliant success in 1959 by the Tavistock Players at the Tower Theatre in Canonbury, London. The only performance of the play in the United States was very successfully staged by the Actor's Workshop in San Francisco in 1960. This production at the Playbox will be the first East Coast presentation of the play.

In the leading roles are Victoria Lee Blunt of Narberth, Vic Ferrante and Greg Tigani from Villanova University. Also in the cast is Joe Linsalata and Jerry Bober from Villanova University, and Ellen Fitzpatrick from Rosemont College.

The play is directed by Dr. Jackson G. Barry from the Villanova University Graduate Theatre Department. In the past, Dr. Barry has organized and directed the experimental theatre at DeCordova Museum in Lincoln, Mass. He has also been the managing director of The Stage Workshop in New York City and on the staff of The Circle Square Theatre in Greenwich Village.

Dean Reuschlein Addresses Juniors On Law School Today

By Bob Elschner

Harold Gill Reuschlein, dean of the Villanova Law School, will discuss, "Today's Law School — Its Demands and Its Rewards," at the first lecture of the Spring semester of the Practical Lecture Series sponsored by the Junior Class.

Dean Reuschlein received his LL.B from Yale University, JSD from Cornell University and LL.D from Domincan College. He was appointed dean of Villanova Law School when it was founded in 1953. Last year the dean was named a Papal Knight, one of the highest honors possible for a Catholic layman, by Pope Paul VI.

The lecture will be held this afternoon in the East lounge of Doughtery Hall at 4:30 p.m. All those interested in a legal career should attend. A question and answer period will follow the Dean's talk.

Jim Griffin, chairman of the Practical Lecture Series, announced that other lectures will include a talk by a Mr. X from the Acoholles Anonymous on Alcoholism. Another lecture will be given by the American Cancer Society." Dates for these lectures will be announced later.

'Tribute To T. S. Eliot' Heads March Calendar For Literary Society

"A Tribute to T.S. Eliot" is the title of the Villanova Literary Society's symposium, scheduled for Thursday evening at 7:30 p.m. in 204 Vasey Hall. . . .

A panel discussion is planned along with dramatic readings of Eliot's plays — excerpts from The Cocktail Party and Murder in The Cathedral. Members of the Belle Masque Drama Society will give the readings and members of the Literary Society will talk about Eliot's poetry.

A limited number of copies of The Waste Land and Other Poems will be distributed at the meeting. These paperback editions of Eliot's poems were on reserve in the University library so that students could read the book and follow the discussion.

Next event on the society calendar is a student-faculty panel discussion of the Roman Catholic Index on April 8. The relevancy and influence of the Index will be charted by the participants.

A prominent speaker may also grace the society's calendar in the Spring. A faculty lecture on Shakespeare is also planned for a 10:30 a.m. activities period in the Spring.

All students and faculty are invited to attend the society's meetings.

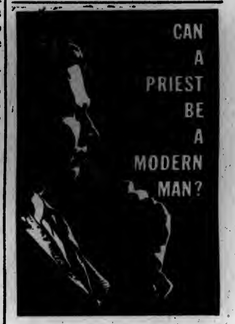
Annual Shamokinaki Affair Set For Evening Of March 26



Stephen F. Friend, general chairman, has announced that the annual Shamokinaki Dance will be held this year on the evening of March 26.

The entire proceeds of this affair are to be sent to the Augustinian Missions in Japan. Last year, Villanova was able to send $6000 to the Fathers, which was gratefully received and put to good use among the Japanese people.

The Augustinians currently have four Japanese missions, located in Nagasaki, Hatano, Fukuoka, and Nagoya. The Nagasaki parish, Mother of Consolation, is situated one mile from the center of the Atomic Bomb devastation.

Most of the amount raised for the missions is not realized from the dance itself. Rather, the bulk of the aid sent to the Fathers comes from the money paid by patrons who place ads in the dance program.

Friend urges that anyone interested in contributing, via an ad, should procure an order blank — determining what size ad he wishes — and mail this along with an appropriate check to either the Reverend George F. Riley OSA or Shamokinaki at Villanova University.

The Continuing Paradox

Recently, at a meeting of the Student Government Association, what might be called the perpetual paradox, was again brought to the fore. The paradox made its appearance in the guise of two motions to the SGA. One dealt with a recommendation to the Administration that it revamp its policy allowing students course and section change "for only a limited number of reasons."

The other motion resquested the SGA to "affirm and approve its current policy regarding preferential seating of the Basketball Club at all home basketball games." The former motion was passed by a vote and a half margin, while the latter was defeated. The Paradox is not in the motions themselves, but in the continuing tradition of misconstrued values of the SGA.

The SGA prides itself in theoretically being formed for the purpose of providing a means whereby the students may, in unity, effectively participated "in the control of those functions of the University which directly affect their own . . . intellectual and social . . . welfare." And yet we question whether they fulfill this practice. We are inclined to say from all observations that this is not necessrily true.

The gap between practice and theory seems to echo back "and never the twain shall meet." At the above-mentioned meeting, the SGA spent quite a lot of wasted time discussing the preferential seating question. The pros and cons were heatedly tossed about for almost a full half-hour and then climatically defeated.

Paradoxically, however, only a miserly five minutes was devoted to debate of a very prevalent and important problem among students concerning their course and section changes.

It appears that the members of the SGA should revaluate what their true purpose is. At present many of them act as if the SGA meetings are a forum for rhetorical excersise instead of dealing with the problems that the students show the "greatest concern about."

The Association members should keep their ears more attuned to the opinons and feelings of their constituents. They must remember that they are the official sounding post of the student body to the Administration.

The Administration can and will act, as a responsible administrative body, only on those things in which there is an aggregate of student opinion; anything less would not be a true reflection of a problem.

To act as an effective governmental organization, it is important that the SGA consider all motions fully, devoting the time for each motion according to their relative importance.

In this case the more important motion was the one concerning education and intellectual pursuit and not that of preferential seating. The Association members, as students, should already be aware of this, since education is their primary reason for being here.

Therefore we feel that this paradox has continued long enough, and should be remedied quickly. It is now time to stop shirking true responsibility and begin to assume it, otherwise the meaning of the Student Government Association will become somewhat of a hilarious farce.

The Brennan Report

Disability Solution

by Jim Brennan

The United States Senate, on September 29, 1964, agreed on a approach to the problem of determining when a President is disabled and should turn over his duties, at least temporarily, to the Vice-President.

Here are the provisions of the proposed constitutional amendment, Senate Joint Resolution 139, approved by a vote of 65-0:

"Sec. 1. In case of the removal of the President from office or of his death or resignation, the Vice-President shall become President.

Sec. 2. Whenever there is a vacancy in the office of the Vice-President, the President shall nominate a Vice-President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress.

Sec. 3. If the President declares in writing that he is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, such powers and duties shall be discharged by the Vice-President.

Sec. 4. If the President does not so declare, and the Vice-President with the written concurrence of a majority of the heads of the executive body as or any other body as Congress may by laws provide, transmits to the Congress his written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice-President shall immediately assume the powers and duties of the office as Acting President.

Sec. 5. Whenever the President transmits to the Congress his written declaration that no inability exists, he shall resume the powers and duties of his office unless the Vice-President, with the written concurrence of a majority of the heads of the executive departments or such other body as Congress determines, gives his written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office. Thereupon Congress shall immediately decide the issue. If the Congress determines by two-thirds vote of both Houses that President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of the office, the Vice-President shall continue to discharge the same as Acting President; other wise the President shall resume the powers and duties of his office.

Though this resolution proposed by Birch Bayh (D. Ind.) has not been acted upon by the House because it adjourned for election year campaigning, it probably will serve as the basis for action by the present Congress.

Those in favor of this resolution state that Section one would affirm the historical precedent by which a Vice-President succeeds to the office of President upon the death of President. Section three would give constitutional sanction to the terms of the informal agreement between the President and Vice-President and would clearly spell out that it is not the "office" that devolves upon the Vice-President but only the "powers and duties" of that office. Section four would insure that the nation would have a Chief Executive able to meet any contingency in the event a President refuses to declare himself unable to discharge his duties, or was physically or mentally unable to do so. The proposed amendment, spelling out with specific details a method for deciding disability, will probably be more acceptable to the state legislatures than a provision giving Congress the power to adopt and readopt methods as it sees fit, for determining disability.

Critics of the resolution believe that the specificity of the proposed amendment would invite prolonged discussion in the state legislatures, and thus delay or defeat ratification. Any amendment passed should give Congress only a general power to deal with the question of disability. There is no basis for assuming that a general power granted to Congress to determine cases of disability would be abused, for Congress has always had the power to remove the President by impeachment.

N.Y. And Birth Control

By Tom Bruderle

Most advocates of birth control would probably agree that its purpose may be found in its very name — the control or limitation of births. Dispensing with the arguement of it morality, birth control advice and information is almost exclusively designed for married couples who, for one reason or another, wish to limit the number of children they have.

It might strike one as strange that the words "almost exclusively" have to be used above. They become necessary, however, thanks to New York State's program for unmarried welfare recepients.

New York is one of several states which permits and encourages the dessimination of birth cotnrol information. Heretofore all aid had been made available to married women only but this recent proposal would permit the state's welfare agencies to refer " to a duly licensed physician any person 18 years or older who requests family planning service and facilities."

The moral aspect of birth control can be argued until the Last Judgment but such is not the case here, nor is it to discuss the state's entire program in light of a "recently discovered" state law which considers the release of such information a misdemeanor.

Whereas birth control is presently made available to the married, it would be made available to all in order to keep the unwed mother off the state's relief rolls. A noble thought, and perhaps the problem may appear to be solved.

Apprantly unknown to officials in Albany, there is another problem which underlies that of the unwed mother — promiscuity. The state's solution would leave virtually untouched this basis of the entire illegitmacy problem and, in fact, would encourage her by providing information to prevent an unwanted child.

With or without the state's advice, the female remain promiscuous solving absolutely nothing and encouraging worse.

Sounds Of Note

By Bill McCloskey

The Beach Boys Today, the latest album by the group that filled Convention Hall went on sale Monday. Convention Hall may well be filled again as Hy Lit of WIBG continues to sign the top talent in England and the colonies. May 1 is the next concert. On the bill are: the Rolling Stones, the Four Seasons, Jan & Dean, Jay & the Americans, the Ronnetts and the Righteous Brothers. It should be a real blast for those interested in Rock 'n Roll.

Hystie O'Rooney McVautie O'Zoot also is working on plans for a television show this summer while Jerry Blavit is said to be set for a show on Channel 10. Speaking of television and such . . . Les Crane's departure from the Philadelphia scene is really a shame although there were nights when he couldn't hold a candle to Johnny Carson, he injected a bit of controversy into television, something that is sorely needed on the housewife's medium.

KYW and WRCV are a bit closer to switching Cleveland and Philadelphia facilities. The FCC approved the move a little over a week ago and now the principles are waiting for RKO General to make their move. They have a bid in to trade for WRCV and were reportedly reluctant to release NBC from the deal.

The trade is being swept with a manufacturer's plan to make all records 33 RPM and thereby allow further refinement in 33 components. This would be a gradual change to allow manufacturers to re-tool and consumers to become accustomed to the inception.

An' All That Jazz

by Barry Bornstein

The Showboat Lounge . . . The Showboat . . . The "Boat" . . . More than likely you didn't quite make it on the first; sort of caught on with the second, and finally tuned in on the third. Because, in Philly, if you ever wanted the jazz sound, it was down to the "Boat".

Well friends, we're being upstaged—because Herbit Spivak is going big time now and the "Boat" is now the Showboat Theatre (no, I didn't forget the 'e"—it's t-h-e-a-t-r, with a touch of the British. Besides the name—the place has changed. And over the two-month closing period they've added close to a hundred seats, (that means they'll fit in at least 200 more), and rescued the stage from amidst the hardware (whiskey bottles) . . .

The grand opening is March 1—and grand is the word—for Woody Herman and his swinging herd will be the first to test the theatr's new walls. He'll be followed up by the likes of Mose Allison.

P.S. . . . for those of you who had feared the worst . . . Be assured that Herbie Spivak's famed anatomical art-works have been retained . . .

First it was the insurance premium. Then came the day when the radiator exploded. And so it goes that, something always seems to come in between that FM-car radio that Sear's quotes at about 50 of the largest coins and us. So, when forced, every now and then, we must listen to "that station" to break the expressway monotony. And via that circuitous path, we are led to this week's winner of The Hot Horn Award: Bill Wright. For no one blows his own horn louder than Bill Wright, (in fact it's been said that the only thing wrong with WIBG, besides the music, is Bill Wright). However, the single even that merits his nomination is the recent release of his record entitled "The Boy That I Call Son" and his multiple playing of that tragic farce. Seems that 'IBG pushes the record on their audience at least twice an hour—increasing their spinster audience 50%. Looking into the future, we can expect folksy and kidly old Bill to issue an album entitled "One Man's Family . . .

A Serious Note: To be able to blow one's horn is one of the basic assumptions of a free and democratic society such as ours. If one doesn't like the sound, then, he has the right to change the channel or to turn it off, but not to eradicate the hornblower. On Sunday, February 21, 1965, a vibrant hornblower was eradicated. Yes, maybe he did blow some foul, flat, and foreign notes. But that was his right. Haven't our people learned anything from November 23, 1963?

An exciting new album found its way into our grasp last week—"Tonight"—Clark Terry and Bob Brookmeyer (mainstream). "Blend" is the key word in this album, featuring that man for all seasons, Clark Terry on fleugelhorn and Bob Brookmeyer on valve-trombone. And this meeting of the brass offers innovations galore. The best track is "Some time ago".

An Open Letter

By Bill Clark

To The Firestone Rubber Company,

Dear Sirs:

It has been brought to my attention that you are planning to open a plant in Communist Rumania. As a capitalist, and with the fact in mind that I will someday have to risk my life to defend the freedom and security of the United States against Communist Imperialism, I ask you to reconsider your action.

I have no intention of asking you to act for the "public good" or for the "national interest." I recognize neither. But I am going to request that you act in your own national self-interest. Yes, I am asking you to commit a very selfish act.

I am asking you to survive. Do not, I repeat, do not hand over to your greatest enemy, International Communism, the means with which to destroy you. Do not provide the Communists with the economic aid they need to carry out their plans to subvert and enslave what remains of the capitalist world.

Do not be the willing victim of your murderers. For your own sake, your own selfish interests refuse to deal in any shape, way, of form with these looters. Whatever profits you might make in the short run, will be of no value to you as you rot away in a shallow grave, or worse yet, in a Red concentration camp.

I am aware of the fact that our State Department approves of this deal. All the more reason to refuse. Our State Department also approved of the sale of scrap metal to Japan prior to World War II.. American boys paid for that approval, many with their lives.

The forces of Communism are advancing every day. They are moving forward in Laos, in Vietnam, in the Congo. They have scored outstanding successes in Cuba, Zanzibar, Berlin and Indonesia. They have destroyed American libraries abroad and have initiated terrorism within our very own shores.

I repeat my earlier warning. Do not provide your enemies with the means they need to destroy you. Do not give them any form of economic assistance. Do not deal in any manner with the forces of International Communism.

Do not commit suicide.

If the managers of Firestone Rubber are the men I think they are. If they have the intelligence I hope they have. And if they are courageous enough to act in their own self-interest — this deal will not go through. Gentlemen. The final decision lies in your hands.

The Beatles Play Karl Marx?

By Steve Morrison

To most of us, the fact that an infant's heart beats at the rate of eighty-two beats per minute presents no serious threat to our nation's security. The fact that the heart of an older person beats slightly faster than eighty-two beats per minute is somewhat interesting, yet still falls a little short of arousing any fears of a Communist takeover in the U.S.

In some of us, however, these facts, along with a little imagination, can arouse a considerable amount of fear of Communist strategy. This latter possibility is true in the case of the Rev. David Noebel.

In an article which appeared in the February 15, 1965, Newsweek, (p. 89A) Rev. Noebel's fears were brought into the open for all of us to see. He believes that when a musical rhythm is synchronized with the heartbeat of a child, unusual things happen to the child's mind. Noebel thinks that a state of hypnosis will result from this musical union, enabling an audience to be put under the control of the musical source. Reverend Noebel also believes (this is the pun) that the Beatles may be used as intruments of the Communists in order to "mass hypnotize" the American youth.
